BANK LOAN FOR PORT--The Central African Development Bank has granted a 500 million CFA franc loan to the National Port Authority. The loan will be used to set up a warehouse at the Douala Port for land-locked Central African countries and falls within the planned extension of the Douala Port. The loan carries a 7.5 percent interest rate per year and is repayable in 15 years. The loan agreement was signed today between the minister of transport, Albert Nkome, on behalf of the National Port Authority and the managing director of the Central African Development Bank, Enock Joal Makou. STUDENT ORGANIZATION URGES AID--New initiatives and actions to provide concrete material assistance to the liberation struggle in Southern Africa have been adopted by the East, Central and Southern African students organizations consultative meeting which started last Monday, was officially closed by the prime minister, Mr Cleopa Msuya. The final communique endorsed by the meeting said African students and youth would undertake new initiatives and actions to provide assistance, including school materials to SWAPO of Namibia and ANC of South Africa. The communique further called for the rendering of the moral and material assistance to the frontline states to enable them to repel the constant attacks from the racist South African forces. The meeting, which condemned the U.S. military bases in Africa, agreed that joint action against the bases be undertaken and the struggle to make Africa a nuclear-free zone be intensified. FOREIGN MINISTER WARNS U.S. ABOUT OIL WEAPON

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 22 Sep 81 p 22

[Text] Rome, September 19--Angolan Foreign Minister Paulo Jorge warned here Friday that his country would not hesitate to use its oil wealth as a weapon if the United States threatened Angola's territorial integrity.

The U.S. oil company Gulf Petroleum extracts large amounts of oil from Angola's Cabinda enclave.

He told a press conference here after meeting earlier with Italian President Sandro Pertini, Premier Giovanni Spadolini, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and top officials of the state oil company ENI, that Angola was "seriously worried" about the rapprochement between Washington and Pretoria, which he said could lead to a plan to destabilise Angola.

"If the U.S. wants to go that far, we will do our best to reply appropriately," he said.

M. Jorge said greater economic and technological aid for Angola, especially in the petroleum and petrochemical fields, had been discussed during his visits to Italy and before that to West Germany. A large contract had been drawn up with ENI.

Cuban "Nightmares"

On U.S. calls for Cuban troops to withdraw from Angola, Mr Jorge said that if the Americans "have nightmares because of the Cubans, it's not our fault."

The U.S. position did not make sense, he said. According to Washington, the presence of South African troops in Namibia was legal, while the Cuban presence in Angola was illegal.

He reiterated that the Cubans were helping Angola to build a regular army and develop the country's economic, social and health facilities. He denied there were any East German troops in Angola and added that at the recent meeting in Lagos of the Southern African "front-line" states military aid to Angola had been discussed. (A.F.P.)

OFFICIAL INTERVIEWED ON REFUGEE SITUATION

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 16 Aug 81 pp 36-37

[Interview with Rodeth Gil, secretary of state for social affairs of Angola, date and place not indicated]

[Text] The People's Republic of Angola is confronted with a serious refugee problem. There are now in Angola about 73,000 refugees from various neighboring countries, namely, Namibia, South Africa and Zaire. Moreover, thousands of Angolan refugees who fled the country during the war against the FNLA and UNITA are now returning.

To provide the necessary food assistance to all the refugees is causing the Angolan officials grave concern. The situation was the topic of an interview granted to JORNAL DE ANGOLA by Rodeth Gil, member of the MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee and secretary of state for social affairs. Following are some excerpts from that interview.

Question: What is the position of the RPA [People's Republic of Angola] regarding the refugee situation in general?

Answer: Our country receives and will continue to receive any individual who seeks asylum in our territory. Hence we have refugees in Angola from the neighboring countries, mainly Namibia and South Africa, which are engaged in a war of liberation against racism and "apartheid." Let us make it clear: our country will always give asylum to anyone who requests it.

Question: What have been the major settlement areas for the returning Angolans? How have they been integrated into the social and economic life of the country?

Answer: The major settlement areas for the Angolan refugees are Cabinda, Zaire, Moxico and Uije provinces. These have also been the major ports of entry. The refugees' social and economic integration has been carried out through the Labor Ministry and other agencies. This integration is slow, however, and in no way meets our expectations. The delay in integrating the returning refugees has fostered certain situations, which our country must deal with, such as the continuing creation of nuclei of unemployment and uncontrolled groups.

The failure to achieve the socioeconomic integration of the refugees has fostered a rural exodus to the large cities. It is obvious that the placement of the refugees demands a joint effort with other ministries, mainly the Labor and Agricultural ministries, among others.

As we have been able to observe, some of these refugees are trained cadres who could make an active contribution to the process of national reconstruction.

Question: Many returned refugees are coming directly to the large urban centers like Luanda, where conditions are often unfavorable, to resume their lives. How is this problem of their social integration being handled?

Answer: On their arrival, the returnees go first to transition camps. These camps have little to offer, but contrary to what had been hoped, and for a variety of reasons, their stay in these camps has been quite lengthy. Most of the people in the transition camps in Luanda are working, but since they are all working in Luanda, there is not enough housing for them.

This problem is not only the responsibility of the Secretariat of State for Social Affairs. All government agencies should be involved in its solution. Meanwhile, it is necessary to place the refugees in productive sectors throughout the country.

When they arrive and opt to remain in Luanda, they are naturally faced with a serious housing problem--and all the other problems follow. Even if they find jobs, they cannot solve this very difficult problem. Although we are constantly concerned with finding employment for returning countrymen, they continue to live, for the most part, in the transition camps. But the Secretariat of State for Social Affairs can only do so much.

Question: What technical and material assistance for the Angolan refugees has come from abroad? What countries and international organizations have contributed most?

Answer: The international organizations providing the most assistance to the Angolan refugees are mainly UNICEF, the HCR [UN High Commission for Refugees] and the WFC [World Food Council]. This aid consists of clothing, food, teaching materials and so on. However, many agencies and countries that assist us send these articles not only for returning Angolans but for refugees from neighboring states who are now in Angola.

The aid mainly comprises donations of such foodstuffs as baby food, soybeans, flour and milk, and articles of clothing. It should be noted that this support often does not meet the needs of the refugees and repatriated Angolans, and we still have to deal with the problem of the people displaced by the war imposed on us by South Africa, so the RPA often has to expend material supplies and food to take care of these difficult situations.

Question: What steps has the Secretariat of State for Social Affairs taken regarding the refugees who are still in neighboring states, to arrange for their return to Angola and their integration in our national development?

Answer: A delegation of the secretariat has visited the Republic of Zaire, where most of the Angolan refugees are located now. In Zaire, we tried to meet with the refugees and talk to them. We had no great difficulties, because all of them expressed a desire to return to Angola. The same is true of the Angolan refugees in the Republic of Zambia.

Their return must be planned and supervised, however. Otherwise we will be unable to meet all the needs that must be taken care of. On the other hand, not all the Angolans have had an opportunity to hear our appeal--only those we reach in our trips to countries where the refugees are located.

Question: There are displaced people living in the jungle because of the unjust war waged against us by the retrograde Pretorian regime on behalf of international imperialism. What has the secretariat been doing to assist them?

Answer. We have developed joint efforts with the party provincial, communal and municipal committees and other government agencies to solve the problem of the displaced people. Their problems merit serious attention.

We have found that it is much easier to work with a displaced person because he has a better understanding of our true circumstances and wants to become engaged in the productive process. The only problem--perhaps the one that concerns us the most--is the health of these people. They are severely malnourished, particularly the children, when they come out of the jungle. Once we overcome this malnutrition, their integration in the prodcutive process is easy.

Question: What aid has the Secretariat of State for Social Affairs provided to refugees of other countries, particularly southern African countries still struggling against South African domination?

Answer: We have always demonstrated our solidarity with peoples struggling against colonialism, imperialism and "apartheid." Here our support has been limited, because it has been restricted to the liberation movements, which also receive support from other progressive countries and international organizations. Therefore, support from the secretariat has consisted mainly of clothing and foodstuffs.

Question: How many refugees from neighboring countries are now receiving aid from the People's Republic of Angola?

Answer: There are now about 73,000 refugees in our country, including 50,000 Namibians, 18,000 Zairians and 5,000 South Africans.

REPRESSING PROTESTS REPORTS DENIED--Luanda, 30 Sep (AFP)--The offical Angolan news agency ANGOP today denied for the second time in less than 1 week reports published in Lisbon that street demonstrations organized in Luanda were severely repressed. Two Lisbon rightwing dailies--O DIA (morning) and A TARDE (afternoon)--published reports allegedly reaching them from the Angolan capital (where they have no correspondent) that tens of demonstrations were kiled or wounded during the demonstrations which took place until last Saturday in Luanda. According to the newspapers, the demonstrators were protesting against the high cost of living, the problems of supplies and privileges enjoyed by SWAPO militants and Cubans. In its denial broadcast today, ANGOP indicated that the reports are blatant lies published by reactionary newspapers which are nostalgic about the colonial era. According to the agency, these newspapers wish to criticize the strong support Angola gives to SWAPO. [Text] [AB302005 Paris AFP in French 1803 GMT 30 Sep 81]

DOS SANTOS TO LIBYA, EUROPE--President Jose Eduardo dos Santos left Luanda this morning for Tripoli on an official and friendly visit to Libya at the invitation of his Libyan counterpart. The Angolan head of state was accompanied on this visit by an important delegation including Alphonso Vanzani Binga, secretary of the Central Committee for Foreign Relations; Paulo Jorge, minister of foreign affairs; Artur Vidal Gomes, minister of agriculture; Bento Ribeiro, minister of industry; and Paulino Pinto Joao Neto, secretary of state for cooperation. President dos Santos was seen off at the airport by members of the political bureau, the Central Committee of the MPLA Workers Party, the government, senior officers of the armed forces and members of the diplomatic corps accredited to our country. After Libya, the president of the republic will also visit some socialist countries in Europe, namely Bulgaria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. REPATRIATION DEMANDED BY USSR--The Moscow government "demands the immediate repatriation of the bodies of the four Soviet citizens killed, as well as of the man captured during the recent South African incursions in southern Angola," the Soviet news agency TASS said yesterday, confirming the murder of Soviet citizens in Cunene. The news published by TASS and widely circulated by international news agencies says that two military specialists providing assistance in Angola and their respective wives were killed by the South African army, which also captured a mechanic of the same nationality. The Soviet news agency, denouncing Pretoria's statements, according to which Soviet military officers are fighting in Angola with the SWAPO guerrilla forces, affirms that "the whole world knows that the Soviets are providing political, diplomatic and military support to Angola." "Our activities in Angola, as in any other country, do not go beyond technical assistance and training of Angolan military personnel," this news agency also writes. The same source adds that Soviet citizens are working in Angola in various fields. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Sep 81 p 1]

KEREKOU STATEMENT UPON RETURN FROM PARIS

AB271317 Cotonou Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Excerpts] President Kerekou returned to Cotonou this afternoon from Paris where he has just paid a 3-day official and working visit. He was welcomed on arrival from the aircraft by the first vice chairman of the permanent committee of the National Revolutionary Assembly, members of the Central Committee of our vanguard party, the People's Revolutionary Party of Benin (PRPB), members of the permanent committee of the National Revolutionary Assembly, members of the National Executive Council, the diplomatic corps and a large crowd of militants of the revolution in Cotonou. In the VIP lounge in Cotonou, President Kerekou spoke to David Goushina about the results of his visit to France.

[Begin Kerekou recording] Drawing lessons from the history of our hardworking and militant people, and on the basis of the experience gained during the period between 1894 to date, and more precisely since 26 October 1972 when we embarked upon our revolutionary process of national liberation, we paid our first official and working visit to Paris, at the invitation of His Excellency Mr Francois Mitterrand, president of the French Republic, from 23 to 25 September 1981. This visit, which was made within a new political context, took place in very good conditions. The keynotes of the visit were austerity and rigor in all our views.

Apart from the historical tie which exists between Benin and France and whose development has seen its ups and downs since we started the revolutionary process on 26 October 1972--as must be expected--we can say today that there are favorable conditions now in France with the advent of the ruling forces of progress led by Francois Mitterrand as the president of the republic. Under these conditions, our party and our revolutionary state decided, on behalf of our people and their democratic and popular revolution, that we should positively honor the friendly invitation by Francois Mitterrand, president of the French Republic. We decided to do so in spite of the nature and consequences of the unresolved quarrel between Benin and France. This is what we mean, understand and interpret objectively by the words austerity and rigor.

In any case, during our visit to Paris we talked at length on Wednesday, 23 September 1981, with Francois Mitterrand who took the initiative of calling for this meeting which we described as historic; after our talks at the Elysee we made a public statement to the press. We gave a run down of our discussion which was held in an atmosphere of frankness. We expressed the need to and affirmed our political desire to solve, as soon as possible, all the difficulties and all the problems connected with the quarrel which, for some time now, has darkened the political relations between Benin and France. It was also decided that we should take all necessary measures, as soon as possible, to prompt dynamic cooperation between our two countries and people. To this effect, several contacts were made at the ministerial level before we left Paris. We expressed to President Francois Mitterrand the high appreciation of our party and our revolutionary state for the courageous and constructive stand of the new French Government concerning the great African matters, particularly those related to the independence of Namibia, the armed aggressions against the frontline states, the self-determination of the Saharan people and the reconstruction of Chad which has been devastated by a long national liberation war followed by a bloody civil war. We also told President Francois Mitterrand of our strong hope that France, under his leadership, will increase its aid to African countries to enable them overcome the numerous economic hardships caused by the international economic crisis. Finally, we also stressed the courageous and constructive stand of the new French Government toward the development of the Third World countries in general and that of Africa in particular, notably during the recent UN conference on the 31 least developed countries.

On the whole, on our return from Paris we can say that we are very confident of the future of the new relations of cooperation between Benin and France and we are convinced that these relations will henceforth be developed on a new and sound basis. Also, during our 5 days in Paris, we visited the headquarters of the UNESCO on Thursday, 24 September 1981, at the invitation of Ahmadu Maktar Mbow, director general of the UNESCO. On behalf of our people, our party and our revolutionary state, we addressed members of the Executive Council who were holding an ordinary session.

Finally, on behalf of all the hardworking Beninese people, we would like to send our sincere and heartfelt thanks to President Francois Mitterrand, to the French Government and to the entire French people for the friendly and warm welcome which was given to the delegation of our party and our revolutionary state throughout our visit in Paris. FRENCH MAP PRINTING, TRANSPORT AGREEMENTS SIGNED

Paris AFRICAN AFP in English 18 Sep 81 p 22

[Text] Bangui, September 17--France and the Central African Republic have agreed here on two new financing arrangements less than three weeks after the Army deposed President David Dacko.

Officials said the arrangements were expected to have considerable bearing on the military regime's stated objective of revitalising the country's lagging economy, which new Head of State General Andre Kolingba has said will be a precondition for handing back power to a civilian government.

One agreement is for 25 million CFA francs (some 80,000 dollars) for printing geographical and geological maps compiled from surveys made by France's Office of Overseas Scientific and Technical Research.

The maps will be a major tool in planning economic development in the key sectors of agriculture, forestry and mineral prospecting, it was stated.

The second agreement it is for 315 million CFA francs (some 1,050,000 dollars) for transport, a major factor in this landlocked country. The main item covered is the restoration of the river pushboat (a tug for barges) Ville de Bangui, used for oil convoys up the Oubangui River to here from Brazzaville in the Congo.

At yesterday's signing ceremony, Centrafrica's Minister for Planning, International Cooperation and Statistics said the ruling Military Committee of National Recovery (CMRN) was "firmly determined to redynamise cooperation with France."

Lieutenant-Colonel Alphonse Kongolo said the change of regime on September 1 had "opened a new era for cooperation, which we wish to see more active than ever."

On Monday, Gen. Kolingba told foreign diplomats that the CMRN had taken up the task of relaunching the economy and "creating conditions favourable for the exercise of real democracy."

The Armed Forces, which took over from President David Dacko a fortnight ago, had no intention of holding on to power or setting up a military dictatorship,

Gen Kolingba said. But he added that the CMRN would only have accomplished its mission when it had set up "the machinery of a healthy economy allowing a decent standard of living."

He assured the diplomats that the Government was determined to respect the wishes of Western creditor countries--Austria, France, Italy, Switzerland, the United States and West Germany--who decided last June that Bangui should pay off its foreign debt of some 200 million dollars in nine years, with a grace period of four years. GOUKOUNI ADVISER GIVES BONGO MESSAGE, COMMENTS

AB282145 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 28 Sep 81

[Excerpts] The president of the republic, His Excellency El Hadj Omar Bongo, this morning received a message from Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei. The message was conveyed by Youssouf Sale Abass, Chad's presidential advisor on diplomatic matters. The Chadian envoy then held lengthy discussions with the head of state in the presence of Marting Bongo, minister of state for foreign affairs and cooperation and Albert Yangari, secretary of state for public relations.

As you are aware, the founder of the renovation is closely watching the economic and political development in Chad, whose people he has always been seeking to reconciliate. Last Saturday evening, that is 48-hours ago, President Bongo, who was holding discussions with the responsible officials of the press, launched an appeal to the international community for the reconstruction of Chad, which has been destroyed by a murderous civil war. The Chadian envoy, who had already come on similar missions to Libreville, refused to disclose the contents of the message from President Goukouni Oueddei. He simply declared on Albert Mbiomo's microphone that the message dealt with the good relations between Libreville and Ndjamena.

[Begin recording] [Youssouf Sale Abass] I have no right to say anything whatsoever. If the presidency of the republic of Gabon wishes to make a communique to the press, then you have to refer to it. I have no mandate to make statements.

[Question] Mr advisor, what are the relations between Libya and your country following President Goukouni's declaration on the issue of the Libyan troops stationed in Chad?

[Answer] On the question, I will not have much to tell you because in his press conference--I think it was on 18 September in Paris--President Goukouni explained his government's stance on the presence of Libyan troops in Chad.

[Question] What is the situation prevailing in the eastern part of the country, particularly fighting has been reported between the government troops and certain rebel troops, a situation likely to cast a shadow over the Sudan-Chad relations? What is the situation exactly?

[Answer] I think that the position of the Chadian Government on this issue was definitely explained in a message it sent to the OAU chairman to explain the situation on our eastern border. In a press conference, President Goukouni brought up the issue again in order to inform international opinion on what was going on at the border.

[Question] President Goukouni has sent a letter to the Security Council without yet filing a complaint. Does this mean that the situation in the eastern region has returned to normal?

[Answer] Yes, it has. The regions which were affected are currently under the control of the Chadian Government and the message to the OAU chairman was only meant to warn against the foreseeable consequences likely to jeopardize the relations between Chad and the countries referred to. So it was intended to provide further information on the external threats facing Chad.

[Question] Mr advisor, do you advocate an African peace-keeping force or the creation of an integrated army in Chad as called for by President Bongo?

[Answer] The position of the Chadian Government was explained in particular at the OAU summit conference. President Goukouni said clearly that Chad must be assisted by all means in setting up an integrated national army, which does not rule out the sending of an African peace-keeping force. Unfortunately, you are aware that the force is long to come. We have not lost hope, and though we are still expecting it, we had rather take care of our own security than let others do it for us. This is quite normal and we henceforth prefer President Bongo's solution which insists on the setting-up of a Chadian national integrated army rather than totally relying on the sending of an African force. We could not indefinitely be protected [words indistinct].

[Question] You have just mentioned that the African peace-keeping force is slow to come. Do you not think that the UN troops should be called in?

[Answer] We leave the settlement of this question with the OAU which committed itself since the Nairobi summit to finding a solution to it. We are waiting. But we will not remain inactive with regard to our integrated national army. On our part, we will try to establish contacts and acquire the means to launch the integrated army whose process has already begun with the setting-up of a unified staff in charge of the proposed army. FRENCH PREPARED TO PROVIDE HUMANITARIAN AID

[Text] Paris, September 18--Visiting Chadian President Goukouni Weddeye conferred here Thursday with French President Francois Mitterrand about French aid to his war-shattered country, which has been heavily dependent on France since it gained independence 21 years ago.

Their meeting, at which French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson and Chadian Interior Minister Mahamat Abba Seid were present, marks effective recognition by France of Mr Goukouni's regime, which won a bloody civil war 10 months ago with the help of Libyan troops.

Both men appeared pleased with the results of their talks but refused to give details.

France's Socialist Government, notably through Aid Minister Jean-Pierre Cot, has said several times it is ready to give Chad unconditional humanitarian aid as well as help to rebuild the capital, Ndjamena, which took the brunt of the war damage.

But because of the continued Libyan military presence France has declined to agree to give military aid to help set up a new integrated National Army. Paris wants to see the Libyans withdraw their troops and a pan-African military force to be set up to take over security in Chad and help build the new Chadian Army.

The Army question is crucial for the Chadians, who fear that the Government might fall apart if the 10,000 or so Libyan troops pull out while the present fighting is still going on in Eastern Chad with the rebel forces of former Defence Minister Hissene Habre. (A.F.P.)

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES MISBEHAVIOR OF TROOPS

AB251635 Brazzaville Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT Sep 81

[Statement issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 24 September in Brazzaville refuting charges of alleged misbehavior of Congolese troops in Chad by the French weekly L'EXPRESS]

[Text] In Lagos, OAU member states meeting under the auspices of that organization to find a solution to problems which were tearing apart the sister country of Chad, at the request of the various Chadian factions, appointed Congo, among other countries, to form a neutral force necessary for the search of peace. Our people, supporting their government which welcomed this choice as an act of confidence in them, sent their soldiers to Ndjamena.

Notwithstanding the difficult period through which the Congolese Treasury was passing, 1 billion CFA francs was released from our treasury to respond to this duty of African solidarity. For 3 months in Ndjamena, the Congolese contingent was waiting for the arrival of other units of the neutral force until the crucial moment of the violation of the Lagos accord by the Chadian factions. In conformity with the discipline preached by the Congolese Labor Party, the Congolese soldiers confined themselves to a camp of the national gendarmerie placed at their disposal by the Transitional National Union Government of Chad and at a time when French forces based in Chad were still there.

Furthermore, the discipline maintained by the Congolese contingent not only evoked admiration from the French military and civilians in Ndjamena but also from their brothers in Chad who hold the best memories of the soldiers, as recalled by his excellency, President Goukouni Oueddei during his last stopover in Brazzaville. During attacks by the rebel forces of Hissein Habre, the Congolese forces, because of their discipline, took the blows of their Chadian brothers in war and even suffered some wounded and one soldier dead without reacting. Respectful of the mission entrusted to them by the OAU, the Congolese contingent in Chad did not roam in the streets of Ndjamena during its stay. How can L'EXPRESS write that the Congolese soldiers had engaged in unkindly behavior during their stay in Ndjamena?

COMMENTARY LAUDS DEMOCRATIZATION PROGRAM

AB301202 Malabo Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] The government, under the leadership of His Excellency Obiang Nguema Mbazogo, is performing an important task, with respect to the basic local entities of our communities, which has ensured the necessary freedom for the development of political life based on legal prerogatives.

The Republic of Equatorial Guinea, which is mainly an agricultural country, lends maximum legal support to the farmers who constitute the main work force, one with its own personality and efficient organization.

The government of the Supreme Military Council, true to our African ways, maintains the authentic traditional spirit of the family system within its vast democratization program which is something no one should change.

The elections organized in all towns throughout the nation, with a view to applying the decree on the localities and councils, are proof of this democratization in action. It is the first step taken by our communities towards democratization. In all towns, the elections took place without incident and at no time was there any discontent on the part of [word indistinct].

With this commentary, the national news media agrees that the people of Equatorial Guinea have accomplished a great deal through this first decisive step toward democracy advocated by the government of the Supreme Military Council.

COMMUNIQUE ON EQUATORIAL GUINEA-GABON MEETING

[Communique issued in Libreville on 28 September following the meeting of the Gabon-Equatorial Guinean Joint Commission on Cooperation in Libreville 22-26 September]

[Text] The joint commission for cooperation between Gabon and Equatorial Guinea, established by an agreement signed on 13 November 1979 in Libreville, has ended its second ordinary session held from 22 to 26 September 1981 in Libreville under the chairmanship of their excellencies Dominique Boungouere, minister of territorial administration and local collectivities of the Republic of Gabon, and Felix Mba Nchama, commissioner of state for the Ministry of Interior of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea.

The Gabonese delegation was composed of: their excellencies Messrs Mbot and Mboumbou, secretaries of state for the Ministry of Education and for Territorial Administration and Collectivities; His Excellency Ambassador Sylvestre Katanga, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation; His Excellency Ambassador Felix Andambe, diplomatic adviser to the president of the Republic at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; His Excellency Ignace Vanet, Gabonese ambassador to Equatorial Guinea; His Excellency Benito Cabenga, assistant secretary general, director of administrative and consular matters in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation; [name indistinct], consul general of Gabon in Bata; Mr Bernardin Aka, assistant secretary general of commercial civil aviation; Jean Bonaventure Essombe, director of press and information in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation; [name indistinct], director of documentation at the Ministry of Territorial Administration and Local Collectivities; Nguema Auguste, director of manpower in the Ministry of Labor; Stanislas Owono, director of posts and telecommunications; and Joseph Ngom, chief of section at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation.

Equatorial Guinea was represented by Celestino Nso Nsi, permanent secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; His Excellency (Falchino Palepale Hino), permanent secretary of the Ministry of Interior; His Excellency Eloi Elongbe, legal adviser to the office of the president of the Supreme Military Council; His Excellency [name indistinct], Equatorial Guinea's ambassador to Cameroon; His Excellency [name indistinct], director for Asia, Africa, the Middle and Far East in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; His Excellency (Policarpo Eduardo Asa), technical director of transport in the Ministry of Public Works, Housing, Urban Affairs and Transport; His Excellency Emilio Ngom Oyem, technical director for telecommunications; His Excellency [name indistinct], director for commerce in the Ministry of Finance and Commerce; His Excellency Enrique Saboka, chief of section in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, [name indistinct], first secretary at the Equatorial Guinean Embassy in Gabon; His Excellency [name indistinct], second secretary of the Equatorial Guinean Embassy in Gabon and [words indistinct].

During their visit, the head of the Equatorial Guinean delegation paid a courtesy call on Martin Bongo, minister of state and minister of foreign affairs and cooperation. He was also received in audience by First Vice Prime Minister Georges Rawiri, to whom he transmitted the personal greetings from His Excellency Lt Col Obiang Nguema Mgazogo, chairman of the Supreme Military Council of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea, for his good friend El Hadj Omar Bongo, president of the Republic of Gaon, and wishes for prosperity of the brotherly people of Gabon.

The agenda was composed of the following items:

1. Trade cooperation,
2. Cultural cooperation,
3. Cooperation in the field of transport,
4. Cooperation in the field of telecommunications and postal affairs,
5. Cooperation in the field of [words indistinct],
6. Cooperation in the field of labor and free movement of people and goods,
7. Other business.

The two delegations decided to appoint two committees, namely a committee for economic, scientific and technical matters and a socio-cultural committee.

The two parties noted with satisfaction the similarity of the viewpoints of the governments of Equatorial Guinea and Gabon on questions tackled at both the political and [words indistinct] levels and on major world and African problems, in particular those relating to the Central African sub-region.

Regarding economic matters they supported the establishment of a more equitable world economic order as well as the taking into consideration of and reorientation in accordance with the Lagos plan of action.

Furthermore, they also recognized the need to intensify and diversify the main (?ties) between the two countries by taking practical steps in the best interests of the two peoples in compliance with the political will often expressed by the two heads of state to maintain mutual cooperation between Gabon and Equatorial Guinea.

The two ministers expressed mutual satisfaction with the cooperation relations and good neighborliness that exist between the two countries and proceeded to sign a friendship and good neighborliness treaty, and a cooperation agreement in the field of telecommunications.

The leader of the Equatorial Guinean delegation, through his Gabonese counterpart, thanked His Excellency El Hadj Omar Bongo, president of the Republic of Gabon and the government and people of Gaon, for the friendly and warm welcome accorded him and his delegation.

The next session of the joint commission on cooperation between Gabon and Equatorial Guinea will be held in Equatorial Guinea on a date to be fixed by the two parties through diplomatic channels.

Issued in Libreville, 26 September 1981

For Gabon
Dominique Boungouere,
Minister of Territorial Administration and Local Collectivities.

For Equatorial Guinea
Felix Mba Nchama,
Commissioner of State for the Ministry of Interior.

OBSERVERS NOTE DETERIORATION IN TIES WITH FRANCE

AB251923 Paris AFP in French 1002 GMT 25 Sep 81

[Excerpts] Libreville, 25 Sep (AFP)--Observers in Libreville have noted that the privileged relations which used to exist between the Giscard government and Gabon have deteriorated considerably less than 5 months after the coming to power of socialist French President Francois Mitterrand.

Paris intends henceforth to depersonalize as much as possible the very close relations which used to exist between Presidents Giscard d'Estaing and Omar Bongo and to promote interstate dialogue.

This very clear-cut evolution is illustrated by the forthcoming departure from Gabon on 4 October of French Ambassador to Gabon Maurice Robert, a staunch Gaullist and former officer of the SDECE (French Intelligence Service) who for 2 years jealously defended French interests in Gabon. Mr Robert had easy access to the palace of President Bongo, who is his personal friend. The two men consulted each other regularly.

Maurice Robert's successor, Robert Cantoni, who is presently in the central administration, will surely not move on such favorable ground. Gabon is wary of socialist France. Mr Bongo has expressed shock in particular with the campaign of lies which he claims was launched in the last few months by the French press against him, his wife and his country.

The Gabonese head of state even goes as far as to openly associate this campaign with an attempt to destabilize his regime supported by French authorities. A lack of understanding toward Paris has developed in the entourage of President Bongo and the French community in Gabon--some 250,000 persons, including a 700-man military intervention force--is worried.

Nevertheless, Gabon does not in any way want to question the importance of cooperation with France, its main partner (70 percent of commercial exchanges).

On the contrary it is said in Libreville that the country is very much aware that in order to increase its economic growth, France's support is necessary, even if the present state of relations between France and Gabon were to cause Mr Bongo to nationalize certain French companies.

France is omnipresent in Gabon, where it is the first customer and the first financier. It supplies Gabon with three-fifths of its foreign aid each eyar. A total of 77 percent of all investments in Gabon are French, far more than American investments which represent only 8.5 percent. French firms dominate the oil sector, which in 1980 represented 60.4 percent of the country's income.

French industries are currently carrying out 23 projects in the wood, mechanical, chemical, agricultural, fishing and cold storage sectors.

It is also said in Libreville that perhaps it would not be in the interest of the French socialist government to shun Gabon publicly as this small Central African country (267,667 square kilometers) with very few people (1 million inhabitants) is a solid link in the Francophone chain. It is a particular favorite of foreign investors as it has immense natural resources. France can still find several markets there. Gabon's oil production presently stands at 7.7 million tons a year. Its exploitable reserves are estimated at 80 million tons.

The public debt, which was 540 billion CFA in 1977, fell to 406.8 billion CFA in 1980. The inflation rate should not exceed 15 percent in 1981. There are henceforth surpluses in the budget and the balance of payments. Gabon's gross domestic product ($2,300 per person) is the highest in Africa after Libya's.

In addition to the sanity of Gabon's finances is the stability of the Bongo regime, which was elected for the first time in 1967 and reelected in 1973 and 1979 and which no structured opposition has succeeded in toppling. Finally there are no political prisoners in Gabon and the violation of human rights is not common.

Observers consider that given such circumstances, Gabon would not find it difficult to find new allies if France were to fail to support the ruling party unambiguously. The United States, Canada, Argentina, Brazil and also Great Britain, Spain or Belgium have been increasing their gestures and offers for cooperation.

In Libreville, a nice, small, coastal town of 300,000 inhabitants, the bad image that Gabon seems to have in France is surprising and is a reason to question the future.

ACP CHAIRMAN EXPLAINS WITHDRAWAL FROM MERGER

AB291445 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 29 Sep 81

[Text] The National Executive Committee of the Action Congress Party [ACP], has explained why the party pulled out of the merger of the five minority parties.

At a news conference in Accra today, the national chairman of the party, Mr Baafour Peprah Antwi-Bosiako, said sometime after the announcement of the date for the election of the leaders of the new party, genuine fears became apparent among the members of the ACP. Some of these fears stemmed from the omission to work out an organizational structure for the new party and also from the failure to give consideration to other matters related to the merger issue.

Mr Antwi-Bosiako referred to the call by some permanent members of the merging parties for the postponement of the elections for good reasons which the ACP endorsed. The ACP leader, Colonel Bernasko, personally called for the postponement of the elections so that things would be put right but these requests were rejected outright. Furthermore, the National Executive Committee of the ACP became more concerned with the news conference of one of the merging parties in London at which he [as heard] posed as his party's presidential candidate and launched a campaign toward that end while the merger negotiations were still in progress.

This, the ACP felt, confirmed allegations of secret meetings being held to pull the Popular Front Party out of the merger if the leadership of the merger went contrary to expectations. Mr Antwi-Bosiako explained further that the London campaign also confirmed the impression that the merger was being manipulated to be an extension of an existing party or the resurrection of an old political organization but this was contrary to the views of the ACP.

Furthermore, certain positions which were to be filled after mutual consultations had been pledged for votes. The implication of this to the democratic basis of the merger was serious enough to disrupt confidence in the party. The ACP therefore felt that the leader of the new party would surround himself with his cronies in the party's top hierarchy.

According to the ACP chairman, the party also viewed with deep concern subtle pressures being put on Colonel Bernasko to step down and thus lend to the elections the farcical impression of unanimity of the support for the leader who might emerge from the elections and this also runs contrary to the democratic prinicples that should characterize the operation of political parties in the country.

The committee therefore felt these pressures had to be resisted. It is not therefore correct thta the pull-out was the result of overambition and the self-seeking of Colonel Bernasko.

JAILED SENIOR OFFICIAL'S DEATH--Bissau, 30 Sep (AFP)--A second senior Guinea-Bissau official jailed in last November's coup has died in prison, official sources said here Tuesday. He was party activist Lay Seck who was governor of the eastern region of Gabu at the time of the ouster of President Luiz Cabral. The two men were together in the presidential mansion on Bubaque Island at the time of the coup. Mr Seck died of heart failure, the sources said. He was a member of the independence party's Central Committee, having joined the party at the age of 20. When the colonial war ended in 1974, he was part of a committee in charge of transferring Portuguese military camps to the party. Last December officials here announced the death in prison of another coup detainee, Major Andre Gomes of Armed Forces H.Q. He was said to have committed suicide. REPLACEMENT OF STRIKING WORKERS--The head of state and chairman of the People's Redemption Council [PRC] Commander in Chief [CIC], Samuel K. Doe, has ordered that workers at the Lamco Joint Operators Company in Buchanan who refused to return to work by 1800 today be immediately replaced. CIC DOE made the ruling today after thoroughly reviewing the situation in Buchanan which has brought to a halt the company's operations in that area. The head of state noted that even though the vice head of state had conferred with workers recently and reached a compromise, they have ignored such efforts and have gone on strike. CIC DOE further indicated that the workers were acting in strict contravention of the decree by the PRC under which the PRC bans all strikes in the country. He said that their action also indicated that they were not in sympathy with the current economic condition facing the country. [Text] [AB301708 Monrovia Radio Elwa in English 1600 GMT 30 Sep 81]

MINISTRY OF INFORMATION CREATED--The People's Redemption Council (PRC) yesterday issued decree No 46 creating the ministry of information. According to the decree, the ministry of information is now responsible to direct and supervise all matters relating to the government's information program both external and internal. The decree also states that the ministry of information is empowered to select, in accordance with prevailing policies, all subjects to be broadcast or covered by news series and other means of communication for internal and external distribution. PODIER OPPOSES INFORMATION MINISTRY MEMORANDUM--The vice head of state, Maj Gen J. Nicholas Podier, has sharply reacted to a memorandum signed by the information minister, Lt Col Gray D. Allinson. The memorandum issued in Monrovia said that all government releases, announcements, pronouncements and public affairs programs emanating from any government ministry or agency must be scrutinized and approved by the ministry of information, with the exception of executive mansion releases, before being released by the press. In a press release issued in the capitol building, General Podier (?reiterated) that press freedom should not be interferred with in revolutionary Liberia. He said the PRC [People's Redemption Council] government will uphold the principle of free press at all times for the promotion of government policies and programs. The PRC cochairman said the scrutiny of press releases from government agencies and ministries should not be the sole responsibility of the ministry of information but rather to provide a means for positive and effective promotion of the government policies overseas. This, he said, will improve Liberia's image to foreign investors. He however appealed to local and foreign journalists in the country to be responsible, objective and factual in the reporting of events on Liberia. ISRAELI-EGYPTIAN PEACE PRAISED--Liberian Foreign Minister Gabriel Baccus Matthews has praised the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty and has said that there is no longer a reason for the break in relations between Liberia and Israel. Nevertheless, he mentioned several points in Israel's policy which concern Liberia, such as cooperation with South Africa, Israel's attacks in Lebanon and the Palestinian question. Regarding the issue of South Africa, the Liberian foreign minister noted that his government was aware of the opposition of the Jewish community in that country to apartheid. The Liberian foreign minister expressed full support for Egypt, saying it deserved more encouragement and support to realize its aim of establishing a comprehensive peace in the Middle East. Our correspondent notes that the Liberian foreign minister voiced a similar view 1 year ago, yet his government did not resume its relations with Israel. RATSIRAKA REJECTS BID TO JOIN CHAD FORCE

[Text] Paris, 1 Oct (ADP)--Madagascar will not form part of the proposed inter-African peacekeeping force for Chad, Malagasy President Didier Ratsiraka said here Wednesday night at the end of a 24-hour (?official) visit to France.

Speaking at a press conference before flying to Moscow, President Ratsiraka noted that in the past the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) had been unable, because of lack of means to mount a pan-African force to halt the civil war in Cha. Libya had then intervened at the request of President Goukouni Oueddei, who was officially recognised as the head of Chad's transitional government of national union, President Ratsiraka said.

He added, "The day a pan-African force can replace the Libyan troops in Chad, the latter will withdraw if they are no longer necessary. That depends on Africa and the OAU."

The Malagasy leader confirmed that shortly before his current extensive overseas trip, OAU Chairman Daniel Arap Moi, the Kenyan president, had contacted him asking for Malagasy contingent for the peacekeeping force, which was called for by the OAU's summit in June.

"I think it is more reasonable and less costly to ask the countries neighboring Chad, Madagascar does not have the necessary means." There was therefore no agreement, President Ratsiraka said yesterday.

President Ratsiraka denied having granted bases on Madagascar to the Soviet Union. He stressed that it was the only nonaligned country in the region to have refused to let both Soviet and American warships call at the island's ports or enjoy facilities there.

"We are campaigning for the Indian Ocean to become a zone of peace. I have proposed an international conference at Antananarivo (the Malagasy capital) and have received positive response," President Ratsiraka said, adding that he was waiting for the response of U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

President Ratsiraka said French President Francois Mitterrand assured him at their meeting yesterday that France was ready to negotiate about the handful of small islands in the area claimed by Madagascar--Europa, Bassas da India, Juan de Nova, Les Glorieuses and Tromelin. "We are satisfied with that promise," President Ratsiraka commented. "Our countries are not going to go to war for those islands, which add nothing to the greatness of France. For us, a poor country, [words indistinct].

President Ratsiraka later went to Moscow on a special flight of the Soviet airline Aeroflot. He had been there early last month on holiday after making visits to Angola, Nigeria, Algeria, Libya and India.

RATSIRAKA MEETS FRENCH PRESIDENT--Paris, 30 Sep (AFP)—Never has France and Madagascar been so close to one another ideologically and philosophically, President of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar Didier Ratsiraka said today in Paris. The Malagasy head of state, who had lunch and discussions with President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee, specified that their talks centered on the international situation, on their analysis of the political situation of the world, particularly Africa and the Third World; and on international relations. We found an attentive and understanding listener in the person of President Mitterrand and we have every reason to be happy about our access to the power and president of a socialist government, the Malagasy head of state stressed. President Ratsiraka also indicated that the problem of the scattered islands of the Indian Ocean (Europa, Bassas da India, Juan de Nova, Les Glorieuse and Tromelin), under French jurisdiction but claimed by Madagascar, was also discussed. President Mitterrand will have this matter examined, he said, and we will then discuss it as well as our bilateral cooperation. He further stated that there was no dispute between France and his country over the probelms of the Indian Ocean. The Malagasy president is the 13th African head of state to be received by Mr Mitterrand since he assumed office in the Elysee on 21 May 1981. RAILROAD EQUIPMENT PURCHASED FROM BRAZIL

[Text] On Wednesday morning at the DNPCF [National Directorate of Ports and Railways], in the presence of the Brazilian ambassador to the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique], a contract was signed for the acquisition of 200 ballast cars and respective spare parts to be used in renovating and maintaining roads of the CFM [Mozambique Railways], notably of the CFM-Norte, where renovation of the Nacala line should begin in early 1982.

Eng Fernando Ferreira Mendes, assistant national director of the DNPCF, and other directorate high officials signed the contract for Mozambique, and Jose Carlos do Couto Viana, director-president of MAFERSA, S.A. of Brazil, which manufactures the railway cars, signed for his firm.

The contract, which is backed by a line of credit granted by the Bank of Brazil through CACEX [Foreign Trade Department], provides for delivery of the first consignment of cars within 6 months after the date the contract goes into effect, and the remaining cars within 11 months of that date.

The contract also provides for technical assistance from the supplier to Mozambique and the training of Mozambican cadres in Brazil.

Speaking informally after the signing, Mendes thanked the Brazilian ambassador for his honored presence, which he said was highly significant, reflecting the fact that relations between the two countries have been intensifying and growing in several areas, particularly with respect to renovation and maintenance of CFM infrastructures.

He added that, within the context of southern African development, it is essential that the RPM have the capacity to respond to solicitations. The effectiveness of the SADCC [?Commission for the Coordinated Development of Southern Africa] is linked to this capacity.

"The expanded capability of our railways will contribute to this progress which is our goal," he said. He concluded by praising the highly understanding manner in which the Brazilian counterpart conducted the discussions that led to the signing of the contract.

In response, the director-president of MAFERSA, S.A. declared: "We are absolutely certain that the CFM will be satisfied with our performance.

"Meanwhile, we would like to make our relations a little closer, beyond the mere formality of signing contracts or agreements.

"I have said before and I say again that we are ready to cooperate in passing on our technology. We could even cooperate with Cometal-Mometal. I have not visited it, but I have had good reports about it."

In conclusion, Couto Viana expressed thanks for the way his delegation was welcomed and treated in the RPM.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE WITH BULGARIA FOLLOWING MACHEL VISIT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] Following President Samora Machle's unofficial visit of friendship to the People's Republic of Bulgaria, the Mozambican chief of state and Todor Zhivkov, secretary general of the Bulgarian Communist Party [BCP], issued a joint communique describing their exchange of information regarding the activities of the FRELIMO Party and the BCP. Among other issues, the communique condemns South Africa's attacks against its neighboring countries. Following is the full text of the communique.

Samora Moises Machel, president of the FRELIMO Party and of the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM], paid a private and friendly visit to the People's Republic of Bulgaria, during which he met with Todor Zhivkov, secretary general of the BCP Central Committee and president of the Council of State. During the meeting, which took place in a warm and brotherly atmosphere, the two party and state leaders shared notes on the activity of the FRELIMO Party and the BCP and exchanged views on current international issues and the further development of the fraternal ties of cooperation between the parties and peoples of the RPM and the Republic of Bulgaria.

Comrade Zhivkov reported on the work which the Bulgarian communists and all the workers of Bulgaria are conducting in this phase to implement the decisions of the 12th BCP Congress, for new greater achievements in building an advanced socialist society in Bulgaria. He noted the peaceful foreign policy of the BCP and the People's Republic of Bulgaria, geared to the development of good neighbor relations and mutually advantageous cooperation among the Balkan states and the transformation of the Balkans into a denuclearized zone. He expressed the readiness of the BCP and the People's Republic of Bulgaria to continue to support the struggle of the peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America for their liberty, national independence and social progress, for the consolidation of world peace.

Comrade Machel reported on the activity of the Mozambican communists and all the Mozambican workers in implementing the Central State Plan and in preparation for the Fourth FRELIMO Party Congress, to defend, consolidate and broaden the socialist transformation of the RPM.

He noted the active policy of the FRELIMO Party and the Mozambican state in the struggle for peace, cooperation and neighborly relations among the antiracist states of southern Africa and for denuclearization of the Indian Ocean and its transformation into a zone of peace. He stressed the RPM's internationalist role of continuing support to the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, racism, "apartheid" and Zionsim, for peace, national independence, progress and social justice.

President Machel saluted the BCP and the Bulgarian workers on the 1,300th anniversary of the Bulgarian nation and the 90th anniversary of the founding of the BCP. He reported on the activities conducted in Mozambique by the national committee for the celebration of the 1,300th anniversary of the founding of the Bulgarian nation. He had high praise for the successes in the building of an advanced socialist society in the People's Republic of Bulgaria, and lauded the party and government for its effective and constructive foreign policy, aimed at peace in Europe and in the world and the conversion of the Balkans into a zone of peace. He expressed great appreciation for the constantly developing and deepening bonds of cooperation in many areas between the RPM and the People's Republic of Bulgaria.

Secretary General Zhivkov hailed the FRELIMO Party and the Mozambican workers for achieving radical political, social and economic changes along the socialist path. He praised the internationalist example set by the FRELIMO Party and the RPM in support of the cause of popular liberation. He looked favorably on the results of the cooperation between the two states, for their common benefit and development.

The two party and state leaders expressed their deep concern at the worsening international situation in recent years and at the action of the United States, which continues to intensify world tension and the arms race and seeks to sabotage the people's struggle for freedom, independence and social progress. In this regard, they categorically condemned the U.S. Government's decision to begin production of neutron bombs, which constitute a new and grave threat to world peace. The two leaders noted and supported the just position of the Soviet Government and all forces for peace in condemning this new irresponsible act of the U.S. Government. They expressed their deep conviction that, under present circumstances, there is no more urgent or important task than to prevent a nuclear war, to end the arms race and to take specific steps toward demilitarization.

The two party and state leaders roundly condemned the imperialist powers for their intensified military and political intervention in the internal affairs of the African states, their attempts to include Africa in their military alliances and their actions against the interests of the national liberation movements on the African continent and against the progressive development of the peace-loving African peoples. In particular, they denounced the aggressive actions against Latin America, Asia and Africa and strongly condemned the recent U.S. actions against the sovereign state of Libya. They reiterated their full support for the legitimate struggle of the South African and Namibian peoples against racism and "apartheid," for freedom and national independence. They expressed their solidarity with the People's Republic of Angola and other African states that are the target of constant attacks by the Republic of South Africa [RSA]. They stressed the grave danger of the militarization of the RSA and the Pretorian racists' acquisition of nuclear weapons, with the collaboration of NATO, and declared their support for the idea of creating non nuclear zones in Africa and other regions of the world.

Comrades Machel and Zhivkov expressed their opinion that the current international situation calls for more united action by the countries of the socialist community, the nonaligned nations and the national liberation movements in the struggle for peace and international security, for freedom and independence of the peoples, to foil the attempts of imperialist and reactionary forces to undermine the peace movement and provoke conflicts among nations, imposing a new phase of the arms race on the peoples.

They reaffirmed the shared aspiration of the FRELIMO Party and the BCP to develop their fraternal ties on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism and to expand and consolidate cooperation between the RPM and the People's Republic of Bulgaria in various areas, in accordance with the Friendship and Cooperation Treaty between them.

Dimitur Stanichev, secretary of the BCP Central Committee, attended the meeting, representing Bulgaria.

Representing Mozambique were Col. Sergio Vierira, member of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee and chief of department of the Central Committee, and Jose Luis Cabaco, member of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE WITH SOVIET WORKERS

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 16 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] A delegation of the National Commission for Implementation of the Production Councils (CNICP) visited the USSR from 18 to 27 July, at the invitation of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions (AUCCTU). At the end of the visit a friendship and cooperation accord was signed between the CNICP and the AUCCTU, and a joint communique was released.

The CNICP delegation was led by Augusto Macamo, its executive secretary and member of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee. The delegation visited the Soviet cities of Moscow, Kiev, Simferopol, Vladimir and Suzdel and learned about the operation of industrial and agricultural enterprises, cultural institutions, community services and schools. In these visits, the Mozambican delegation also learned about the multifaceted labor activity of the Soviets and the function of the Soviet labor unions at various levels.

In the discussions between the CNICP and AUCCTU delegations, the two parties exchanged information on the labor organizations in the two countries and also discussed the international union movement, contemporary problems, pradtical avenues for development of various forms of cooperation and the strengthening of friendly Soviet-Mozambican union relations.

Regarding the international situation, the two delegations observed with serious concern the increased world tension generated by the aggressive policy of the imperialists. Regarding southern Africa, they strongly condemned the continuing armed attacks by Pretoria against the Front Line countries. They expressed their fraternal support for the South African ANC and called for an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia by racist South Africa, convinced that only the application of UN Resolution 435 can end the dispute.

With respect to the Middle East, the joint communique notes that the delegations were concerned about the escalation of Israel's expansionist aggression against the neighboring Arab states, and reaffirmed their militant solidarity with the just struggle of the Arab people of Palestine and the latter's sole legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Reiterating their steadfast solidarity with all peoples in struggle against colonialism, imperialism, racism and reaction, the two parties expressed their conviction that the World Federation of Trade Unions, to be held in Havana in February 1982, will be an important stage in the development of united action by the workers and of international labor solidarity in the common struggle for the triumph of the ideals of the labor class.

SATISFACTORY VISIT BY INTERNATIONAL UNION OF STUDENTS

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 16 Aug 81 pp 8-9

[Report on press conference with Miroslav Stepan, president of the International Union of Students, by Fatima Albuquerque, date and place not given]

> [Text] "The visit to the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] has been a success because it accomplished the intended goals," said Miroslav Stepan, president of the IUS [International Union of Students], during a press conference.

The IUS worked with the OJM [Organization of Mozambican Youth] for about 10 days, following which a cooperation accord was signed in which the IUS promised to provide study grants for young people designated by the OJM, to send activists specialized in the construction field to aid in the work of developing Niassa, and to send material to support various projects of the OJM and of some ministries. The accord also provides for joint preparations for the next International Conference of Students and Youth, which will take place in the People's Republic of Angola this November.

Created 35 years ago, the IUS comprises 118 youth organizations. It is a young and active organization, dynamic in the role of enlisting world youth.

Among its priorities is support for the struggle against illiteracy, action which it has conducted mainly in the newly independent countries. Very recently, about 350 IUS brigade members contributed positively to the literacy campaign in Nicaragua. Stepan reported that his organization's brigades are now preparing to take part in a similar campaign to be conducted soon in Afghanistan.

The youth leader also made reference to the Indian Ocean. He reported that a press conference will be held in India on the topic: "The Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace." The OJM is also taking part in the preparations for this conference.

"Unity is action and action is unity. This is the primary task for today and tomorrow. Unity means action and cooperation," said the IUS president, stressing the role of the two organizations now and in the future.

Also attending the press conference was Leonardo Candeeiro, member of the OJM and first vice president of the IUS.

DEFECTED PILOT EXPRESSES SATISFACTION WITH OWN LOT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] Cape Town--The defected Mozambican Air Force pilot, Lieutenant Adriano Bomba is alive and well and training on Impala aircraft at the South African Air Force base at Ysterplaat near Cape Town.

Lt Bomba, 24, defected in a MiG 17 of the Mozambique Air Force in July. He was intercepted by two SAAF Mirages and escorted to Hoedspruit air base in the Eastern Transvaal.

Lt Bomba had lunch yesterday with visiting military correspondents at Ysterplaat. He said he had so far had two hours and 30 minutes training on Impalas. He had been flying with an instructor but he might to solo soon. He said he had no plans to join the SAAF but wanted the opportunity to convert to flying Impalas.

The air force was giving him the opportunity to do so.

He planned to remain in South Africa and eventually obtain a commercial licence. It was a matter of converting to light commercial aircraft. He said he had no official reply to his application for permanent residence, but he planned to go to Pretoria for commercial training.

Looking confident, he said he wanted to enroll at a university after he had started flying commercially to study engineering. He had so far had no offers fro commercial flying.

Asked about his treatment by the military authorites, he said the fact that he was allowed to train on their aircraft and that he was living in the officers' mess, spoke for itself.

Replying to a question, he said training on a South African military aircraft was useful in getting used to South African procedures and terminology because he had had his training in the Soviet Union.

The Officer Commanding 7 Squadron, Major Thys du Toit, said Lt Bomba was an above-average pilot.--SAPA

VISAS TO SOUTH AFRICANS FOR TOURISTIC FISHING DOWN

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Sep 81 p 7

[Article by Tim Clarke]

[Text] Durban--The hopes of South African anglers obtaining visas to enter Mozambique freely to fish some of the best grounds in the world seem to be diminishing.

A spokesman for a group of Natal anglers who have just come back from Mozambique, told THE CITIZEN this week they had met senior officials of the Machel regime in Maputo at the weekend.

Although the discussion had been informal, the officials of the Mozamibque Government made it plain that visas would be granted to South African anglers only in exceptional cases.

The officials said each visa application was studied on its individual merit. They also said that South Africans would not be allowed there in large numbers...there was no chance of it, they said.

The Natal fishing group spent about two weeks in Mozamibque. They said little had been done to improve resorts like Paradise Island and Xai-Xai. Although the fishing was still tremendous, conditions at these two famous resorts were now almost primitive.

Gillies were still plentiful but it was difficult to obtain bait, and restaurants which previously flourished at these resorts had closed.

They said the locals were delighted to see South Africans and expressed the wish that they would come back in large numbers so that they could make some sort of living.

INCREASED POLITICAL ROLE OF MILITANTS/COOPERANTS ADVOCATED

[Text] Active participation in the tasks of national reconstruction, particularly political tasks, by foreign militants who supported FRELIMO in the armed struggle for national liberation and are now working in our country: This was an important topic for discussion in a meeting held yesterday in the national party headquarters.

The meeting, which was chaired by Brig. Gen. Marcelino dos Santos, Central Committee secretary for economic policy, was attended by Jorge Rebelo, Central Committee secretary for ideological work, and several veteran foreign militants of various nationalities.

The discussion lasted until after midnight and the guests participated fully, particularly in the analysis of their increasing exclusion from participation in political tasks, which began to be felt soon after national independence was declared.

Actually, these are foreign citizens who now work in Mozambique as cooperants, but their aim, as they demonstrated during the war for liberation, is basically to take an active part in the tasks of the Mozambican revolution.

The lack of a clearly defined role for these militants, some of whom have expressed an interest in remaining in the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] for a long time, has made them feel isolated from Mozambican reality.

"We have noted this lack, and we are all interested in making your stay here more useful. That is the reason for this meeting. We must look together for a way to correct this problem," said General dos Santos.

At another point, dos Santos referred to the important contribution of the participants during the armed struggle, which created the firm foundation for their relations with FRELIMO. The party leader noted the need and importance of including these foreign militants in political tasks, not only in the ministries and enterprises they serve but also in the neighborhoods.

General dos Santos indicated how useful it would be for these foreign citizens to share experiences with the Mozambican people, illustrating his point with examples of practical work in the neighborhoods and enterprises, mobilizing the people, promoting various activities to occupy free time and other work with the mass democratic organizations.

Several participants expressed their feelings and made it clear that their exclusion from political work had limited their contribution to the Mozambican revolutionary process.

Among the issues brought up at the meeting, which reflected this isolation, was the fact that the militants were unfamiliar with the practical reality of the Mozambican revolutionary process.

Other questions pertaining to this important objective were raised, such as the possibility of conducting regular lectures or discussion on political and cultural aspects of Mozambican life, the exchange of information with other militants serving abroad, and the need for closer relations between the foreign militants and the party.

Jorge Rebelo, Central Committee secretary for ideological work, noted: "Without adopting paternalistic attitudes, which often block relations between Mozambican workers and foreign cooperants, and without assuming a position of responsibility, a cooperant can contribute politically to the development of the Mozambican revolutionary process."

The meeting between the high party officials and these militants--who are not Mozambican citizens but who nonetheless can contribute to the victory of our people--ended with the creation of a committee to study the issues raised in greater detail and propose measures to correct the situation.

MACHEL RELEASES REEDUCATION CAMP INMATES

Large Number Released

EA281372 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 0430 GMT 28 Sep 81

[Text] Yesterday President Samora Machel released 687 people who were being reeducated at Chaiamite Reeducation Camp in Cabo Delgado Province.

The people who were being reeducated were deserters from the Popular Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique [FPLM], our armed forces, and the police; common law criminals; delinquents; drug addicts; and vagrants.

President Machel announced the measure after a dialogue of about 5 hours with the reeducated people. Mozambique's head of state said that they are now free citizens and that they are going to be integrated into the economic sectors of Cabo Delgado and Niassa provinces.

Samora Machel ordered elderly men to return to their homes. He told them to go and teach others at their places of origin what they had learned at the reeducation camp.

Our supreme leader also pointed out that some people interned at the reeducation camp had in fact demonstrated correct behavior and ought not to have been there.

More Prisoners Released

[Text] President Samora Machel yesterday announced the release of 76 former fighters of the armed struggle of national liberation who were in the Ruarua Reeducation Camp, in Cabo Delgado Province. The president considered his decision as demonstrating respect for those who had liberated the country.

Announcing the decision, the Mozambique head of state lamented the fact that many militants who had participated in the armed struggle of national liberation to the end should have been punished for minor deviations by being put in reeducation camps, where there were colonial era security forces and traitors. President Samora added that by acting in that manner we had not been giving due value to the role performed by such militants in the national liberation struggle or to the revolutionary achievements embodied in the reeducation process.

In Ruarua Reeducation Camp there are also traitors; deserters and individuals who joined the armed forces since 1974; ex-policemen and security personnel; and civilians detained as common law criminals.

Injustices Criticized

[Excerpt] President Samora Machel ended his visit to the Province of Cabo Delgado today by holding a meeting which was attended by members of the Frelimo Party provincial committee and provincial government.

After reviewing the purpose of his visit to the province, the head of state said that there was a need to defend revolutionary legality and justice and ensure respect for the constitution. President Samora Machel was referring in particular to many cases of illegality and injustices which he had noted at the Ruarua Reeducation Center.

The head of state then referred to a number of cases where former freedom fighters who for minor faults or deviations committed after independence had been detained in the reeducation center for 5-6 years. He also referred to the detainees who had served disproportionate sentences in relation to their misdemeanors for which they did not even need reeducation.

President Samora Machel said that such mistakes could not be allowed because they deeply hurt the political line of the party and create distrust among the population quite apart from directing against the people a weapon which is destined to combat the enemy. President Samora Machel said that the reeducation centers constituted a major achievement of our people and should serve the purpose for which they were set up, that is, the reeducation process.

In his closing speech at the end of his visit to Cabo Delgado, the head of state hailed the provincial party and state structures for their commitment to work and mobilizing the people and for the progress and transformations being achieved in the province.

DIFFICULTIES IN UNANGO REEDUCATION CENTER ANALYZED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 31 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Antonio Souto]

[Text] Unango is a unique experiment in national and international solidarity in our country. With support from all the provinces of the country and from many foreign organizations, the former inmates of the reeducation center, who were released in October 1979, are building a new city where the center formerly stood. However, after 3 months without direction because of the irresponsibility of the high officials appointed to oversee the process at the local level, and also for lack of coordination with the Niassa program, the development of this experiment has reached a stage of crisis.

There are several contributing factors.

In the first place, there is the specific situation of the idividuals most directly involved in the experiment: Men who owe a debt to society because of various past crimes. Their rehabilitation and return to society was not effected on the day they were released.

Moreover, most of the many projects planned or already under way within the Niassa program are concentrated in Unango.

These circumstances dictate careful coordination and supervision of life in Unango. This has not been the case. As the project grew, the problems also grew. Basically, it is a matter of a crisis of growth.

The most evident symptom of this crisis is the demand for wages by some of the former inmates.

Actually, Unango still leads a parasitic life. Generally speaking, most of what is consumed there is provided from outside. Production is not yet organized and developed enough to achieve economic self-sufficiency.

Basically, despite the economic level that has been reached there, or could have been reached if the process had been conducted better, the spirit of parasitism persists in most of these men.

This is the central point. It was not decided to build a city there as if it were a monument to something or other. The development of Unango is part of the Lucheringo Valley project, so the city rests on secure economic foundations.

Agricultural equipment was provided--tractors and some implements--but they are put to ridiculously little use. They grew corn and then waited for OJM [Organization of Mozambican Youth] brigades to help with the harvest, when the residents of Unango could have harvested it without any special effort. Great assistance was provided, particularly by the OJM and international organizations, in the construction of temporary housing along new lines for the former center inmates and their families.

Despite all this, and although assitance was necessary to meet the basic needs of these people, some of them are demanding wages.

It is not yet understood that the city of Unango, the city where these men will build their future and their children's future, will be born of the economic development which they themselves promote with their own efforts.

In many cases, they bring the habits of a parasitic life from the past. While they were being reeducated they depended on the state for their subsistence. Almost 2 years after their release, there has in fact been no significant change in their position of dependence. On the contrary, their debt to society has been growing.

The project has not created the basic conditions for their true liberation. Their return to society is not, in fact, coming about. Their daily life has all the conditions that would continue to foster a parasitic mentality. This is a negation of the reason for their release in October 1979.

This is what the local leadership in Unango has not managed to understand.

"As far as these directors are concerned, these are not men. They only see animals. Men have will. Men have desires. Men have enthusiasm; they have an interest. Men think, and hence they need to talk things over, in open, frank and direct dialogue. We do not find this there. As a result, there is no incentive, interest, programming or definition of tasks and priorities," said President Samore Machel, analyzing the situation in Unango.

There are aspects of the problem beyond the scope of the local leadership. There are questions that call for broader coordination, and these are also reflected in the current crisis in Unango.

In the first place, it took the presidential visit to end the 3-month absence of the director of Unango. No one at any other level had taken any steps to correct the lack of responsibility existing there. President Machel himself appointed a new directorate the day after his visit to Unango.

Another factor is that Unango was not growing as an integral part of the Lucheringo Valley development program.

This agricultural project was already in progress, in cooperation with a socialist country, when construction of the city of Unango was determined in October 1979.

No one coordinated these factors. As a result, in Unango, very close to the area where the former inmates were setting up their temporary housing, a new urban center connected with the Lucheringo project was being created. The agency responsible for the project thought the city of Unango should be located on the slope of the mountain;the Lucheringo project city would be about 2 kilometers away.

Thus there were two urban centers with the same economic base, in close proximity geographically but politically distant; the city of the "former inmates of the reeducation center" and the city of the "Valley Project."

The economic and social integration of the Unango inhabitants who were released in October 1979 was thwarted. This will be corrected. In accordance with a joint physical plan, the urbanization of the zone will include everyone, without discrimination, in the development of the region. The hillside zone is being considered as a tourist center.

Associated with this, the agricultural enterprise already in operation there contracted some of the former center inmates as salaried workers. They were given a signed card, however, pointing out that the company did not assume responsibility for paying them any wage.

Although those who are demanding wages are not precisely the same individuals who are working there, the fact is that one who is employed as a salaried worker has, by definition, the right to a wage.

Since they do not pay for anything they consume, it was decided to wait for a better definition of the situation before determining if they were in fact working for the enterprise or not. Meanwhile, they were working there without knowing what to expect. They were not working for wages, but in repayment for what was being given to them. In short, a new situation of dependence was being created, which only fosters parasitism.

Meanwhile, because the management was not functioning at the local level and decisions were not being made at any other level, a series of economic and social initiatives linked to the devlopment of Unango has been paralyzed.

Among these is a polivalent cooperative to develop an assortment of activities required for the development of Unango; for example, construction of prefabricated housing, carpentry and other activities. Regarding agricultural activity, the zone's economic base, part of this will be in collective form, in a cooperative and a state unit in Lucheringo Valley, where the first 500 hectares will be planted this year.

As the first step in all this, however, the labor force must be organized. To date, few people know where they will be working or what they will be doing.

As immediate measures, the appointment of a new directorate for Unango and creation of an agency to coordinate the Niassa development plan as a whole will, among other things, permit these men to become truly integrated in society.

NRM ACTIVITIES SAID TO BE INCREASING IN SCOPE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 15 Sep 81 p 29

[Article by Rene Biagi]

[Text] Maputo, 14 Sep--The anti-government guerrillas of Mozambique's National Resistance Movement (NRM) are stepping up and expanding their activities following a lull since last June, according to various sources here.

Sources close to the armed forces said that fighting had taken place in the past few weeks with NRM guerrillas in Chicualacuala Province, near where the borders of Mozambique, South Africa and Zimbabwe meet. There was no indication of the size of the clashes.

In other incidents six electricity pylons supplying the Indian Ocean port of Beira were blown up a fortnight ago near Chimoi, in Manica Province bordering Zimbabwe. Shortly afterwards Beira's power supplies were again hit when a nearby power station was attacked, but although electricity was rationed the running of the country's second largest port was not affected.

Some 200 kilometres (125 miles) further down the coast, the area round Ilancul in Inhambane Province has been partially closed off to civilians because of pockets of NRM activity.

In the affected area sawmills have had to close and road traffic to and from Beira travels in convoy with a military escort.

The resulting insecurity has caused more than a thousand people to flee into Zimbabwe from the Espungabera district, where at night the guerrillas prevail, yielding to the Government forces during the day.

The authorities are now forced to resort in some cases to the methods of the former colonial powers they themselves fought against before independence: fortified villages are beginning to appear in some parts.

Transport Sabotage

Last June the Government claimed to have confined the NRM to its sanctuary in Espungabera, an isolated mountainous region along the Zimbabwean border. But today the guerrillas are active in more than one part of the country.

Observers here consider the NRM is far from being a threat to the Marxist Government of Samora Machel, although it is a worry. The authorities are particularly sensitive to their effect on the national economy, sabotaging transport at a time when Maputo is attempting to convince its neighbours to use its ports instead of those of South Africa.

NRM strength was put at some 3,000 men in June, but now is thought to be more. South Africa says there are 10,000 and Mozambican sources attribute the increase to the infiltration of guerrillas from South Africa itself. (AFP)

MARAGRA SUGAR UNIT SUFFERS FROM MANPOWER SHORTAGE

[Excerpts] The lack of manpower, aggravated by the strong rains that flooded sugar cane plantations during the first 4 months of the year are jeopardizing the production of sugar in the Maragra unit this year.

According to information provided by the director of the agricultural sector of Maragra, production plans for next year are also jeopardized. This is due to the fact that only 580 hectares of sugar cane were planted instead of the 1,300 hectares originally planned.

"The lack of manpower is truly worrisome in this unit of production, especially this year when absenteeism reached 60 percent in relation to last year," David Hurekure, director of agricultural production, explained to us.

Only 434 out of the 1,200 workers needed during the harvest campaign work at all times, and only between 2,500 and 2,800 workers are working in the fields. About 950 to 1,000 workers participated last year in the sugar cane harvest, while 3,500 to 3,600 workers were busy with other activities in the fields.

According to David Hurekure, one of the most serious problems at the root of the manpower shortage is the irregularity in supplying basic products to the district of Manhica. "A large number of workers leave their jobs for two or more weeks in search of goods in other districts. They tell us all kinds of stories when they come back, some of them false, but we need them so badly that we just have to take them back," David Hurekure added.

Other workers register for the campaign but do not appear when needed because they elect to devote their time to family farming.

During the colonial period, most of the Maragra workers were recruited through forcible means. The fact that Maragra is located in an area where manpower for South African mines was recruited as well compelled the colonial enterprise to solve the problem in cahoots with political authorities. Moreover, many Mozambicans accused of crimes used to be sent to work in this plantation. All of these factors prevented the Maragra company from developing its own stable work force.

In an attempt to solve this problem, the company has instituted a weekly bonus of 75 meticals for all those who work more than 6 consecutive days without being late. Following the adoption of this measure, the average number of workers at the Maragra company rose from 434 to 750. However, it is feared that this measure will have a limited effect and will not solve the problems related to the low productivity inherent to the lack of stability of the work force.

DETAILS ON UMBELUZI RIVER DAM CONSTRUCTION PROJECT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Sep 81 p 8

[Text] The construction of the Pequenos Libombos dam will effect a profound transformation in the economic and social plans affecting the Umbeluzi Valley region. The dam will make possible the irrigation of 16,000 hectares of land, the installation of the necessary infrastructure for the start of the work, namely the construction of a residential district to house 3,500 workers. A professional training center will also be built on the site.

Besides the principal objective, which is to alleviate the problem of the water supply of Greater Maputo, the possibility of irrigating other neighboring areas is also under study.

The professional training center, which will originally admit 100 students, will offer various courses related to civil construction lasting from 3 to 9 months. The students to be admitted will have at least a 5th grade education.

The access road to the dam will also serve as a conduit for the products of this region.

The dam will also facilitate control of the Umbeluzi River floods which has been the scourge of the local population.

The work is scheduled to be completed within 42 months, beginning in 1982. The start of the work may be jeopardized, however, by the adjudication of the responsibility for supervising the project, which has already suffered extensive delays. This step should already have been taken in order to allow the enterprise that would win the contract to participate in the discussions with the contractor and the planner and prepare for its own project.

The preliminary work for this project, for which the civil construction contract was signed a few days ago, began in 1974 with a general study conducted by the Portuguese HIDROPROJECTO company. Talks with various enterprises for the adjudication of the civil construction contract began in 1977. Following a number of proposals, the choice fell on the Italian Stalistrade SPA and the Cooperative Muratori e Cementisti companies since they had presented a financing proposal whose terms were quite advantageous for Mozambique. Moreover, the Italian government guaranteed a line of credit that could be partially used for this project.

The African Development Bank and the African Development Fund have been contacted for the financing of the project as related to the hydromechanical equipment, the supervision, the access road and the cleaning of the artificial lake to be created.

EXPANSION OF CEMENT INDUSTRY REPORTED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 10

[Excerpts] Maputo--After relaunching its heavy industry, Mozambique is now improving technology in some enterprises in the sector, to overcome some domestic market problems and to expand the group of products for export.

The move in this direction is noticeable in the cement industry, which is not only geared to the domestic construction and housing sector, but also to the foreign market, consisting mainly of Mozambique's neighbors in southern Africa.

Technical Training

Among the countries cooperating most with Mozambique in the cement industry is the GDR, whose Solidarity Committee has provided 3.75 million marks to finance construction of a new professional training center for cement workers near the Mozambican cement plant in Dondo, Sofala Province.

The center will be built in two phases. The first phase should be concluded in 1984, and the second and last phase will be completed the following year. The center is expected to train 120 apprentices a year. In the near future it should have Mozambican technicians qualified to direct it. In a first phase, the Mozambican technicians will be assisted by GDR technicians.

Construction and Housing

Next year Mozambique also plans to begin constructing prefabricated houses in the capital, with an initial production of 200 per year. This figure could be tripled in 2 or 3 years to 800 per year. The viability study for the project has already been completed and its execution should also take in Sofala, Tete and Quelimane provinces. The project is seen as an alternative to permanent construction, in view of the nation's current housing problem.

Export

One of the major consumers of Mozambique's cement is Tanzania, which should import 7,000 tons this month.

In July Mozambique exported 10,000 tons of cement to Malawi. Mozambique has a strong cement industry, with three plants located in Matola, Nacala and Condo.

DEEP REORGANIZATION COMES TO INFORMATION FIELD

[Interview with Ricardo Aquiles Rangel in Maputo on 21 September 1981]

[Text] "We abhor blowing our own horn. We shall not brag. We shall insert ourselves in the realities of the New Society under construction, performing the work of informing and bringing to the paper young students, workers and members of all social sectors to participate in the task of informing and being informed," Ricardo Aquiles Rangel, director of the DOMINGO newspaper stated to our reporter shortly before assuming his position yesterday afternoon.

To extend to Mozambican workers the mission of informing, to respond to popular expectations, to take the debate on the principal problems of Mozambican actuality to the public are some of the objectives of the DOMINGO newspaper.

DOMINGO, whose first edition will come out next Sunday, will attempt to affirm its presence throughout the country. It will have efficient collaborators who will be remunerated. Its 32 pages will deal with various fields, from recreation to scientific subjects treated in depth.

[Question] Could you tell us what are the principal goals of DOMINGO?

[Answer] DOMINGO will compensate for the voids left in other information organs. We shall initiate a variety of new columns, such as the one dealing with leisure time. As a weekly paper, we shall deal in depth with subjects affecting the young and the various social sectors.

[Question] How do you think that you will implement these objectives?

[Answer] We cannot anticipate whether or not we shall be successful in our mission, but we hope that through the concerted efforts of all the young people who make up our editorial staff, readers will be presented with a faithful image of daily realities in our country. We shall call up young students, workers from all sectors of our society. They will work in information tasks with us. They will assume the responsibility of informing and becoming informed. We shall attribute a great deal of importance to photography. We believe that pictures will satisfy the needs of our readers, because they constitute an efficient way of correctly informing them. Many papers around the world are going in this direction.

[Question] What will be the characteristics of DOMINGO?

[Answer] It will be a tabloid with 32 pages, of which 4 will be devoted to "Njingiritane" [children's section].

[Question] What are the needs in manpower?

[Answer] Our staff is not large; on the contrary, we only have four reporters and a trainee. Our pictorial staff will have two reporters, and I am one of them. If necessary I shall go out myself. However, the most important aspect is that we intend to obtain everyone's participation in this paper. Our small group of reporters cannot do the work alone. The noble mission of informing must be shared by all.

[Question] Who will coordinate the work?

[Answer] We shall, but please note that as I mentioned before, we shall have fixed collaborators who will be remunerated.

[Question] What will be the most salient feature of DOMINGO?

[Answer] We are in the midst of a revolution. We shall create a paper that will be able to respond to a revolution, a vivacious, dynamic, enthusiastic paper, because revolution means happiness. We shall not blow our own horn, we abhor bragging.

Beira New Newspaper

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 22 Sep 81 p 3

[Interview with Botelho Moniz. Date and place not given.]

[Excerpts] The DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE is the name of the new paper that will be published beginning on 25 September. It will be published from Monday to Saturday and will be located in Beira, inheriting the NOTICIAS DA BEIRA installations, since this paper has been closed by a ministerial decree published yesterday in Maputo.

Its new director, Botelho Moniz, who was also the director of the now extinct NOTICIAS DA BEIRA, gave a brief interview to our reporter.

[Question] What will be the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE and how was it conceived?

[Answer] It will be a daily paper whose main characteristic will be to inform, relax and train. Its main concern will be to respond to the demands made by information in the revolutionary process underway in our country. The paper will support the development of the country in the next decade. As for the second aspect, we conducted an inquiry among the people to ascertain what they would like to see in a paper. This was an inquiry on a scientific base. We also held a number of meetings in the various districts and enterprises. We listened to frank criticism on information in general and our work in particular. On the basis of the criticism, the suggestions and the concerns expressed by the public, we conceived the new DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE.

[Question] What will be the policy of the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE?

[Answer] The paper aims at being informative and dynamic. It has a goal and it will attempt to keep in permanent touch with the people. It will try to mirror the realities of the people.

[Question] What will it do to implement these objectives?

[Answer] We propose to deal with many subjects and include new sections with the ample participation of our readers. It will have 16 pages and will be a tabloid.

[Excerpts] Beginning on 25 September, readers will also have a new NOTICIAS. There will be a general transformation that will be the platform for a new NOTICIAS in relation to its function and role in the revolutionary process.

By being open to criticism from all sectors, NOTICIAS will no longer be a mere passive recorder of realities and will turn into an organ of active social intervention. Relying on the people's interests and on socialism, the new NOTICIAS will occupy the place it deserves in the development of the class struggle, a proper attitude for an information organ. Through its concrete contribution, it will prove the fairness of our common struggle for a new international order for information.

The new NOTICIAS will keep its present format, but will give more space to photography, will introduce new columns and will attempt to remain faithful to the vocation of an information organ in the overall strategy of Mozambican information.

NOTICIAS will no longer be published on Sundays and will be the new owner of the weekly DOMINGO, which will start publication on 27 September.

Meanwhile, an agreement signed yesterday afternoon between the director of NOTICIAS and the director of the new DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE established the co-management of the weekly DOMINGO.

PORTUGUESE SCHOOL PLANNED--The establishment of an international Portuguese primary school for the children of cooperants and former residents is planned in Mozambique. The implementation of this project, which had already been approved by the Mozambican Ministry of Culture and Education, has been entrusted to a Portuguese organizing commission ensuring the connection with the Portuguese Embassy in Maputo and in turn with the Lisbon government. An important first step has already been taken by proceeding to a census of prospective candidates for this school. It was found that over 1,500 such candidates exist around the country, with most of them residing in Maputo or in Beira, and going from nursery school through the last year of secondary education. It was announced that through the efforts of the above commission and of the Portuguese ambassador in Maputo, the Portuguese Ministry of Education has agreed to send a technical commission to Mozambique to study the question. NEW TETE AIRPORT--The inauguration of the new installations at the Tete airport will take place within a few days. The new installations will make possible increased traffic and improved accommodations. Improvements at this airport include a new and bigger terminal, a new lighting system for the runways, as well as radio assistance for incoming traffic. The heavy traffic registered at the Tete improvised terminal for some time has created numerous problems for the users of Mozambican Airlines. The lack of lighting on runways has resulted in the postponement of various flights, since aircraft cannot land at this airport after sundown. Work on the new installations started about 6 years ago, but a number of difficulties delayed the completion of the installations. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Sep 81 p 8]

POSSIBLE FINNISH ECONOMIC AID--Maputo, 2 Oct (AFP)--Finland has no investments in South Africa and wants to help Mozambique develop economically, visiting Finnish Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola has told local reporters here. The Mozambican News Agency quoted Mr Rekola as saying his country was interested in agriculture and livestock, fertilizer production, and increasing production of sugar, timber, furniture and paper. So far, Finland has helped Mozambique through projects financed jointly by the Scandinavian countries, rather than bilaterally. The most recent project was a million-dollar contribution to a coal mining project at Tete. Mr Rekola, who arrived here last Monday with a party of 23 Finnish businessmen, said Finland was looking into the possibility of helping to finance the modernization of the port of Nacala as well as a new lighting system for the airports at Maputo and Beira. SOUTH-WEST AFRICA TELEVISION SERVICE TRANSMITS--The South-West African Broadcasting Corporation [SWABC] will have its first official television transmissions tomorrow evening. The chairman of the SWABC board, Mr (?Piet Becker), says that for manpower and financial reasons, the service will be limited initially to the Windhoek and Oshakati areas. Because the service has to provide for a variety of peoples, he said, programs will reflect as far as possible the activities of each particular community. IMPOSSIBLE TO SELL APARTHEID--The chairman of the minister's council in South-West Africa, Mr Dirk Mudge, says although he believes, the Americans are serious and sincere about resolving the South-West African issue, he cannot say all the problems have now been solved. In an interview with Radio South Africa Mr Mudge said he had two demands: He wanted fair elections and he wanted the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance to be in a position where it could win an election. He said it was not possible to win an election against SWAPO while people who lived under an outdated system had still to be satisfied. He said it was simply not possible to sell Apartheid to the majority of voters in the territory. Mr Mudge said, and we quote: while we are saddled with the problems we cannot accept an election because then we may not win it. Mr Mudge has favored constitutional guarantees but he wanted to (?know) who was going to provide such guarantees, and more significantly, who was going to import them. Such guarantees made by the United States would not persuade his party to take unnecessary and uncalculated risks. The leader of the Democratic Turnhale Alliance, Dr Ben Africa, said he believes that if the present American-led initiative should lead to a settlement, difficulties would mount in the future. He regarded the present initiative as one of the best ever. Dr Africa said the United States now has a reasonably strong hold on South Africa, and if the South African Government did not deliver the goods, as he put it, the Americans were in a position to bring pressure to bear. PROPOSAL TO DIVIDE DEPARTMENT CRITICIZED

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 13 Aug 81 p 3

/Article: "Rightist Proposal To Create Two Departments in Our Country: an Economic Error, an Administrative Error, a Political Ploy to be Fought" /

/Text/ Over the past few days, through interviews or other means, the leaders of the reactionary Right, with Pierre Lagourgue among them, have returned to the charge with their plan to create two departments in Reunion. We have already denounced this plan, which has more to do with political maneuvering than with concern for the real development of our country.

Today we must review every aspect of this proposal, because it is, firstly, an economic error that turns its back on Reunion's development; secondly, an administrative error, which does not correspond to the present evolution of our country; lastly, it is a political maneuver, intended to counter change and maintain the Right in power in Reunion.

The outcome of 35 years of rightist integration policy within the departmentalization structures is that now we have in Reunion a completely dislocated and unbalanced economy. The policy applied by the Right has caused agriculture to regress constantly year after year, while the industrial sector (essentially construction) has stagnated.

Alongside that, we have seen the tertiary sector develop until it amounts to 80 percent of our country's Gross Domestic Product (PIB).

What has to be seen is that within the tertiary sector, it is government service that occupies the largest place.

Particularly during the past 20 years, we have witnessed the development of a bureacracy related to government service, concentrated particularly in the capital, Saint-Denis.

It is the ill-considered development of the tertiary sector that has led to such imbalances in Reunion's economy. To that must be added a revenue policy that has sanctioned the ever-growing chasm between the private sector and the public sector.

The Right's plan to create two departments in our country will have the concrete effect of strengthening the tertiary sector, the development of government services with departmental civil servants, regional civil servants, and state civil servants as well!

For, as Lagourgue recognizes (unintentionally?), it will be necessary to "double the existing departmental services," that is to say, there will be essentially administrative jobs created.

It is thus plain to see that this plan of the Right's frankly turns its back on any real development in Reunion. Our country's development today requires absolutely that credit and investment priority go to production, to producers, and to the most disadvantaged masses of the people.

The Right's plan to create two departments in our country is therefore an economic error.

The creation of two departments in Reunion would only divide the country artificially on the administrative level. Such administrative division is completely artificial and gratuitous in so small a territory, but especially so in view of the development of communications among the various regions of the island. The division of our country into districts might still have been understandable in the days when the communications network, particularly roads, was less developed. Administrative splitting of Reunion into two departments is therefore completely anachronistic today.

In this too, it can be seen that two departments in Reunion would be something not only artificial but totally inappropriate as well.

There remains, finally, the political aspect of the rightist plan to divide our country and create two departments here. It is even the essential,basic aspect of the Right's plan in our country.

And one cannot help recalling what Martin Darene, a spokesman for the Right, wrote in the JIR [JOURNAL DE L'ILE DE LA REUNION] at the time when this "idea" of creating two departments first appeared. Martin Darene said, specifically, that the division of Reunion into two departments is "a bizarre idea."

Yet farther on he pointed out the advantage to the Right of our country's being divided into two departments.

It is supposed to happen, under the circumstances, as a way of obstructing the PCR [Reunion Communist Party]... and Martin Darene brought out the full meaning of the political operation against the PCR.

So this, then, is the essential goal sought by the Right in its fight against the Left, against change and development in Reunion.

The Right wants to turn change in Reunion to its own account.

It wants to preserve its own political positions by dividing our country into two departments, in the hope of controlling one of the assemblies. Thus it will be able to oppose and hinder any change in Reunion favoring real development of our country.

To realize its ultimate goal, the Right wants to revive the political cliques that formed during the last legislative elections with certain Reunion Socialist Federation leaders and candidates. The Right in Reunion, with Lagourgue at its head, thus hopes to gain the support of these socialist leaders for its plan to divide into two departments, from which,of course, both sides would derive advantages.

At present, according to the statements of one or another of them, there are indeed convergences on this plan between the Right and certain socialist leaders in Reunion.

Each side would perhaps derive advantages from this operation, but the workers, the unemployed, the planters, and all those who want change and development of Reunion at all costs certainly would not.

The plan of the Right and certain socialist leaders is thus nothing more than a new political maneuver against the PCR; a maneuver that again is related to political ploys.

The maneuver must be made to fail. This is a time for unity among Reunion leftist forces to beat the Right still in power in our country.

We have important elections ahead of us. So no hope must be given to the Right. That is what Paul Vergues stressed on television on Friday evening to tens of thousands of Reunion men and women.

To make the political maneuver of the Right fail, the alliance of certain socialist federation leaders with the Right must be broken off.

PDS LEADER CONDEMNS ACTIONS AGAINST PARTY

[Text] Paris, 28 Sep (AFP)--Senegalese Democratic Party(PDS) Secretary General Abdoulaye Wade on Monday in Paris condemned the political machinations mounted in Senegal against his party, particularly the arrest of several of his supporters.

In a press conference, Mr Wade denied accusations of subversion made against his party and said he believed that this was engineered by a group of individuals close to the government or to the Senegalese Socialist Party, whose objective is the disappearance of the PDS.

Mr Wade reaffirmed: We have never thought of taking over power through force. Since the PDS was created in 1974, it has always carried out its activities within the framework of the constitution in order to achieve power democratically, he said. He urged that this supporters be treated according to the law, which does not now seem to be the case.

Mr Wade added: We have been accused of possessing firearms. But in spite of numerous searches, no arms have been found in our possession and none will be found, because we have never acquired any. The PDS leader then stated that he had never been informed of the visit to Libya by several of his supporters.

Mr Wade also indicated that he recently went to Tripoli after the event of the gulf of Sidra where two Libyan planes were shot down by two U.S. planes. He declared that the PDS, which considered this a provocation, had to express its solidarity with Libya.

According to Mr Wade, Senegal is now facing a democratic deadlock. The ruling socialist party does not want any change of regime and wants only small parties to exist because they will not pose any threat to it.

The PDS secretary general, who plans to return to Senegal, indicated that if truly democratic elections were held, his party would accede to national responsibilities.

FORMAL TIES WITH GAMBIA OPPOSED--Dakar, 1 Oct (AFP)--Senegal's opposition People's Democratic Movement (MDP) said here yesterday it disapproved of a confederation with Gambia proposed by Gambian leader Dawda Jawara after Senegalese troops in August crushed an attempted coup against him. The MDP, a socialist self-management party headed by former Premier Mamadou Dia, said the confederation would be the result of force of arms. It would pose political and technical problems concerning monetary zones and freedom of movement, and would also increase Senegal's burdens inopportunely at a time when it was itself already faced with serious economic and financial problems, the party said. On internal affairs, the MDP condemned police raids in the past few weeks on members of another opposition group, the Democratic Party (Labor-Oriented). The authorities' action amounted to political terrorism, the MDP charged. [Excerpt] [AB010810 Paris AFP in English 0718 GMT 1 Oct 81]

PARTY MEMBERS HELD SECRETLY, TORTURED--Dakar, 26 Sep (AFP)--A Senegalese opposition party charged yesterday that eight of its members were being held by authorities in a secret place and were being tortured. The allegation came from the Labour-Oriented Democratic Party. Its national secretariat here issued a communique saying the eight were among 33 party militants rounded up since 12 September for questioning in an investigation into anti-state activities. It said the other 25 were free on probation. The arrests have been made in swoops around the country during which police searched the homes of party leaders to try to find weapons and documents showing the party was financed from abroad. Results of the raids have not yet been officially disclosed. The Justice Ministry has said only that the arrests followed serious revelations by a party worker accused of involvement in a fraud case. ARRESTS OF PDS MEMBERS--Dakar, September 17--Some 15 members of the Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS) have been rounded up by security forces in the last week, a PDS source said here. Member of Parliament and party official Boubacar Sall told AFP that about 10 party officials had been arrested in the Tambacunda (east), Diourbel (north-central) and the northern Fleuve (river) regions. The arrests followed those of five supporters and aides of PDS Secretary-General Abdoulaye Wade. Mr Sall said the operations were part of a hunt for arms. Gendarmes had searched Mr Wade's home and also that of another PDS leader, Alassane Sissoko. Mr Wade is currently in France. No official explanation has been given for the operations against the left-leaning PDS, which has 14 seats in Parliament. The Assembly is controlled by the party of President Abdou Diouf. (A.F.P.) DIAMA DAM CONSTRUCTION--Dakar, September 15--Work is finally to begin in November on one of the two major dam projects planned by the Senegal River Development Organisation (OMVS), its secretariat announced here on Monday. It is the dam at Diama upstream in Northern Senegal. Three French and two Spanish firms have contracted to build the dam within 57 months at the latest, it was stated. The OMVS groups Senegal, Mali and Mauritania. Another dam is scheduled at Manantali in Mali. The Diama scheme, costed at some 80 million dollars, is designed to halt the flow of salt water from the Atlantic up the Senegal River. It is also expected to provide irrigation for 42,000 hectares of farmland and to maintain the water levels of Lake Guier in Senegal and Lake Rkiz in Mauritania. The dam will carry a road linking Senegal's northern port of St. Louis with the Mauritania capital Nouakchott. Financiers of the scheme are France, Saudi Arabia, the African Development Bank, Kuwait, Abu Dhabi, the European Common Market and the U.N. Development Programme. (A.F.P.) LIQUID CHEMICAL INDUSTRIAL BUSINESS TO BE SET UP

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 16 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Article by Lans Joe Sesay]

[Text] A new industry costing nearly three million leones (Le3m) is to be set up in Freetown by BP Sierra Leone, a fully owned subsidiary of British Petroleum.

In addition to plastic containers manufacturing, the new industry which is due to be formally opened in November will also be turning out liquid chemicals covering bleach, detergents, synthetic starch, mixed acid and glue.

Already, nearly Le300,000 has been put so far into the construction of industry at Ross Road and Le2.1m is in the pipeline for the import of raw materials.

BP hopes that the new industry--seen as a slight shift from its main stream of petroleum marketing, will help conserve much-needed foreign exchange by cutting down on imports and stimulate "made-in-Sierra Leone" competition.

According to BP's Marketing Manager, Mr B. E. Olu-Harding, the new industry will have its own management and maintain a modest staff of about 60.

Mr Olu-Harding revealed that because the petroleum business is not "expanding," BP also plans to go into agro-industries.

All being well, BP will, in the near future, be producing fertilisers to help cushion this country's acute food shortages.

Last year, BP recorded a sharp drop in net profit from Le58m in 1979 to just Le51 in 1980.

BP has been doing business in Sierra Leone for the past 30 years. It parent body in London--BP International--has recently bought majority shares of our diamonds business.

ARMS SEIZED--A number of persons are helping the police in their investigations following the discovery of a considerable amount of arms and ammunition in Freetown. A release from State House disclosed yesterday that the arms and ammunition were discovered within the last few days. They include Belgian made 97 millimetre pistols; .44 magnum new model revolvers; .22 telescopic sights rifles, short guns and a haul of cartridges. The weapons are described by experts as a sophisticated kind. The .22 telescopic sights rifle is particularly lethal as it increases the accuracy of a sniper even when the targeted object is hundreds of yards away. The .44 magnum revolver is also described as a most dangerous weapon which can drill big holes in targeted objects. It also uses, according to the experts, a special type of cartridge made from a particular type of metal which tears and rips into its target when fired. INTERNATIONAL YOUTH CONFERENCE--The International Conference of the Leaders of Youth Organisations from Afro-Asian and Latin American countries has ended in Baku, Soviet Union. The APC National Youth League was represented at this year's conference by the Press Officer in the Office of the First Vice-President, Mr J. I. Koroma and the League's Permanent Representative to the World Federation of Democratic Youth in Budapest, Hungary, Mr Michael Barnett. During the conference, Mr Koroma presented two papers: Youth, Peace and Development and the Role of the Mass Media in Youth Education. In the first paper, Mr Koroma said that peace and development were the inseparable element because development could only be achieved in an atmosphere of peace within a country. He said that a greater percentage of the world's working population were youths and therefore their part in national development was second to none. MINISTER URGES CONSOLIDATION OF MOZAMBICAN RELATIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Sep 81 p 5

[Text]

FOREIGN Affairs Minister Salim Ahmed Salim has called upon the students of the Dar es Salaam-based Tanzania-Mozambique Centre for Foreign Relations to further consolidate the existing friendly relations between the two Frontline States and other progressive nations of the world.

Ndugu Salim made the call yesterday morning when officially launching the centre's 1981/82 academic year, with a total intake of 21 students — three from Mozambique, five from Namibia and 13 from Tanzania.

He said the centre had a unique role and that it was an effective instrument of promoting the existing friendship between the two countries.

Ndugu Salim also emphasized the need for the trainees at the centre to be fully equipped academically because, he said, one could not be an effective diplomat if his or her knowledge was poor.

"Before one can be regarded as an effective diplomat he or she should have a broad knowledge of their own country," said the Foreign Affairs minister.

He said diplomats should make it their habit to be informed and have analytical minds on various events taking place in the world. They should also be able to interpret various international issues, he pointed out.

Ndugu Salim was hopeful that by the time the students complete their one-year course they would have increased their academic ability to enable them to comprehend and interpret the various international affairs.

Earlier, Ndugu Salim held discussions with the lectures of the centre on various issues of mutual interest.

Asked to comment on his proposed candidacy for the post of UN Secretary-General during discussions with the students, Ndugu Salim said he was pleased with the overwhelming support of the Organisation of African Unity.

The centre's 1981/82 academic year started a month ago and it is the fourth since the centre was founded in 1978. The first academic year (1978/79) enrolled 23 students — eight from Mozambique and the rest from Tanzania.

The following academic year (1979/80) there were 21 students seven of whom were Mozambicans and the rest Tanzanians. In the last academic year (1980/81) there were 30 students enrolled — seven from Mozambique, five from Namibia and 13 from Tanzania.

During the one year course at the centre, the students study among other subjects international law, politics and international relations, international organisations, diplomatic and consular practices, political thought and languages (French, Portuguese and English).

NIGERIAN EDUCATION COMMITTEE'S IMPRESSIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE four-man Nigeria Senate Committee for Education which was in the country for a week-long study tour, left for home yesterday morning.

Delegation leader Ndugu D.O. Oke, said before departure that it was impressed by Tanzania's education system.

Ndugu Oke said that with little available resources, Tanzania had managed to formulate a clear education system which "we could study in a short time".

He also said that the study programme by the Ministry of National Education enabled members of the team to learn a lot, especially on education for self-reliance.

During the tour, the Nigerians visited several academic institutions, including the University, Adult Education, Institute, Technical College, Institute of Education, Chang'ombe Vocational Training Centre — all in the city.

The committee also paid courtesy calls to National Education Minister, Ndugu T. Siwale, the Speaker, Ndugu Adam Sapi and the University Vice-Chancellor, Ndugu N. Kuhanga.

Other members of the delegation were Ndugu U.A. Dambatta, Chief S.O. Sogbein and Ndugu O.M. Falade.

IRAQI TRAINING FOR JUWATA

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE Iraqi trade union will train officials of the Tanzania Workers' Union (JUWATA) under an agreement reached recently in Dar es Salaam.

A copy of the agreement made available by the JUWATA headquarters in Dar es Salaam yesterday said two workers from JUWATA would study at the workers cultural institute in Baghdad.

The agreement was reached after talks between a JUWATA side led by the Deputy Secretary General, Ndugu Shaanab Mloo and a delegation from the General Federation of Trade Union of Iraq (GFTU) led by Secretary General Ndugu Fadhil Mahmood Garoeb.

The two sides stressed the need to consolidate fraternal relations between the two trade unions in education, culture and exchange of delegations for the interests of the people of the two countries.

During the talks, the delegations also condemned the vicious air raids on Iraqi nuclear installations by zionist Israel.

According to the communique issued after the talks which were held last week, the two sides also agreed to extend unlimited full support to the people of Palestine in their struggle for the restoration of their homeland.

"Both sides rejected the Camp David accords and all zionist-imperialist attempts aimed at liquidating the Palestinian cause and Palestinian people", the communique said.

MINISTER NOTES TERMS OF ALGERIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Details of Agreement

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

TANZANIA will sell to Algeria agricultural and industrial goods worth more than 600 million/- this financial year, according to an Algeria-Tanzania trade agreement reached in Algiers last week.

This was revealed in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, on his return from a one-week visit to Algeria where he led a six-member trade delegation.

He said Algeria would buy from Tanzania 20,000 tonnes of coffee worth 500 million/-, 500 tonnes of tobacco worth about 10 million/-, sisal and cotton — whose tonnage would be communicated to Tanzania next week — and other agricultural products including cardamom, and industrial products.

Ndugu Mchumo said Algeria would sell Tanzania sanitary ware worth about 10 million/-, packing papers also worth about 10 million/- and wine.

He explained that arrangements had been made to enable Tanzania, apart from importing Algerian wine for a proposed diplomatic shop, to become Algeria's wine agent in East, Central and Southern Africa.

The diplomatic shop, which is expected to start operating at the end of this year, will be located in the ground floor of the newly-built Tanzania Development Finance Company Limited (TDFL) building opposite Tanganyika Motors in Dar es Salaam he said.

Ndugu Mchumo said Algeria had showed great interest in increasing bilateral trade. "It is thus important that we increase our agricultural and industrial production so that we capture this market offered to us, he said.

The Minister further said that the Tanzania team held talks with Algerian Ministers of Natural Resources, Manpower, Industries, Energy and Agriculture.

He said Algeria was prepared to train any number of Tanzania technical experts and was interested in learning about wildlife development from Tanzania.

Step Toward Increased Third World Trade

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 6 Sep 81 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

FOR quite a long time now, Algeria and Tanzania though separated by a vast distance, have been enjoying very close ties. Sharing a common ideological outlook, the two countries have acted in unison in many an international fora.

Of late, bilateral ties have taken an even better turn, with the two countries working out mutually advantageous trade and economic arrangements in a true spirit of collective reliance.

Although both Algeria and Tanzania belong to the group of developing countries, each of them has areas of skill and expertise that can and should be tapped to each other's benefit.

It is thus heartening that Algeria has, for instance, offered Tanzania assistance in the energy sector because the former country has a vast wealth of resources and experience in the field.

The bilateral economic ties are still growing. Not only have Algeria and Tanzania established institutional framework for developing closer economic and trade links.

But periodically there have also been welcome announcements of practical deals. This is the context in which the latest Algeria-Tanzania trade agreement must be seen.

Yesterday, Minister of Trade Ali Mchumo announced, upon arrival from Algiers, that Tanzania will export to Algeria agricultural and industrial goods worth 600 million/- this financial year.

In turn, Tanzania will import from Algeria sanitary ware, packing paper and wine and will also become agent for fine Algerian wine in Eastern, Central and Southern Africa.

The finalisation of the trade agreement and the commitment to even increased co-operation in other spheres are matters of pride for the two countries.

The growing bilateral ties are but a step towards a greater goal — increased trade among the Third World — and a bridge to collective self-reliance among the world's poor countries.

For far too long have individual developing countries looked to the developed world for trade deals that have hardly favoured the poor.

Algeria and Tanzania are, albeit modestly, showing that it is viable for the world's poor to exchange resources, skills and experiences without the intervention of international middlemen.

DPRK-AIDED AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH CENTER PLANNED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 7 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE Non-Aligned food and agriculture symposium held at Pyongyang, in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) has resolved to form an agricultural research centre in Tanzania to cater for the central, eastern, and southern African region, the Seychelles Minister of State responsible for Agriculture, Ndugu Karl A Saint Ange, has said.

Speaking yesterday at Dar es Salaam airport in transit to The Seychelles, Ndugu Ange said the centre would be set up through the assistance of DPRK.

Ndugu Ange returning from the five-day meeting in Pyongyang, said that judging from the DPRK experience, maize production in Tanzania could increase tremendously after the institute is set up.

While in DPRK, ministers of agriculture from Non-Aligned countries visited various regions and saw cooperative rice farms of between 20,000 and 30,000 hectares, producing an average of eight tons per hectare.

The minister was optimistic over benefits to be accrued from the proposed research centre "as long as people in the region are united and recognised the need for food self-sufficiency".

"The trouble with African countries is that they have practised individualism for too long and all we need to do is discard this habit. The Korean people have made great strides in agriculture because they hold a strong purpose of unity", he observed.

The Tanzanian minister for agriculture, Ndugu Joseph Mungai, who also attended the symposium is expected back home this week.

GOVERNMENT 'GETTING WEAKER' IN CONTROLLING EXPENDITURE

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 13 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

EVIDENCE available shows that our Government is getting weaker and weaker in controlling its own expenditure and in ensuring proper utilisation of funds allocated by Parliament. This is one area calling for urgent attention.

When addressing the armed forces rally in Dar es Salaam on July 20 this year, President Nyerere pointed out some of the internal factors which contribute to the worsening of our country's economic position.

Poor pricing policy of agricultural commodities coupled with poor a transportation system and, by implication, poor control of government expenditure were among the internal factors cited by the President.

The President stressed the need to control government expenditure and to stick to limits approved by Parliament. The problem is how to do it; whether there is enough financial discipline in the Civil Service and if there is not, how to bring it about.

Over the years, the controller and Auditor-General has persistently pointed out in his annual reports that large sums of public funds including fixed assets have been either stolen, misappropriated and or unaccounted for.

Let alone failure by some ministries and regions to submit their accounts in time for audit so that government accounts have always been in arrears, detection of mismanagement of public funds is in arrears too.

For the audited accounts 244.02 million/- were either unaccounted for or lacked adequate supporting documents in 1977/78. The figure soared to 488.86 million/- in 1978/79.

As for theft in 1976/77, 9,038,278/- were lost. The figure rose to 10,342,843/- in 1977/78 and 17,882,609/- in 1978/79.

Other property stolen (stores plus inventory) was valued at 7,688,313/- in 1976/77, 32,546,051/- in 1977/78 and 13,689,840/- in 1978/79.

Imprest and advances unaccounted for were 60.72 million/- in 1977/78, shooting up to 85.86 million/- in 1978/79. We do not know yet how much was stolen and unaccounted for in 1979/80.

Even the figures so far quoted do not show the whole picture since many accounts were not available for audit during the respective periods.

The Government cannot be allowed to get away with this kind of situation. We would not like to see our pockets drained through direct or indirect taxes, so that what we pay ends up being misused.

Efforts by the Auditor-General and the Parliamentary Public Accounts Committee to press Government for remedial measures have so far yielded no fruitful results. Our Party may wish to critically take this matter as it has with the parastatals.

In this regard, the Chairman of CCM and the CCM Central Committee may wish to put to task the President and the Government on the state of financial mismanagement in the Civil Service.

Another area of waste of public funds is in the determination and allocation of resources and poor implementation of projects.

For example, after the Party pronouncement on Siasa ni Kilimo in 1974 — the Iringa Resolution which stressed, inter alia, the need to develop irrigation schemes — what followed almost immediately after that was indiscriminate allocation of funds to all the regions in Tanzania Mainland for "Kilimo cha Kiangazi", regardless of whether or not there existed concrete irrigation schemes in the various regions.

Small wonder therefore that when the Minister of Agriculture was answering a question in Parliament two years ago, he was unable to state whether or not monies spent so far on Kilimo cha Kiangazi had produced any concrete or positive results.

One can only conclude that no proper irrigation schemes existed and that some of the funds were diverted to other uses in places where such schemes never existed.

Let us hope that the recently announced national irrigation plan and its institutionalisation will save the nation from future financial losses.

Funds allocation to regions must be made strictly against concrete and well conceived irrigation scheme — small or big — not against hazy plans or anticipated schemes. After all, we really do not have money to waste.

Another example which shows how much the country loses heavily not only in terms of local currency but also in terms of foreign exchange, is the arrival of new plants and machinery for new projects which have hardly left the drawing board.

Due to prolonged delay in the completion of factory buildings and inadequate storage facilities, the machinery is spoiled beyond even repair. Heavens know how many millions of shillings have been wasted this way. Solution to this problem lies in proper project implementation.

In any case, it is less costly to wait for arrival of machinery and other equipment when factory buildings and other necessary installations are ready than it is the other way round.

There is now an out-cry for mechanisation of agriculture — by replacing the hoe with a tractor. Let us hope the lessons of the past have been taken seriously. Many tractors had been bought in the past for agricultural purpose. Most of them died soon after arrival because of poor maintenance brought about by poor or lack of skilled mechanics in rural areas.

Now there is an added excuse which can always be used — that is lack of spare parts. Solution lies in training rural mechanics to attend to the tractor. Villages which do not have village mechanics should not be allocated with a tractor even if they have the money to buy one.

Of course, a group of villages can join together to establish a common workshop and share the few mechanics that may be around. In the past, mention had been made of the need to establish such service centres to cater for several villages but no progress is seen to have been made along these lines.

Indiscriminate distribution of tractors must be condemned. Our politicians at local level particularly will have a leading role to play in making the necessary preparations before a tractor comes to a village.

Let us now forget that economic viability of a tractor is based on large-scale farming. And successful large-scale farming depends also on manuring, irrigation, and extra weeding. For the tractor only breaks the land and this is not enough. Those using oxen ploughs should be encouraged to do so and others be brought into it. It is by far cheaper to maintain an oxen plough than a tractor.

The President also stressed on the socialist importance of the social consumption fund which is used to provide essential social infrastructure to as many people as possible.

No socialist can dispute the importance of this fund and the need to swell it up. But we have to look for the sources of funding.

Milk is an essential food substance. We need it for the health of our children and for our own. But milk comes from a cow and that cow must be properly fed in order to produce enough milk. If we want more milk, we shall need more cows and so on.

In the same manner, the social fund for our health services, water and education comes from the production sector of our economy — that is the cow. If we want funds out of it we have to feed properly that sector. And if we want more, then we have to expand the sector — invest in it. If a cow is not properly fed, the milk will dry up and the cow will eventually die.

In the same way, if the production sector is not maintained, social funds will run out and eventually the sector will die too. We need no foreigner to teach us this simple truth.

No one can deny the fact that for a long time the country has had its priorities in this vital area of production vis-a-vis consumption upside down except for the nice production slogans.

Foreign grants and donations have contributed to this lopsidedness. Most of our health services have been developed through foreign grants and donations. But unfortunately, the foreign donor does not generate local funds for recurrent expenditure on these services. The local funds must come from the local production sector. And once the services have been established they have to be kept running and maintained properly.

So the Government finds itself confronted with a choice between production and consumption. Money that should have gone into production will now have to go into the health services which were initiated by foreign grants.

The same problem is with education and with water. The Government wanted all Tanzanians to have adequate water supply by the year 1981. We have not gone very far in this area, because of a weak economic base. And if we based the programme on foreign grants, that will be at the danger of ruining further the weak economic base, for we will be called upon to finance the recurrent expenditure part of the programme. This means diverting more resources from the production sector to the consumption sector.

The same argument could be applied though to a limited extent to some of the economic infrastructures — proposed tarmac roads, the Dodoma Capital projects whose foundation can only be the production sector not foreign grants.

So the problem as I see it, is not as difficult as that of the chicken and egg puzzle. One cannot eat nothing. He has to produce first before he can eat it. Fortunately, the Government has over that past few years practically seen the light, just as it has of late seen the truth about the importance of foreign exchange.

In the past, we used to sing the song that whatever we produce we must first eat to our satisfaction, and only if there is surplus left shall we sell for export. We were foolish.

Now we are saying whatever we produce we will eat only a little and the rest be sold outside to earn us foreign exchange which we need for our continued survival. Now we have become wise. Thanks to God but it took us too long a time to see the truth.

Production first; consumption afterwards.

MINISTER OPENS THREE-DAY MEETING ON WORKERS' WELFARE

Minister's Speech

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 15 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text] PUBLIC and private employers have been asked to liaise with the Tanzania Workers Organisation (JUWATA) to chart a strategy for increased productivity.

They should then go further to determine whether workers deserve salary increases or bonuses.

Labour and Social Welfare Minister Alfred Tandau said the task should not be left wholly in government hands.

He was speaking in Morogoro yesterday, at the opening of a three-day meeting on workers' welfare. Participants include government representatives as well as those of employers and workers.

The minister directed however that before effecting salary increases or bonus, employers should enter into a voluntary contract with JUWATA. The contracts must, however, be passed by the Permanent Labour Tribunal, he said.

Ndugu Tandau said such contracts must stress the following:

- Explain clearly the present state of the firm's productivity;
- Define the various obstacles to the firm's increased productivity including costs of production or services.
- Point out in detail steps to be taken in combating the obstacles.
- Chart out new targets of production or service and
- Clearly explain the new working scheme, salary increases and other working conditions.

The minister stressed that the new policy on productivity, income and prices, whose main aim was to give better incentives to workers as part of the drive to boost productivity, should be strictly implemented by all employers.

Ndugu Tandau said although the country was facing many problems some of which had direct impact on the welfare of employers and workers, poor productivity in industries and offices was an endemic problem whose solution must be sought collectively by the government, employers and workers themselves.

He called on the meeting, jointly organised by JUWATA and the Association of Tanganyika Employers (ATE), to discuss deeply the question of "voluntary contracts" that would be reached between employers and JUWATA as a means of increasing salaries and other work incentives.

He reminded that since productivity essentially meant increased efficiency in work, "it is during the time of preparing the contracts that obstacles to work efficiency will be defined and ways of combating them sought".

Ndugu Tandau described the meeting, which he hoped would from now on be an annual event as "important and historic" because it was the first of its kind to bring together the three main "powers of production" — government, employers and workers.

He hoped that the meeting would foster co-operation between the three "powers" so that together they could solve most of the glaring problems facing the country and thereby building a sound economic base for the country.

Workers, Managers 'Partners in Production'

[Editorial]

[Text] IN a socialist economy, workers and managers should always regard each other as partners in production in the struggle to build a dynamic economy. In Tanzania this basic requirement was realised as early as 1970 when the Presidential Directive on Workers' Participation in management was issued.

The directive emphasises the idea of collective management of public enterprises within the context of the country's struggle to promote and consolidate socialist objectives.

As such, the performance of our economic and service-oriented institutions depends heavily on the standard of industrial harmony we strive to create and maintain. This harmony is rooted in workers and management interrelationship. This too depends on frank exchange of views and experiences between the two parties.

Given proper work environment, and proper co-operation and support from their leaders and colleagues, the majority of Tanzanian workers have amply demonstrated that they are capable of accepting more responsibility in implementing the Nation's development objectives.

Easy communication of ideas and information between workers and all levels of managers should, therefore, be stressed because it has the effect of improving the quality and quantity of goods produced.

Workers participation is not something to be afraid of. It calls for, and stands for industrial discipline which is necessary at all times in any economic or social enterprise whether publicly or privately owned.

Indeed, true industrial discipline does not exclude the workers in an industry from participation in decision-making in the enterprise or from a responsibility for its improvement.

But true discipline in a work-place cannot easily be achieved if the workers do not understand what they are doing and why they are doing it.

Thus, the concept of workers education which is a crucial component of the principle of workers' participation in management has to be strictly adhered to. Properly educated workers are a big asset to an establishment because they work with full consciousness in an effort to implement the nation's development objectives.

It is in the light of the above that the Minister for Labour and Social Welfare, Ndugu Alfred Tandau, has urged workers councils to strive for democracy and emphasise workers participation at work places in order to boost production of goods and services.

Officially inaugurating the Tanzania Posts and Telecommunications Corporation master workers council in Dar es Salaam on Sunday, the Minister also called upon the councils to represent ideas of all workers and not those of council members only.

"Unless they (the workers) are kept well informed on various matters concerning the corporation, they will fail to contribute anything towards the corporation", he said.

It is important to stress that workers and managers should always respect work. For it is meaningless, indeed useless, for a worker or manager to expect to be rewarded without contributing anything that is beneficial to the economy.

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERING ACTION AGAINST STEEL COMPANY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 14 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The Government is considering action against the Dar es Salaam-based Coastal Steel Industries for its involvement in real estate speculation, the Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development, Ndugu Mustafa Nyang'anyi, said in the city at the weekend.

Coastal Steel Industries, a 1976 locally registered business firm with non-citizen owners, is linked with houses that have mushroomed at the "Baobab Village" which stands on plot number 1259 at the Msasani Peninsula in Dar es Salaam.

The Minister told the Daily News that his Ministry was liaising with the Ministries of Home Affairs and Foreign Affairs and the Attorney-General's Chambers on the matter.

He said Coastal Steel Industries, which was offered plot number 1259, sub-divided it into 26 plots--from 1259A to 1259B--and started building houses on them.

Upon learning this, he said, the Ministry became suspicious, summoned the owner of the company, one Nicola Colangela, and demanded explanation on the ownership of the houses and the right of occupancy over the sub-divided plots.

Responding, Colangela, equipped with documents on plot and house ownership, told the Ministry that the houses were owned by 26 Coastal Steel Industries' subsidiaries, four of which were an embassy.

Ndugu Nyang'anyi said "The mention of an embassy as a subsidiary of a company made my Ministry more suspicious about the affairs of Coastal Steel Industries.

"After a lot of discussion, Colangela left behind in the ministry the file containing his documents. He has not returned since," he added.

He said that when summoned, Coastal Steel Industries General Manager Richard Schneiter said he did not know anything about the houses at the Msasani Peninsula.

The Daily News has found out that Nicola Colangelo, of La Spezia in Italy, left Dar es Salaam early this year for Paris via Nairobi where he owns shares in an Italian firm--Ital Fabric.

soon after, his wife, who was staying in house 1259A, left for Nairobi to join her husband. The couple has not come back.

Early this year, this newspaper discovered that apart from the 26 houses on plot number 1259, Coastal Steel Industries had 24 other plots in the same area with completed and half-completed houses and undeveloped land.

On the ten-acre plot number 1259, houses--marked S, F, Q, and E--belong to an embassy in Dar es Salaam. Of the twenty-six houses on the sub-divided plots, only these four have title deeds.

MINISTER ASKS INSTITUTE TO TRAIN ADULT EDUCATION EXPERTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 14 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Text] The Institute of Adult Education in Dar es Salaam has been urged to train enough experts to conduct adult education programmes in public institutions.

The call was made by Manpower Development Minister Abel Mwanga who also appealed to parastatals and government ministries to sponsor their workers for training at the Institute.

Speaking at the Institute's third graduation ceremony at the weekend, Ndugu Mwanga emphasised the importance of informal education, explaining that attaining a diploma heralded endless avenues of learning.

The Institute which started ten years ago has so far trained 410 diploma holders, of which 341 are men. It has also, trained 24,121 primary school teachers off-campus.

The Minister observed that most adults had passed the third and fourth stages in literacy education, adding that the Institute should widen its scope to accommodate the ensuing advanced needs.

He praised the Institute for its initiative in promoting national development campaigns and urged that more efforts should be made to educate the people on the intentions and advantages of government campaigns.

The Institute, he said, had commendably publicised the Mtu ni Afya (man is health) campaign, and was now educating the people on the importance of afforestation.

"Such campaigns by the Institute are echoed to the remotest areas of the country which are not easily reached because of communication problems," he said.

He added that this made the Institute a vital channel for accelerating development activities.

TECHNICIAN TRAINING PLANS REVEALED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 15 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] The Acting Minister for Labour and Social Welfare, Ndugu Stephen Kibona, yesterday told the visiting Nigerian delegation that the Ministry had plans for launching programmes to develop middle level technicians throughout the country in the next twenty years, according to Shihata.

Ndugu Kibona, who is also Deputy Minister for Defence and National Service, told the Nigerians that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare would establish a vocational training centre in every mainland district, under the 20-year plan which commenced this year.

He said the centres to be built at district headquarters, would train primary school leavers as well as farmers in different skills. The programme would be sponsored by the Danish government, he added.

The Deputy Minister also said that the ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, in collaboration with the Ministry of Defence and National Service, would launch a programme under which national servicemen would be sent to villages to help train villagers in carpentry, animal husbandry, and agriculture.

He said in order to make the programme a success, the ministry was training about 300 teachers at Morogoro and Dar es Salaam, to man the district vocational centres.

Ndugu Kibona told the delegation that scientists and technologists had been encouraged to participate in implementing those programmes. The establishing of such centres would enable pupils completing primary education to learn some technical skill.

FUEL SHORTAGE HINDERS MASASI DISTRICT RELIEF PLANS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 15 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Text] Efforts to rush food to peasants facing an acute shortage in Masasi District, Mtwara Region, are being hampered by lack of fuel, it was learnt yesterday.

The Mtwara Regional Commissioner, Ndugu Lawi Sijaona, told this newspaper in a telephone interview, that consultations were underway with the Prime Minister's Office and the Water and Energy Ministry to solve the problem.

Reports reaching Mtwara attributed the shortage to the breakdown of an oil tanker hauling diesel to the southern region, which had been sent to Mombasa for repairs, he said.

He explained that the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation (TPDC) delivered 18,000 litres of diesel by road last Saturday which were immediately distributed to transporters and the Tanzania Electric Supplies Company (TANESCO).

The supply was, however, too little, he said, pointing out that the region consumed 450,000 litres of fuel per month.

"We are stuck. We cannot do anything now", Ndugu Sijaona said, adding that there was a "good amount" of cassava stocks in National Milling Corporation (NMC) godowns in the region awaiting hauling to the affected areas.

It is estimated that some 28,000 people at Mchauru, Nakohi, Nanyumbu and Chiungutwa villages, including western Likese Division in the district are affected by the food shortage.

The Regional Commissioner said they would press to have the fuel delivered to Mtwara by road although, he pointed out, this would be more costly.

He said the relief food supplies would be obtained within the region where some 2,000 tonnes of cassava were stocked in NMC godowns. Peasants expect to harvest another 15,000 tonnes of the starch this season.

Ndugu Sijaona explained that the fuel shortage had also affected industrial activity in the region. There were four cashewnut processing factories and a sisal estate running on diesel-generated electric power, he said.

He, meanwhile, clarified that the relief supplies would be given free of charge to people without purchasing power because of physical disability.

Those with money would buy the foodstuff while able-bodied individuals lacking money would work in development projects and get the food in return, he explained.

He said the district authorities had been instructed to divide the affected people into the three categories to facilitate the campaign.

Some 16,000 tonnes of cassava and millet will be delivered to the affected areas over the next six months. It is expected that the peasants will then start harvesting short-term crops like sweet potatoes, yams, and peas.

PRIVATE FIRMS MUST RAISE WAGES BY FIFTEEN PERCENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

PRIVATE firms will have to increase salaries of their employees by at least 15 per cent, following the recent adjustment of the minimum wage from 480 to 600 shillings per month, a spokesman of the Tanzania Workers Organisation (JUWATA) said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

A reasonably lower percentage than the obligatory 15 would, however, be entertained provided the employer had sufficient reasons for not effecting the 15 per cent rise, the spokesman explained.

Such reasons, he added, should be economic like the problems associated with production — low capacity, high production costs and others.

He stressed that all adjustments should be made in consultation with JUWATA branches within the private firms.

A circular to this effect would be issued today by the JUWATA headquarters in Dar es Salaam, he added.

The spokesman said the agreements on the adjustments should be submitted to the JUWATA headquarters, with copies to the Permanent Labour Tribunal (PLT) for record purposes.

Private firm members of the Association of Tanzania Employers (ATE) should also send their copies to ATE for records, he added.

There are about 3,000 private employers in the country. Of these, about 350 are members of the Dar es Salaam-based ATE.

The salary adjustments follow the government's move to raise the minimum wage effective July this year.

The government also increased by at least 20 per cent the salaries of all civil servants earning above 600/-. But the ratio tapers as the salaries increase.

The increases were 20 per cent for those earning from 601 to 1,000/-, 19.4 per cent for salaries of 1,000/- to 2,000/-, 18.5 per cent for those earning between 2,000/- and 3,000/-, 17.6 per cent for salaries between 3,000 and 4,000/- and 16.1 per cent for those earning between 4,000/- and 5,000/- a month.

The percentage increase drops sharply for those earning above 5,000/- a month.

The Presidential Standing Committee on Parastatal Organisations (SCOPO) had announced in a circular last month that salaries of parastatal workers earning above the minimum wage would get a 15 per cent rise.

PETROLEUM COMPANIES' SHARE TRANSFER

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Government has approved the transfer of shares of Shell in Shell and BP Tanzania to BP Tanzania at the end of this year, it was disclosed in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

The Managing Director of Shell and BP Tanzania, Ndugu W.F. Zeverijin, said the Tanzania Government had 50 per cent shares in Shell and BP Tanzania and the remaining 50 per cent was shared equally by Shell and BP Tanzania.

He said under the move, there would be a gradual withdrawal of the Shell brand from the oil market in the country. However, he said the petroleum products and associated services currently offered throughout the Mainland and Isles would continue to be available.

The Managing Director said the government's approval for the transfer meant that the latter would be jointly owned by the Government and that the name Shell and BP Tanzania will cease to be applicable on January 1, next year. A new one will be announced thereafter, he said.

He explained that the cooperation between Shell and BP in marketing petroleum products started some 50 years ago when BP was predominantly producing crude oil with few marketing outlets which Shell commanded.

Ndugu Zeverijin said the situation had changed because both companies were now equally balanced as BP had gradually expanded its marketing activities and Shell had acquired substantial crude oil sources.

He said that the change will not affect the working conditions of Tanzanians but the current expatriate Shell staff would be replaced by BP employees.

PARTY SECRETARY DISCUSSES PROGRESS OF UJAMAA IN MBEYA REGION

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 6 Sep 81 p 5

[Interview with Kingunge Ngombale-Mwire, Mbeya Regional Party Secretary by Harrison Mwakyembe at an unspecified time and place]

[Text]

Q: — Ndugu Ngombale, Mbeya Region has of late succeeded to develop a number of villages which, apart from having the potential for stable economic and social viability, could serve as models for the country's efforts to bring about development through socialist transformation. What have been the underlying reasons for this success?

A: — Let me begin by stating that the policy of socialism and self-reliance as a whole has, since its promulgation in the Arusha Declaration in 1967, been well received by the people — workers and peasants throughout the country. Likewise the socialist rural policy — which occupies a central place in the country's policy — was enthusiastically welcomed by the peasantry.

But what followed during the first years of its implementation were spontaneous efforts by the peasants themselves to effect the desired changes. There was no serious and organised backing from above, from the Party and the Government. This is why, in my view, we have not made much progress to date if we take the country as a whole.

For an effective implementation of Ujamaa vijijini, we need centralised leadership, centralised supervision as well as comprehensive programmes for the step to step implementation of the policy.

Turning to your question; what has been happening in Mbeya Region during the last three years is a deliberate effort on the part of the Party to play its leadership role in the struggle of the masses to bring about a socialist transformation of the countryside.

For the Party to be the leading force in the struggle for socialism in the Region, it had first to be united ideologically and in action especially at the leadership level. This was attained through long discussions in Party and Government organs and in seminars of Party and Government officials of different levels.

A yearly minimum programme for the implementation of Ujamaa vijijini was elaborated in which targets to be attained by villages were defined and the organisation of labour clearly worked out. According to this labour organisation, all able bodied persons in a given village are divided into what are called vikosi or brigades and the members of each kikosi subdivided into vikundi or teams.

Our experience has convinced us that the little success we have realized in the development of Ujamaa in Mbeya Villages has been facilitated by our united centralized leadership, a programme in which targets are clearly defined and an appropriate organisation of labour.

Q: — You have pointed out that centralised leadership and supervision, an effective organisation of labour and definition of targets, are essential for the successful implementation of Ujamaa vijijini. I have had the occasion to visit several regions in the country and these requirements are lacking in their rural programmes. What do you think should be done?

A:— This is where the Party comes in. Socialism and self-reliance is the policy of the Party. It is therefore for CCM to lead the struggle for the implementation of this policy.

It is for the Party to ensure that all regions have a unified and centralised socialist leadership as well as elaborate programmes for effecting the socialist rural transformation envisaged.

Our weakness hitherto has been that the implementation of Ujamaa has been left almost entirely to the initiative of the villagers and to the individual leaders in the regions and districts.

Q: — The brigades-team system you have just mentioned is not common in Tanzania. What is its modus operandi?

A: — This is simply a method of organizing labour. The first step is for each village to know the number of able-bodied persons among its population. The second step is to divide all the able-bodied persons in the village into brigades and teams.

There are about 100 people in each brigade, but in most Mbeya villages the number varies in accordance with objective conditions pertaining to the villages. A team is a small unit of a brigade, comprising about 10 able-bodied persons. Thus in every brigade, you will have roughly 10 teams.

Let us take a hypothetical case of a village with six brigades and a target to cultivate say 300 acres of an Ujamaa farm. What is done to facilitate implementation of the target, is to assign each of the six brigades 50 acres of the Ujamaa village farm.

Each brigade is responsible for the preparation of its alloted portion, planting, weeding as well as harvesting. In the day to day implementation of the work of the brigade, the teams act as task forces. The brigade's leader defines the task to be accomplished by each team in a given day and the implementation of the task is left to the team and its leader.

In the implementation of Ujamaa work, the Party has promoted the development of the spirit of socialist emulation. According to this practice, teams within the same brigade vie with one another in a struggle to implement what is assigned to them better than the others.

This spirit is also encouraged at the level of the brigades in the village, the villages within a ward, wards within a division, and finally between districts of the region.

The Party intends to extend the use of brigades and teams to the implementation of other village projects such as brick-making, road construction and maintenance etc.

Q: — To what extent are regional leaders involved in this task of socialist rural transformation in Mbeya?

A: — They are fully involved. In the first place, they have been charged with the responsibility of charting out targets as well as the necessary guidelines for effective implementation of the targets. The targets are usually worked out after lengthy discussions at regional, district and village levels.

In a nutshell, what happens is that all major decisions on the implementation of the rural policy are taken by the Party. A seminar follows attended by all Regional Executive Committee members as well as officials from key sectors in the Regional and Area Commissioner's offices.

The seminars, which usually take two to three days, discuss the Party decisions as well as methods of implementing targets and mobilising the people. Similar seminars are organised at district level, divisional, ward and finally at the village level.

In addition to the seminars for the leadership of all levels in the region, mass meetings are held in all the villages during which targets, organisation of labour and socialist development in general are discussed.

At the same time, the Party leadership organises special village meetings of Party members only in which the leadership role of the Party and Party members in the implementation of Ujamaa policy is thoroughly discussed.

Q: — What kind of incentives do you provide to villages which fulfil their targets well?

A: — We have a system of socialist competition between different villages. Normally, at the level of the region, we give awards to about 10 best villages in the region. These are followed by district awards. Every district selects 10 best villages as well and awards them.

It is the intention of the Party in the region to develop and extend this practice of awards to the divisional, ward and village level where best brigades and teams will also be honoured.

Q: — You have alluded earlier to the practice the Party has evolved in Mbeya Region whereby Party Leaders hold special meetings in the villages with Party members only. Can you elaborate on that?

A: — This practice is part of a limited programme initiated by the Regional Executive Committee meeting of August, 1979 in Kyela aimed at strengthening the Party at grassroots level.

The Party leadership had realized in the course of the implementation of Ujamaa vijijini targets in 1978/79 that Ujamaa activities lacked a driving force.

Analysis of the situation made us realise that what was lacking was effective Party leadership in the day to day implementation of Ujamaa activities. Political and ideological consciousness was in general low among Party members and as a result they did not consider Ujamaa as their special project.

So meetings and seminars for Party members only have been organised in villages as part of our programme to strengthen the Party by arousing Party members and raising their political consciousness. These meetings and seminars have proved very fruitful politically and ideologically.

Party members have begun to play a vanguard role in the implementation of Ujamaa and other nation building activities in their villages.

The success attained by many villages in the last two years is in part due to the active participation of Party members in these Ujamaa activities.

Q: — So far, what do you consider to be the most important achievement of the Party in the implementation of Ujamaa in Mbeya Region?

A: — The most important thing achieved by the Party during the three years of deliberate implementation of Ujamaa vijijini is to create conditions in the region which have made the masses of peasants realize the correctness of the Party teaching that effective development and liberation in the villages can only be achieved through socialist cooperation.

They are seeing for themselves how Ujamaa production and other forms of cooperation have enabled them to solve their flour milling problems, their transport and transportation problems, etc.

Areas which were hitherto condemned to isolation and particularly exploited have now been opened up to regular and reliable traffic basically through the Ujamaa efforts of the villagers and villages themselves.

This realisation that the power to change their conditions of living, of solving the obstacles to their development, is in their hands, is the most important political and ideological achievement of the Party. It is more than the mere owning of tractors, flour mills, lorries or buses by the village cooperatives.

Q: — Some Western economists have been arguing that Tanzania's rural strategy is a waste of time and resources. They argue that industrialisation is the only way to bail us out of our underdevelopment. How do you size up this contention?

A: — I do not entirely agree with your formulation. For, bourgeois economists and ideologies have always argued against the efforts of progressive Third World countries to industrialise.

Posing industrialisation for Third World countries as a near impossibility, they have advocated so-called rural development as an end in itself knowing fully well that such a policy will condemn these countries to the position of suppliers of raw materials to industrialised countries and dependent upon imported manufactured goods and equipment from the industrialized countries. This is reducing these countries to the position of neo-colonies.

Q: — Am I to infer from your remark that socialist development in our case cannot succeed without industrialisation?

A: — It will be short-lived, for it will be an underdeveloped socialism and a dependent socialism at that. Socialist development is the development of the productive forces of the society and the revolutionising of production relations in agriculture, industry, commerce, etc.

Of course, in the initial stages of the revolution, as is the case in Tanzania, where the main task is the creation of a basis for the building of socialism, agriculture must be the base of economic activity.

It is agriculture which can gainfully engage the millions of able-bodied Tanzanians; it is agriculture, properly organised and directed, which cannot only feed the people but create the surplus needed to both service present day development needs and pay for the industrialisation of the country.

Then, as industries develop, particularly heavy and chemical industry, agricultural development gets a boost in that heavy industry facilitates mechanisation of agriculture and the generalized use of fertilizers and other industrial inputs.

To sum up, I will say that the building of socialism in Tanzania or in any other Third World country is inconceivable outside a total process of agricultural and industrial revolution. In the objective situation of a backward, predominantly agricutural country like Tanzania, agriculture has a strategically crucial role to play for its own revolution, and for any serious industrialisation of the country.

Q: — We have just started implementing the National Economic Survival Programme (NESP) which aims, among other things, at increased industrial and agricultural output to boost our foreign exchange earnings. Some people, however, are pessimistic over the outcome of the programme on grounds that we usually make high-sounding plans the implementation of which is poor. Would you subscribe to such a view?

A: — I wouldn't. I am confident that the NESP can be implemented if the leadership in the Party and the Government plays its role effectively.

Our experience over the last two to three years in Mbeya in mobilising the people for production in general and socialist production in particular, has shown that the problem is not with the people but with the leadership.

The Tanzania workers and peasants are always willing to play their part in the struggle for socialism and also contribute effectively to any national survival efforts.

What has been a problem and may prove to be a serious handicap in implementing the economic survival programme, is lack of commitment, resolve and ability on the part of some of us leaders.

Q: — What measures has the Party leadership taken in Mbeya Region to ensure the Region's effective contribution to the national economic survival efforts?

A: — Party and Government organs in Mbeya Region had already prepared and passed for implementation its economic programme for 1981/82 when the National economic Survival Programme was launched by NEC in mid-May, 1981.

The 1981/82 Regional Programme has been termed the "Year for Consolidating socialism and Siasa ni Kilimo requirements" in the villages to highlight the Party's intention during the coming year to concentrate on the improvement of socialist cooperation as well as on increasing the yields per unit of Ujamaa and individual household farms through better farming methods.

A two-day seminar of Regional Executive Committee members, Regional and District officials as well as Divisional and Ward Secretaries was held on 8th and 9th May to thoroughly discuss the programme and chart out the implementation strategy and tactics.

After the announcement of NESP by the NEC in mid-May, a special meeting of the Regional and District leadership of the Party, Government and Parastatals was convened on June 11th, 1981. This meeting discussed the different aspects of the National Economic Survival Programme.

It called upon all districts to organise teams which will go to the villages, factories and offices to explain to the masses the difficult economic situation now facing the country and emphasize on the patriotic duty of every Tanzanian to contribute effectively to its improvement.

These teams will discuss with the villagers the Ujamaa targets agreed upon for 1981/82 and the discipline, commitment and organisation needed for their attainment.

The discussions will also centre on the need for each family unit to make a special effort this coming season to produce a big surplus of food and cash crops from their personal plots as their patriotic contribution to the national survival effort.

Other teams will visit offices and factories in the region to discuss with the workers and management on how to strengthen discipline in work places, increase production in factories and improve efficiency in offices and service centres.

Many Mbeya town residents have a long-dated practice of cultivating shambas in the rural periphery of the Municipality and in the adjoining Mbeya Rural District. The Party in the Urban District will see to it that the urban residents who are not gainfully employed are mobilized in these and other production endeavours.

At the same time, preparations are underway to enable institutions such as schools to make an effective contribution to the production drive without, of course, impairing their academic activities in the process.

So, preparations are underway everywhere in the region for a serious production drive in the 1981/82 season. Weather permitting, Mbeya Region is sure to play its part fully in the execution of the National Economic Survival Programme.

SCANIA TRUCKS TO BE READY FOR PRODUCTION BY LATE 1981

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] HE first Scania truck is expected to pull off the 38 million/- truck assembly plant Kibaha early next year, the General Manager of the Tanzania Automobile Manufacturing Company (TAMCO), Ndugu Tore Johansson, said yesterday.

Ndugu Johansson said the plant, whose construction started in 1978, would be ready for trial production of Scania trucks weighing not less than seven tonnes by the end of this year.

"We are now in the final stage of civil works construction and are installing machinery in the workshop. We should be ready by the end of this year," he said.

The General Manager said raw materials for the assembly plant for the first three months of its trial operation had arrived, adding that an average of 20 trucks per month would be assembled during the trial period.

He said the trial period would last four to five months before full production started during which 100 trucks would be assembled monthly.

"However, this depends on the availability of raw materials. We are in the final stages of finalising a deal for raw materials for the rest of the year — 1982," he explained.

He further said that ten staff houses at the site of the plant were nearing completion. The plant is expected to employ about 200 workers.

The plant will be run by TAMCO. The National Development Corporation (NDC) will hold 60 per cent of equity share, the State Motor Corporation 30 per cent and the Saab Scania Company ten per cent.

Under a management agreement signed between the NDC and Saab Scania of Sweden, the plant's four managerial posts will be held by Swedes. These are the General Manager, Financial Manager, Technical Manager and the local manufacturing engineer.

A number of Tanzania technicians and experts in various aspects of truck assembling trained in Sweden have returned and ready for the assembling task next year.

MINISTER ISSUES NDC'S FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Text] THE National Development Corporation's (NDC) performance declined sharply in 1979 because of inflationary factors and the transfer of assets and liabilities from the corporation to newly-formed parastatals.

NDC's fifteenth annual report, launched in Dar es Salaam yesterday by Industries Minister Basil Mramba, showed that the total revenue fell by 32.9 per cent from 62.9 million/- in 1978 to 42.2 million/- in 1979.

The operating profit dropped from 40.5 million/- to 20.0million/- over the same period, a variance of 50.1 per cent, the report said. It said inflation and war effects affected raw materials procurement, foreign exchange availability, and transportation.

It said the hive-off of several group companies to form new parastatals and the granting of autonomy to some companies brought down NDC sales by 1,110.7 million/-, earnings by 92.3 million/- and narrowed down the cash flow by 10,035.9 million/-.

According to the report, the removal of the chemical sector — leading to formation of the National Chemical Industries (NCI) last year resulted in a loss of 776.5 million/- in sales, 72.2 million/- in earnings and 1,830 million/- in cash flow.

Some 29 subsidiaries and nine new projects were transferred from NDC, while the breweries and cigarette companies became autonomous.

The report said the overall performance of the existing NDC group companies fell by 60.9 per cent from 3,064.1 million/- in 1978 to 1,207.2 million/- the following year in terms of total revenue.

It said the aggregate pre-tax profit also decreased by 49.1 per cent from 257.8 million/- to 131.3 million/- over the same period.

Subsidiaries which did well, according to the report, included the Ubungo Farm Implements (UFI) and the Steel Rolling Mills which recorded higher sales than previously.

The performance of the Tanzania Crown Corks was poor because of falling demand from bottling plants whose production declined for lack of raw materials.

The report showed that the National Bicycle Company (NABICO) registered a loss of 8.3 million/-.

The report said various studies had been undertaken in all companies and that their recommendations would be implemented to improve production. It added, however, that this would depend on availability of raw materials.

Aspects earmarked for improvement include capacity utilisation, accounting standardization, cost reduction and inventory control.

The results of capacity utilisation and product upgrading cannot be noticed at present due to non-availability of raw materials and spare parts", the report said.

DIRECTOR ANNOUNCES NBC EXPANSION PROGRAM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 7 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE National Bank of Commerce (NBC) intends to expand its business and improve services throughout the country by opening up 30 more branches with 31 agencies within the next five years.

This was said at the University of Dar es Salaam's main campus by the outgoing Chairman and Managing Director of the NBC, Ndugu Obed Katikaza, in a special lecture on the bank's experiences and prospects, organised by the university's Finance Association (DUFA) last Friday.

Ndugu Katikaza told his audience that the bank's deposits had been rising at an average of 20.3 per cent annually since the bank started operating 14 years ago.

Today the deposits stood at over 9,043m/- compared to the 887.1m/- deposits of 1967. These were expected to reach 15,000m/- in the next five years ending 1985/86, he explained.

Lending to the domestic sector is also expected to rise from the June 1980 figure of 5,819.6m/- to 10,000m/-.

Working capital and bank credit will continue to be channelled with priority to villages and ujamaa villages and to small scale industries.

Ndugu Katikaza said under the new policy the bank would lend up to 85 per cent of its total project costs to viable projects in the small scale industries.

He added that the bank had already established a loan department at the head office to specifically handle projects in the small scale industries sector.

The bank's expansion programme also provided for the setting up of 30 new branches and 31 static agencies by the end of 1986. This would bring the total number of branches to 138, he explained.

According to Ndugu Katikaza, the bank's training institute would undergo expansion while training of staff at financial institutions at home and abroad and on-the-job training would all be intensified.

New equipment and operational techniques would also be sought to make the next development period successful, he added.

MINISTER ASKS CAT TO PURCHASE, MOVE PROMPTLY KAGERA COFFEE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 7 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, has directed the Coffee Authority of Tanzania (CAT) to ensure coffee produced by peasants in Kagera Region this season was promptly bought and moved to processing centres.

He made the order on Saturday when addressing Kigarama and Kanyigo villagers in Kiziba Division, Bukoba Rural District. The peasants told him that they had sold last season's crop and that CAT had already paid them.

Ndugu Msuya reiterated that peasants in the region should increase food and cash crop production, cautioning that current industrial development would increase demand for food.

He pointed out that the Kagera sugar factory alone would employ about 4,000 people on completion. "You must produce enough food for yourselves and a surplus for these workers and others in the industrial sector", he said.

The Premier earlier toured sugar cane plantations at the Kagera project and a 32-hectare plot cleared for banana growing at Msenge village which is under the Ngono project.

The project Executive Chairman, Ndugu G. Mkalanga, told the Prime Minister that part of the feasibility study on the project had been completed and that funds were being sought from internal and external donors to finance implementation.

Ndugu Mkalanga explained that peasants, religious and public institutions in Kagera Region had so far contributed three million shillings for the project.

The peasants in Bukoba Rural District handed Ndugu Msuya 10,000/- to assist projects for disabled persons in the country. The Premier was expected to return to Dodoma yesterday after laying a wreath at a heroes' cemetery at Kaboya army camp in Bukoba.

DECENTRALIZATION REMAINS PARASTATAL DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 7 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Excerpt]

THE rationalisation and decentralisation of huge corporations will continue as a major policy on the development of parastatal organisations in Tanzania, the Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba, said in Dar es Salaam at the weekend.

He said, when launching the 15th annual report of the National Development Corporation (NDC), that the exercise, legalised under the 1969 Corporations Act, would reduce the huge corporations into smaller and manageable parastatals to create conditions and scope for the development of management talents.

He assured, however, that the NDC, which had been the target of the rationalisation exercise so far, would be spared at least for the next five years.

He explained that many corporations existing today had started under NDC, adding that their performance as autonomous entities was "encouraging".

"In fact some of them will have to be rationalised soon to facilitate easier management", he pointed out, adding that the exercise would be conducted on some corporations under his ministry in the next two years.

Corporations created with companies hived-off from the NDC include the National Textiles Corporation (TEXCO), the Tanzania Saruji Corporation (Saruji), State Mining Corporation (STAMICO) and the National Handicrafts Corporation (HANDICO).

The Tanzania Breweries Company (TBL) and Tanzania Cigarette Company (TCC), formerly under NDC, have been given autonomy.

Ndugu Mramba observed that the transfer of assets and liabilities accompanying the hive-offs was partly responsible for the NDC's current liquidity problems although the situation was temporary.

He said the government would continue giving the necessary financial assistance to the NDC to enable it sustain its operations, especially in the fields of metal works, steel and iron engineering and the elctrical sector.

NDC, he said, should build and consolidate the necessary skills needed to develop those sectors.

"You have always absorbed the shocks of rationalisations with characteristic dynamism. You must exercise this feat to build and consolidate abundant skills for the important sectors left with you", he said.

GOVERNMENT PROBING SOME DAR ES SALAAM LOCAL, FOREIGN BUSINESSES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text] SOME Dar es Salaam local and foreign private businessmen dealing in hardware, stationery and textiles may have their as yet unrenewed licences revoked if proven to have indulged in dubious business acts.

This was announced in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, who did not say how many businessmen would be affected.

He only said their businesses were being screened by Party and government leaders at district level.

Licenses issued by the City Council normally expire at the end of March, after which traders are given two months to apply for their renewal.

But up to the end of May this year, numerous businessmen had not yet obtained their licences.

The minister said the City Council had already compiled lists of businessmen operating in Temeke and Kinondoni districts, adding that Ilala District's list would be ready by the end of this month.

He said business listing started after both the Ministry and the City Council noticed an unusual increase in hardware, textiles and stationery businesses.

He explained that the increasing number of trading licenses issued hardly reflected the true situation of the market because there were hardly enough commodities to share out amongst all business owners.

He said far too many licenses had been issued, adding that this had encouraged middlemen to operate using shady trade terms.

He said the screening had yielded interesting findings, citing the case of some thirty-odd businessmen and middlemen intercepted in dubious deals involving purchases of khanga.

He said middlemen who bought the textiles from businessmen in the city centre later resold them at inflated prices to residents of Tandika, Buguruni and Manzese.

He said District Party and Government leaders, investigating the racket, had discovered that city centre businessmen bought the khangas from national textile companies using valid trading licences and later sold them to the middlemen at hiked prices.

He also said some owners of trading licences did not have business premises or trade addresses at all.

He stressed that the Ministry was undertaking the present exercise in order to weed out those bogus and destructive business elements, which had in many cases colluded with dishonest public institution officials to create artificial shortages of commodities.

He said only those privately-owned businesses that benefited the people would be retained.

NATION SIGNS AGREEMENT FOR COMMON FUND FOR COMMODITIES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

Paris, Tuesday. TANZANIA yesterday signed the agreement on Common Fund for Commodities, a financial institution seen as the key instrument of the integrated programme for commodities adopted at UNCTAD IV in Naiorbi in 1976.

The common fund agreement was initialed by the Minister of State for Planning and Economic Affairs, Ndugu Kighoma Malima, who is heading a seven-man Tanzania delegation to the UN conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) here.

Sor far, eight countries — Indonesia, Denmark, Philippines, Bangladesh, Japan, Sweden, Norway and Haiti — have ratified it.

According to conference sources, the signatories to date represent 62 per cent of the 470 million dollars (3.7 billion shillings) directly contributed capital of the fund.

It will come into force when the agreement has been ratified by 90 countries, accounting for at least two thirds of the targetted amount.

The Common Fund will finance buffer stocking of commodities through International Commodity agreements (ICAS) to be associated with the common fund.

Its main financial resource will be borrowing on the international capital market backed by governmental guarantees.

In this way, the sources maintain, the resources which could be mobilised for buffer stocking could be many times larger than directly contributed capital.

According to UNCTAD, a target of 280 million dollars (2,240m/-) was put forward for this account. So far 226-227 million dollars (1,816million/-) has been pledged.

In addition 70 million dollars (560million/-) be allocated for this second account from the directly contributed capital.

Considering the importance of commodity trade to the economies of the LDCs, UNCTAD is anxious that the Common Fund come into effect as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT TO RECEIVE MAINLAND MANPOWER SURVEY BY END OCTOBER

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text]

A report on Tanzania Mainland's manpower survey conducted over the last two years is expected to be submitted to the government by the end of next month, the Director of Planning in the Ministry of Manpower Development and Administration, Ndugu J. Rugumyamheto, said yesterday.

The report, covering some 965 employers in the civil service, parastatal and private sector, is intended to give policy makers a full picture of the existing manpower force on the Mainland.

Ndugu Rugumyamheto said the report would include particulars such as age structure, level of education, number of women cadres in different work fields and labour mobility.

The survey, undertaken to determine skilled manpower positions in the middle and higher cadre levels, is part of the national five year economic and social development plan which took off in July this year.

Ndugu Rugumyamheto said 60-65 per cent of the Mainland's working population responded to the questionnaires, indicating a fair representation.

In 1964 the country's policymakers had set manpower requirement of 9,699 graduate and diploma holders by 1980. But with the establishment of more parastatal organisations and the decentralisation programme, the country's manpower requirements have greatly increased.

The target, however, remains the same — to attain self-sufficiency in manpower requirements.

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES TEN PERCENT FERTILIZER PRICE INCREASE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Government has increased by ten per cent prices of all types of fertilizers produced by the Tanzania Fertilizer Company (TFC) because of rising production costs.

A statement issued by the Agriculture Ministry in Dar es Salaam yesterday, said the new prices take effect on June 1, this year, and would include delivered consignments which have not been paid for.

The new prices with the old ones in brackets are, sulphate of amonia — 1,081/- per tonne (1,710/-) and 94/05 for a 50-kilogramme bag (85/50); triple superphosphate — 2,116/- per tonne (1,924/-) and 105/00 each bag (96/20).

The price of compound fertilizer 6:25:18 will be 2,420/- (2,200/-) per tonne, while a 50-kilogramme bag would cost 121/- (110/-). The statement said the 25:5:5 composition would sell at 2,171/- per tonne (1,974/-) and 108/- (98/70) each bag.

Composition 20:10:10 will now cost 2,468/- each tonne (2,244/-) and 123/40 per bag (112/20). According to the statement, a tonne of sulphate of potash will cost 1,783/- (1,621/-), while one bag would sell at 89/15 (81/05).

Culcium ammonium nitrate will sell at 2,214/- each tonne (2,013/-) and 110/70 for a 90-kilogramme bag (100/65). The statement said a tonne of urea fertilizer will cost 3,115/- (2,832/-), while one bag would go for 155/75 (141/60).

The statement explained that production costs at the Tanga-based company had risen by 40 per cent because of rising prices of raw materials such as rock phosphate, sulphate of potash, sulphur and liquid ammonia.

The prices of spare parts and fuel had also increased, it said. The statement said the costs of producing one tonne of triple superphosphate (TSP) fertilizer had increased from 2,798/- last year to 4,390/- this year.

Production of sulphate of ammonia was costing 3,327/- instead of 2,409/- per tonne last year, it said. The statement explained that the ten per cent increase borne by farmers was equivalent to 40 per cent of the added costs.

"The government will subsidize the remaining 60 per cent to enable farmers to get and use fertilizers for increased production during the economic survival period", the Government statement said.

It added, however, that only 100,000 out of 130,000 tonnes needed for the 1981/82 season would be produced due to "economic problems". Some 107,000 tonnes of different types of fertilizers were distributed in the country last year.

DPRK TO PROVIDE IRRIGATION FARMING EXPERTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

[Text]

THE Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) has agreed to provide experts to develop 14,400 hectares for irrigation farming in Tanzania, the Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu Joseph Mungai, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

He said this followed a protocol signed between Tanzania and the DPRK in Pyongyang late last month. Ndugu Mungai signed on behalf of Tanzania while DPRK Minister for Foreign Economic Relations signed on behalf of the DPRK.

Ndugu Mungai, who returned to Dar es Salaam last week after attending a meeting of agriculture ministers from Non-aligned countries in Pyongyang, said 105 Korean experts would undertake the task.

He said the experts expected in the country in October this year, would also undertake the promotion of mini hydro-electric power stations, maize production in eight Mainland regions and vegetable gardens around Dar es Salaam City.

Ndugu Mungai explained that the irrigation projects would include 4,000 hectares around Lake Victoria, 5,000 hectares in Kilombero Valley, 3,000 hectares along Lukosi River in Iringa, 200 hectares at Kalenga in Pemba, 1,000 hectares in Rufiji basin, 600 hectares at Mwanampuli dam in Tabora and three hectares along Kitivo river in Tanga.

Only 30 of the Korean experts will work on these farms. The remaining 75 will undertake design work for the mini hydro-electric power stations and take part in maize production; vegetable garden projects and promotion of irrigation projects currently undertaken by the Ministry.

Machinery and other equipment for the irrigation projects would be bought by Tanzania from the DPRK through an interest-free loan, according to Ndugu Mungai.

He explained that under the agreement, Tanzania would provide food, accommodation and transport for the Korean experts.

MTWARA AUTHORITIES TAKE FOOD, WATER SHORTAGE RELIEF STEPS

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

[Text]

MTWARA regional authorities have taken emergency measures to contain an acute shortage of food and water being experienced by residents of Masasi District, it was learnt yesterday.

In a telephone interview from Mtwara yesterday, the Regional Planning Officer, Ndugu Alan Yesaya, said more than 28,000 people in the district were affected.

He said Mchauru, Nakohi, Nanyumbu, Chiungutwa and Western Lisekese Division in the district had run out of food following a severe drought which hit the area during the 1980/81 season.

"We have been allowed by the Prime Minister's Office to spend the relief fund. We expect to start buying cassava reserves from the National Milling Corporation (NMC) tomorrow or the day after and ferry them to the affected areas", Ndugu Yesaya said.

The region's Hunger Committee had met earlier in the week and called for immediate food supplies to the district.

Contacted in Dar es Salaam yesterday, the Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu Joseph Mungai, said there were large food stocks in the region.

Ndugu Yesaya, who confirmed the Minister's statement, said he was sure the problem would be contained, particularly following the approval given by the Prime Minister's Office to use the relief fund.

On water shortage, he said the 200 shallow water wells in the district had dried up due to the fall in the water table. "As a result, there is an acute shortage of water in about half of the Masasi District", he added.

"We are working together with the Ministry of Water and Energy to get bowsers to ferry water to the affected areas", he said.

Ndugu Yesaya said the food and water supply emergency measures were going to cost about 1.2 million/- in the next four months.

He was optimistic that the water problem would be fully solved during the next financial year and that of food after the next harvests.

TCC WORKERS' RETURN--Workers of the main factory of the Tanzania Cigarette Company (TCC) who were sent on compulsory leave last April have started reporting back to work. The company's General Manager, Ndugu Brown Ngwilulupi, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that some of the workers had started returning but could not say when full production would resume. He said this would be known on Friday during an all-workers meeting at the factory premises along Pugu Road. At least 350 workers were sent on compulsory leave following a shortage of raw materials, including packaging labels at the factory. The shortage was experienced since early this year. The shortage led the TCC to halve its monthly production of cigarettes to 220 million from 440 million, leading to shortages that in turn led to "creation" of a black market for the product. POSSIBLE BYELECTION POSTPONEMENT--Bye-elections for constituencies whose Members of Parliament have been unseated following petitions against the results of last October' General Elections may not be held in November because some of the petitions were yet to be settled in the High Court. The Clerk to the National Assembly, Ndugu Elias Kazimoto, said in an interview with the Tanzania News Agency (Shihata) yesterday that apart from the unsettled four cases, his office had been informed of an appeal case filed to the Appeal Court of Tanzania by the unseated Biharamulo Member of Parliament, Ndugu Stanslaus Kasusura. He added that though his office had not been informed of other appeals, he was aware of four other cases which had been submitted to the Court of Appeal. They are for the Bukoba Urban, Kondoa, Dodoma Urban and Sumbawanga Rural constituencies. A total of 16 petitions were filed. Seven of them have been dismissed, four are still in progress while three have been successful and two withdrawn. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 16 Sep 81 p 1]

ADB DELEGATION'S VISIT--A two-member delegation from the Headquarters of the African Development Bank (ADB) in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, arrived in Dar es Salaam yesterday for a two-week stay during which they will prepare rice irrigation projects in two regions in the country. A member of the delegation told Shihata on arrival at the Dar es Salaam International Airport that the delegation would appraise holder rice irrigation projects in Tanga (Kitivo) and Tabora (Mwamapuli) regions. A third member of the delegation, who is a consultant in irrigation egineering, Mr. J.R. Evans arrives in Dar es Salaam on Tuesday to join his counterparts--Mr. Justus Byagagaire, a principal agronomist and Dr. William W. Peek, a senior agricultural economist. OIL, GAS EXPLORATION--Dar-es-Salaam, September 18--Shell Petroleum Development Tanzania (SPDT) has signed an agreement with the Government to explore for oil and gas in a 72,000 square kilometre area south of Dar, it was reported here today. The area, which runs diagonally from Kisarawe to Songea in Southern Tanzania, excludes the coastal strip where the Italian company Agip is prospecting. Under the agreement responsibility for the risk of capital involved in the exploration will rest with Shell and costs would only be subject to recovery if oil was found in commercial quantities. Any oil lifted would be shared between SPDT and the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation, with the Government getting additional profit tax. (A.F.P.) NEW SHIHATA CHIEF--Dar-es-Salaam, September 18--Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere Thursday named the director of the Government Information Services, Nkwabi Ng'wanakilala, as new head of Tanzania's official news agency, Shihata. He replaces Lawrence Mnubi, who has been retired in the public interest, according to a Government statement. Mr Ng'wanakilala is a graduate of the University of Dar-es-Salaam with diplomas in adult education and journalism from Manchester University in Britain. President Nyerere also appointed the principal of the Ideological College of the country's ruling party, Dr Mismark Mwansasu, as new chairman of Shihata's board of directors, which includes the editors of the two national newspapers, the Government-owned DAILY NEWS and the party-owned UHURU, and officials of Radio Tanzania and the Tanzanian School of Journalism. CEMENT EXPORTS--The Tanga Cement Factory is to export some 33,000 tonnes of cement to Burundi, a factory spokesman said in Tanga yesterday. This is the biggest consignment of cement to be exported by the plant since it started commercial production late last year. The first shipment of 750 tons was effected recently to Sri-Lanka. The spokesman said Malawi, Zambia, Uganda, Madagascar Seychelles, Mauritius, Sudan, India and the Gulf States had also indicated interest to import cement from the Tanga plant. The factory was also ready to start delivering cement to Zanzibar anytime, the spokesman said, adding that early this year officials from the factory toured the Isles to make arrangements for the delivery of the commodity there. The Tanga plant was officially opened by President Nyerere last month. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 8 Sep 81 p 1]

ANGOLAN INVASION BRIEFING--The Angolan Ambassador to Tanzania, Ndugu Eusebio Sebatstiao Junior, will today brief the Tanzanian community on the South African invasion of Angola at the University of Dar es Salaam. The solidarity meeting, open to members of the public, has been organised by the university's Committee for the Freedom of Namibia to coincide with mass demonstrations in Luanda today opposing the South African invasion. A statement issued by the committee chairman, Professor K.L. Edwards, who is also the university's head of the Faculty of Managament and Commerce, said the meeting would start at 8 p.m. in Arts Theatre 'B'. The official Angolan newspaper, Journal de Angola, on Sunday urged the entire Luanda population to demonstrate its willingness to defend the integrity of national territory and to crush South African invasion. MUGABE CITED ON NORWEGIAN-ZIMBABWEAN COOPERATION

[Unattributed report: "Norway Will Aid Zimbabwe"]

[Excerpt] "In a possible future crisis situation Norway would do its part to help Zimbabwe with oil supplies, but no advance guarantees have been discussed," Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland said at a press conference on Saturday [26 September] in connection with Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's official visit to Norway at the weekend.

During a round-trip to the Nordic countries in the last week, in which Norway was his last stop, Mugabe has asked for continued aid for the reconstruction of his war-torn country.

Because of the imminent change of government in Norway cooperation with Zimbabwe was only discussed in general terms.

Consequently, Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland was unable to make any binding promises of increased aid over and above that already approved by the Storting.

In Sweden Mugabe signed an aid agreement for 100 million kroner [currency not specified] for the present finanical year.

According to reports Norway is said to have raised the possibility of buying ferrochrome from Zimbabwe, but no concrete agreement was reached. However, in the course of the autumn a trade delegation from Zimbabwe will visit Norway to discuss the possibility of increased economic cooperation.

In his speech at the dinner held in his honor by the government at Akershus on Saturday evening Prime Minister Mugabe offered thanks for the help Norway has given to the people of Zimbabwe--both during the liberation struggle and since the country has become independent.

"We are now looking forward to consolidating and expanding cooperation in the economic, scientific, technical and cultural fields, and we would welcome Norwegian investment in Zimbabwe."

"Our present development program concentrates on the rural areas and we are determined to develop these so that living standards there are comparable to those of the towns. The largest part of the international aid we receive is being used with this in mind," Mugabe said. He also directed a tough attack at South Africa, which maintains an attitude which amounts to a threat to the reconstruction of Zimbabwe. "The excuse for this is that we give sanctuary to enemies of the South African regime, but this is not the case. The regime's enemies are in South Africa itself--millions of Africans and coloreds who are subjected to apartheid. Our position is clear. Apartheid must be ended soon to pave the way for a nonracist, democratic South Africa. How this should happen is a question that should be left completely to the South African people themselves."

STUDENT GROUP PLEDGES SUPPORT FOR SWAPO, ANC

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

[Text]

NEW initiatives and actions to provide concrete material assistance to the liberation struggle in Southern Africa were yesterday adopted by the East, Central and Southern African Students Organisations consultative meeting which ends in Dar es Salaam today.

The meeting, which started last Monday, will be officially closed by the Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, in the afternoon.

A final communique endorsed by the meeting said African students and youths would undertake new initiatives and actions to provide assistance including school materials to SWAPO of Namibia and ANC of South Africa.

The communique further called for the rendering of moral and material assistance to the Frontline States to enable them repel the constant attacks from the racist South African forces.

It also called on the youths and student organisations of the capitalist countries to intensify their campaigns against the apartheid South African regime and provide concrete material assistance to ANC and SWAPO.

The communique further said the youths would organise a campaign to save the lives of six ANC freedom fighters currently facing death penalty by the racist South African regime.

The meeting, which condemned US military bases in Africa, agreed that joint actions against the bases be undertaken and the struggle to make Africa nuclear-free zone be intensified.

The participants to the meeting also reiterated their solidarity with the people and students of the Western Sahara, El Salvado and the Arab liberation movements especially the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

At the same time the participants condemned the recent Zionist attacks against Lebanon and the Iraq nuclear reactor.

While strongly condemning the continued occupation of the southern part of Angola by the racist military forces, the participants demanded the immediate withdrawal of the troops of invasion.

In the opinion of the participants, the communique said, the support rendered by imperialists, especially US, encouraged the racist regime in pursuing and intensifying its aggression against the peoples' of South Africa and Namibia and undertaking aggression against Frontline States.

The meeting also called upon the All Africa Students Union (AASU) secretariat to continue organising sub-regional consultative meetings with a view to further strengthening the unity of the African student movement and its organisation — AASU.

The participants hailed the host organisation — Tanzania National Student Union (MUWATA) — for hosting and facilitating such an important meeting.

The participants were drawn from Angola, Botswana, Ghana, Mauritius, Rwanda, Senegal, Sudan, Uganda, Vietnam, Zambia, Zimbabwe, the Federal Republic of Germany (Asta Bremen) German Democratic Republic, Iraq, the PLO, the International Union of Students (IUS), the ANC, SWAPO, AASU and Tanzania.

SOUTH AFRICAN ACTIONS SEEN INCREASING DEPENDENCE ON SOCIALIST NATIONS

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 2 Sep 81 p 7

[Article by Carlos Franco: "The Strategy of War in Angola"]

[Text] If the very natural racist "pursuit" of the SWAPO fighters into Angola does not provoke Western legality to indignation and absolute repudiation--what the hell, these are white, civilized people with whom the bourgeois democratic powers maintain assiduous economic relations, and moreover, they are great producers of gold--for Pretoria and old pirate Reagan this pursuit is terribly productive.

In the view of the American cowboy, this is one more source of tension to be preserved to increase his armaments race, cover up all fraudulent international economic transactions and maintain a chaotic international situation in which hysteria and arbitrariness can govern in order to reestablish order; for Botha, this is a good time to create a situation of interventionism that would give him the opportunity to justify his policy of destroying Namibia and the pretext to combat the communist peril. Obviously, the latter will be a strike in his favor when presenting his settlement of accounts to the man in the White House.

What is the logic behind a dispersion and expansion of forces that could only end in a tactical short-term loss for the mercenary army in Pretoria's pay?

The critical situation of the young Republic of Angola, put in the critical position of having to bear a military attack by a government indisputably more powerful in armaments and constrained to appeal to other friendly countries, will create the kind of international situation that will greatly benefit South Africa in the negotiations related to the independence of Namibia.

If Angola asks for the assistance of allied socialist countries, the specter of the communist and Soviet peril will make more difficult all peaceful solutions favorable to SWAPO, which will obviously appear as the representative of Moscow's "unavowed" interests, or of Cuba's, or anyone else's. If an African force is formed, it will be the scarecrow of these unstable and savage countries threatening the sacred hosts of Christian Western civilization. The question will revolve on the field so dear to the Boers, of dividing African interests between good whites and evil blacks, between traditional civilized people and perilous underdeveloped savages.

With a bit of pressure from Reagan and some traditional hesitation from the other Western powers (perhaps not France, this time) and with the forced (but accessory) silence of other neo-colonies, the de facto situation imposed by the force of arms will be preserved for a few more years. For a regime on the brink of collapse, a regime in an "every-man-for-himself" situation that arms its white citizens to the teeth, ready to make of them a column of desperadoes in defense of their last privileges, this prolongation is always desirable.

The fact that a state of regional tension will not permit a harmonious and autonomous development in neighboring countries, the certainty that these will have to increase their degree of dependence on the more advanced socialist nations, leads Pretoria to take advantage of this situation: whole-hearted Western assistance will be forthcoming, South African enterprise will be supported by a relatively large sector of the international community (obviously reactionary and conservative) in the face of the specter of the communist peril.

Incapable of turning South Africa into a productive and peaceful nation, the Boers have already decisively opted for an international policy that will make them the guardians of the interests of imperialism and the lackey policemen of the interests of businessmen: desperate emigrants from all parts of the world, beginning with the Madeira islanders, are their fodder, their shock troops, their ferocious preservers of a racist status quo. Internationally, this is worth more than gold, because the crisis of capitalism is evident everywhere, as is the need to export manpower, which is already acutely felt in Great Britain itself.

CROWDS OF IDLERS IN FACE OF MANPOWER SHORTAGE QUESTIONED

[Article by Jorge Airosa: "A Subject to Ponder"]

[Text] Passers-by on busy Avenida 4 de Fevereiro during normal working hours witness a truly surprising phenomenon. They can clearly understand the reason why a number of industrial units are lacking manpower. They can also clearly notice that the number of idle people is increasing daily.

Benches on this avenue are crowded with individuals, mostly men, robust, well dressed and well-built. Some are turned toward the vast and attractive bay, making believe that they are chatting with the waves; others are facing the asphalt, contemplating traffic, and still others are seen in animated conversation with young girls with generous cleavage.... One way or the other, all of them seem to be proclaiming: "Long live leisure!... Long live rest!..." Meanwhile, our paper is forever publishing employment ads, some of them quite remunerative, for a better professional future, and very promising. These men idling their hours away should be advised to consult the inside pages of the paper, where it says, in heavy type: EMPLOYEES NEEDED.

To be sure, not all candidates for available positions possess the required qualities. Either because they cannot drive, or because they are not fluent in foreign languages, principally French and English, or because.... Nevertheless, it cannot be that a country of more than one million square meters suffers from a lack of manpower, a lack of jobs. The plateau is well suited for agriculture!...

To want is to be able to. Therefore, if a man wants...he can. Of course, there are some adults without a definite profession. We shall not review now the causes for this degrading situation. The truth is that if these people make up their minds to learn something useful and remunerative, they will be able to do so. Certainly, it is a question of will, of wanting to work, of building.

One thing is certain: by sitting on those benches, they will not go very far. And therefore, one must ask very timely: how do these people live? What are their means of subsistence? Do they live on oxygen, provided free by mother nature? And if they had to pay for it, how would they do it?

So many "national tourists!" ...Isn't this a subject to ponder? And to act upon?...

MESSAGE TO MEXICAN COMMUNIST PARTY--The secretary of the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party for foreign relations, Afonso Van-Dunem (Mbinda) sent a congratulatory message to the Central Committee of the Mexican Communist Party, all its militants and its working masses in general on the occasion of the sixty-second anniversary of its founding. "On this occasion, we congratulate your party, which has played a significant and important role in innumerable victories achieved by the Mexican people in the course of the last 62 years' struggle against international imperialism and for peace, liberty, democracy and social progress," Afonso Van-Dunem's message reads. This official also expressed the satisfaction felt by the Angolan people for the successes achieved by the Mexican Communist Party in the last elections and in the holding of the 19th congress. Afonso Van-Dunem (Mbinda) also expressed to the Central Committee of the Mexican Communist Party his wish to strengthen the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two peoples and governments. FACULTY OF MEDICINE STARTED--Lt Col Andre Petroff, member of the MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee and provincial commissioner of Huambo presided over the opening of the faculty of medicine on Monday. About 500 students are registered at this faculty, which will offer all the required courses for the first year of medical school. There will be 6 professors on the faculty. Lt Col Andre Petroff affirmed that the opening of the Huambo faculty of medicine implements a decision of extreme political significance and proves the correctness of the orientations of the MPLA-Labor Party aimed at increasing the number of physicians, nurses, midwives and other Angolan health cadres. The provincial commissioner also said that everything will be done to facilitate the establishment of the Huambo university hospital center, which should be completed by December 1982. This conference will be attended by representatives of communist parties and progressive personalities from various countries. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 22 Sep 81 p 2]

DELEGATION VISIT TO LONDON--A delegation from the department of information and propaganda of the MPLA-Labor Party, headed by its director, Adao Rodrigues "Malo" returned to Luanda on Saturday after a working visit to Great Britain. In London, the Angolan delegation conducted a campaign to inform and enlighten public opinion on the real situation of the country as a result of the aggressions perpetrated by the South African racists. Upon arrival, Adao Rodrigues "Malo" said that the results of the campaign are positive, because they contributed toward influencing London public opinion, which was receiving its information on the invasion suffered by Angola solely through Pretoria's statements. The director of the information and propaganda department added that the British newsmen who visited Angola and were the target of a bombing attack by the South African racists stressed the fighting spirit of the Angolan armed forces (FAPLA) and the high degree of awareness of the Angolan people. ARAB FUNDS FOR SELF-SUFFICIENCY IN SUGAR

[Text] Khartoum, 22 Sep (OPECNA)--Landlocked Burundi (area: 28,000 sq km) is to set up a 70 million U.S. dollar sugar complex near Bujumbura, the capital. The project is designed to make Burundi (pop 4.3 million) self-sufficient in sugar throughout the eighties thereby making substantial savings in the country's foreign exchange spending.

Announcing this here, Burundi's director of programming in the ministry of planning, Gregoire Banyiyezako, said that the project would be co-financed by the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa (10 million U.S. dollars), the OPEC Fund for International Development (7 million), the Abu Dhabi fund (5.5 million) and the African Development Bank (12.6 million). The West German Government is contributing 5.5 million dollars and the Mehta group 1.5 million. The Government of Burundi will contribute 16.5 million.

Banyiyezako last week signed a loan agreement here for 10 million dollars with the Arab Bank for economic development in Africa. The president of the bank, Chedli Ayari, said that the loan was for 17 years including a 4-year grace period at 5 percent.

He said the bank has so far invested 22 million dollars in Burundi. It has a four million dollar stake in a sewerage project, six million in a road scheme, and two million in an emergency aid program.

A spokesman at the OPEC fund for international development said that the project included the building of an entirely new township just outside Bujumbura to house 5,000 people. The money will be used for cultivating 1,925 hectares of sugar cane and the construction of a sugar cane processing plant. The new township will be self-sufficient in energy supply as power will be generated from the sugar waste.

FURTHER ON ETHIOPIAN SPOKESMAN'S REACTION TO MUBARAK STATEMENT

EA302144 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1700 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Text] A Foreign Ministry spokesman today described as impertinent and conceited a recent public statement made by the Egyptian vice president in which he warned Ethiopia of serious consequences. The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that, ever since the signing of the Ethiopia-Libyan-PDRY friendship and cooperation treaty, known reactionary quarters, particularly Egypt, have been making ill-advised attempts to exploit the new development to help them counter the growing tendencies toward popular uprising within their own countries.

The spokesman said that, having sold out the aspirations of the Arab world and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, the Egyptian rulers are suffering from a guilty conscience. He added that this sense of guilt, occurring at the same time as the recent conflict in Egypt, has resulted in the Egyptian rulers' decision to adopt the tactic of terrorizing the people.

The spokesman said that given the incoherent policy pursued by Egyptian leaders, the internal opposition confronting them and their mental torture and isolation resulting from the Camp David sellout, it is not surprising that they are trying to shift their treachery onto others.

The spokesman said that contrary to allegations by the Egyptian leadership, the friendship and cooperation treaty signed by Ethiopia, Libya and the PDRY, which were exposed to the threats of imperialism and reactionary forces, was aimed only at defending the independence, territorial integrity and revolutions of the three countries. He reiterated that the treaty should not be a source of concern or fear for any peace-loving country in the region.

The spokesman also said that those who voiced opposition to the tripartite friendship and cooperation treaty were aggressors and expansionists who found the treaty to be a serious obstacle to their plots against the progressive countries in the region formulated at the behest of international imperialism.

The spokesman said the aim of Egypt's recent plot is to create mistrust between socialist Ethiopia and the Democratic Republic of Sudan, which have good-neighborly relations.

In conclusion, the spokesman said socialist Ethiopia categorically rejects Egypt's ill-intentioned attempt at intimidation. He also said Ethiopia is capable of resolutely rebuffing any adventurous attempts by the reactionary Egyptian leadership. The spokesman said socialist Ethiopia has never accepted advice from collaborators of [words indistinct] countries nor from imperialist agents, which brag of training and arming troops of expansionist invaders and of being ready to fight alongside them.

ISRAEL DENIES REPORT ON 'JEWS FOR ARMS' DEAL

TA280606 Jerusalem POST in English 28 Sep 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] Israel yesterday flatly denied a TORONTO GLOBE AND MAIL report that it had made a "Jews for arms" deal with Ethiopia or that the Jewish agency had deliberately foiled efforts by the Mossad--Israel's intelligence agency--to bring Falasha Jews from Ethiopia to Israel.

The report, by an Israel-born academic activist on behalf of the Falashas, was denied both in a cabinet statement and in a separate statement by the Jewish agency. The agency said it would sue for libel, with the spokesman calling the report "a downright lie."

The cabinet denial referred only to the alleged efforts by the Jewish agency to thward Mossad rescue efforts. Premier Menahem Begin told the ministers at the weekly cabinet session that this allegation was utterly groundless, and his remarks were published in the official cabinet communique.

The communique made no reference to the part of the GLOBE AND MAIL story which alleged a deal between Begin and Ethiopia's ruler Mengistu Haile-Mariam whereby Israel was to supply arms to the Marxist regime in return for Falasha exit permits. According to the paper, Soviet pressure soon squelched the deal.

But this allegation too, was officially denied last night by Begin's aide, Yehuda Avner, who told the JERUSALEM POST that "there is no truth in it."

Jewish agency sources said the Jewish activist who authored the GLOBE AND MAIL story, Simcha Jakobovici, had earlier offered it to THE NEW YORK TIMES--and had been turned down.

Meanwhile in Tel Aviv, a leader of the Falasha association in Israel accused the Israeli Government of neglecting Jews in Ethiopia.

Zahari'a Bogale, secretary of the Falasha, said the government was doing noting to alleviate the plight of Ethiopia's estimated 28,000 Jews who, he said, were suffering under Colonel Mengistu's regime.

"The government knows our brothers are in danger of being wiped out," Bogale said.

ERITREAN REPRESENTATIVE ON CLASHES WITH ETHIOPIANS

GF281327 Manama Gulf News Agency in Arabic 1220 GMT 28 Sep 81

[Text] Abu Dhabi, 28 Sep (GNA)--An Eritrean official has disclosed that 35,000 Ethiopian soldiers are massing along the northern and western sectors of Eritrea to attack the liberated areas in the Eritrean countryside.

In a statement made today, Osman (Abu Bakr), the representative of the Eritrean Liberation Front-Popular Liberation Force in the Gulf countries, said that the Ethiopian air force has been carrying out constant air raids for several days against Eritrean villages in the area using the internationally-banned incendiary bombs.

The Eritrean official said that an Ethiopian MiG-21 has been shot down by anti-aircraft fire near the town of (Mandifra) in (Saray) Province, and that skirmishes broke out between units of the Ethiopian forces and the revolution's joint forces in the area that lies on the road between Cheren and Barentu when six brigades from the Ethiopian forces attempted to advance toward the liberated countryside. He said that reports from the battlefield indicate that an Ethiopian armored convoy has been ambushed by the joint Eritrean forces in the area and that two tanks and two armored cars have been destroyed and their crews wiped out.

Osman (Abu Bakr) appealed to the OAU to discuss the Eritrean question. He declared: The success achieved by the African elders committee in dealing with the Western Sahara issue gives us hope that the UAE will adopt a resolution on the Eritrean people's right to self-determination.

'GOOD RELATIONS' REPORTEDLY REASSURES SUDAN--Beirut, 1 Oct (AFP)--Ethiopia's intelligence chief visited Sudan secretly last month to convey reassurances to the Khartoum Government about "the continuity of good relations," the independent Lebanese paper AL-NAHAR reported here Wednesday night, citing Arab diplomatic sources. It noted that the reported visit came after Ethiopia signed a tripartite treaty with South Yemen and Sudan's main Arab antagonist Libya. (The three treaty countries are avowedly Marxist, whereas Sudan's leader General Ja'far Numayri is staunchly anti-communist.) The paper said the secret service head, whom it named only as Colonel Tesfaye, had stressed to President Numayri "the importance of Sudan's decision to close down the offices of the various Eritrean military organisations in Sudan" which are fighting against the Ethiopian Government. Al-Nahar also said a large quantity of arms taken from the Eritrean secessionists by the Sudanese authorities had been "offered" to rebel ex-Defence Minister Hissene Habre in neighbouring Chad, where his guerrillas have been attacking Libyan troops stationed there under an agreement with the Chad Government. WORKERS DISMISSED--The 240 employees of the Liberian-American Swedish Minerals Company (LAMCO) in Buchanan who defied the head of state's ultimatum to return to work or be replaced during the workers' recent strike have now lost their jobs. According to the Liberia News Agency, the list of names of the affected workers have been submitted to the labor ministry by the industrial relations and personnel department of Lamco. Lamco had earlier received directives from the labor ministry to forward the names of workers who would stay away from job following head of state, Samuel K. Doe's orders that workers who would refuse to return to work by 6 P.M. last Wednesday would be replaced. The ministry has, however, cautioned Lamco that the ultimatum should not be misconstrued in an effort to aggrandize any selfish aims. Neither should any decision supercede the head of state's orders. The strikers who have been dismissed were expected to receive their pay yesterday. The strike action in Buchanan which reportedly involved more than 600 workers was sparked off last Tuesday by the workers claim that Lamco had refused to pay their 12 months balance retroactive wages. EXILE GROUP APPEALS FOR UNITY AGAINST BANDA

AB250935 Paris AFP in English 0921 GMT 25 Sep 81

[Text] Dar es Salaam, 25 Sep (AFP)--A Malawian exile group in Tanzania led by former foreign Minister Kanyama Chiume appealed to other exiles today to unite and press the indomitable march to freedom in Malawi.

Mr Chiume's "Congress for the Second Republic of Malawi" said unity could defeat the savage laws and oppression of President Kamuzu Banda. The statement was understood to have been prompted by recent calls for unity by other exile fronts. Observers say the flurry of words seems to arise from a belief that Mr Banda's grip on power is loosening due to age--he is 75--and internal opposition.

Three main exile groups oppose the 17-year-old regime. Two are based in Tanzania: Mr Chiume's and the Malawi freedom movement of former Justice Minister Orton Chirwa. The Socialist League of Malawi, led by Attai Mpakati, is based in Mozambique. Thousands fled Malawi in the late 1960's after clashing with the regime.

Mr Chiume's congress said: "We hope the recent calls for unity are serious ones and not just for newspaper consumption in search of cheap popularity." It said the party was prepared to discuss real unity with any Malawian groups to help achieve true freedom for the people of Malawi.

Mr Chiume said in an interview, however, that as far as he knew his party had not yet participated in meetings with the other exile groups.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ADOPTS PLAN, AMENDMENTS

AB040700 Bamako Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 3 Oct 81

[Excerpts] The National Assembly held an extraordinary session from 17 to 28 September, adopting the 1981-85 5-year development plan and amending the constitution. Interviewed by Omar Sangare, speaker of the National Assembly Mady Sangare talks about the major characteristics of the 1981-85 development plan.

[Begin Mady recording] The major characteristics of this plan are as follows: the pursuit of self-sufficiency in food production; the harnessing and control of water resources both underground and on the surface; the consolidation of efforts for the construction of [word indistinct]; the fighting against the country's land-locked situation both internally and externally; the restoration of fundamental order in public finance and balance of payment, state corporations, professional training and employment.

[Question] Mr speaker, you have just talked about the next 5-year development plan. During this session, you were also expected to adopt some amendments to the constitution. Finally, which articles were amended?

[Answer] The amendments were essentially on articles 21, 30 and 41 of the constitution. These articles concern the duration of the term of office of the president, the appointment of a prime minister and the duration of the mandate of the deputies. Consequently, articles 25 and 38 had to be brought into harmony with the previous ones--the composition of the government and election of the president.

[Question] Mr speaker, may we know what each of these articles say--I mean articles 21, 30 and 41?

[Answer] The amended articles now read: Article 21: "The president of the republic is elected for 6 years by direct universal suffrage. A new president is elected for a period of 6 years within 50 days from the date the president's post becomes vacant." Article 30 becomes: "The president of the republic appoints ministers who are responsible to him; he defines their functions and can dismiss them. The government is composed of the president, a prime minister--eventually--and ministers. The president of the republic presides over the government." Article 41 becomes: "The National Assembly is elected for a period of 3 years by universal suffrage in accordance with the type of ballot defined by the electoral law." [end recording]

COMMENTS ON SOUTH AFRICAN PORTUGUESE-LANGUAGE COMMENTARY

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 1 Sep 81 p 8

[Excerpt] This afternoon, the South African radio compared the actual invasion of Angola to the successes achieved by the national rugby team now visiting New Zealand.

Mozambican newsmen listened to this brilliant comparison with astonishment. It was broadcast by the South African radio in a Portuguese-language commentary.

In the view of the "mini-Goebbels" of the South African radio, the armed incursions into Angola and the Springboks' peregrinations are, both of them, great victories for the country. To reduce the complete destruction of people and the indiscriminate killing of civilians to the level of a sports event constitutes a good indication of the degree of integrity prevailing in the South African information circles.

The South African radio does admit that armed operations against Angola gave rise to an immense chorus of protests throughout the international community. The commentator said that it wasn't only "the communists and the Third World" that demanded the immediate withdrawal of the South African troops, but also "the countries of Western Europe, headed by the French socialist government" (it is reasonable to assume that the foreign ministers of Great Britain and West Germany--who also vigorously condemned the aggression--are not subjected to orders from Paris).

Nevertheless, the South African radio does not hide its pride in announcing that it continues to have a solid--and lonely--friend in the world: the United States.

The commentator praised the Reagan administration, which was able to "assume a correct position" vis-a-vis the present South African military operations.

The South African radio, meanwhile, is continuing to describe these operations as a fight between the Pretoria army and the SWAPO guerrilla forces. Commenting on these statements, sources in Luanda affirmed that "in the view of the South Africans, any and all dead Angolan civilians are SWAPO guerrillas."

CHANGES IN GOVERNING STRUCTURES WELCOMED, AIMED AT INDEPENDENCE

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 2 Sep 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Healthy Understanding Prevails"]

[Text] The rearrangement which has been made with respect to the South-West House, the Tinten Palace and the powers of the National Assembly and Ministerial council are as logic as they are necessary.

The country can rejoice over the fact that a healthy understanding has ultimately prevailed. This, not only on the part of the Ministerial Council and the administrator general, but also on the part of the white Executive Committee.

It's just regrettable that the latter entity hesitated so long before helping to make these significant contributions.

Likewise it is regrettable that, for example, it broke the nice tradition around the South-West House some 3 years ago. This government residence was the abode of South Africa's representative (the administrator) in South-West Africa.

The the Executive Committee suddenly tried to create a new tradition around it--that of white peculiarity, a sort of bastion against "dispossession."

Apparently now, after 3 years, the Executive Committee realizes that no South-Westerner loses anything which continues to belong to the South-West.

The same applies to the Tinten Palace

The mere fact, that the white administration--and not the country's government--continued to be housed here, had created the impression that the South-West's National Party was the country's de facto government.

Moreover, this party unfortunately tried to make even more capital out of this.

Now the move is regretfully toward a different direction: This seat will gradually be occupied by the central government and the white representative authority will be helped in being appropriately housed elsewhere in accordance with the requirements.

This arrangement is reasonable for both sides, since the central government, as the case may be, may start taking up residence, while the white representative authority will not be confronted with a sudden "great trek."

At this stage there is no need for further discussions concerning the optimum utilization of the Windhoek Teachers College. The committee of experts, which is studying what is acceptable, will certainly know what to do, what is best and most equitable for the country and what is necessary with respect to the whites' educational requirements (which in this instance form an important point of discussion).

The transfer of essential government powers to the Ministerial Council is a matter which must be fully understood by the general public.

One thing or another must probably be said about one aspect of this, and this aspect is the Ministerial Council's authority over civil service.

1. The situation which has dominated the scene thus far has really been an artificial one: One body, the National Assembly and the Ministerial Council, has had authority over policy and legislation, while another entity, the administrator general, has had authority over the machinery which must implement policy and legislation.

2. What matters is not how harmonious the collaboration between these two levels of legislation has been. The matter of relevance is that the setup has had a sort of split legal personality and at one or another stage this is something which has had to be overcome.

3. The arrangement which has now been made is as close as can be expected to the one which will dominate the scene after independence. Thus it offers the grand opportunity for teamwork and joint action to both authority and officialdom.

4. Knowing what enormous role officialdom plays in administration, services, and development it will be highly regarded and this is the opinion expressed by the chairman of the Ministerial Council.

This is the spirit which will find the road ahead wide open.

MUDGE DISCUSSES WAR, LIMITED SELF GOVERNMENT, SUPPORT, UNITY

[Interview of Ministerial Council Chairman Dirk Mudge by Hennie du Toit of the South-West Africa Broadcasting Corporation]

[Text] In an interview conducted Wednesday by Dirk Mudge, chairman of the Ministerial Council, with commentator Hennie du Toit of the South-West Africa Broadcasting Corporation, several matters were discussed directly and to the point. What follows here is an edited edition of the important elements of this.

War

Du Toit: Won't the army operations in Southern Angola have a negative effect on the negotiations over the South-West?

Mudge: Due to the nature of this matter there will be a great deal of outcry, especially by African nations, however, the skirmishes in Southern Angola are not something unusual in the world. People are already used to violence, especially on land. The dust will soon settle down.

The world will have to accept the fact that South Africa and ourselves will not allow our destruction. We will not sit with folded hands. McHenry, of the United States, once said that there will be war until the whistle blows, meaning until the day there is an armstice.

You cannot conduct war with your arms behind your back. We will support South Africa with all the strength and means at our disposal when SWAPO is attacked--even on the other side of the border.

Ministerial Council

Du Toit: Will the Ministerial Council be able to govern effectively when it gets more authority?

Mudge: The Ministerial Council has already had certain powers previously, but it has never had complete governmental authority. Now it has effective control over all of the government's powers, even that of administration. There are still some exceptions, namely: Security, constitutional matters and foreign affairs.

The security of the region is dependent on South Africa. The Ministerial Council cannot assume control over South African forces.

The administrator general is the only person who can alter the constitution; therefore, South-West Africa's constitutional future remains in the hands of South Africa up until independence. Until that time Proclamation AG-8 will remain in effect as our constitution.

Under these circumstances, in which South-West Africa is not an independent country, the management of foreign affairs will also be the responsibility of the administrator general.

With respect to the remaining matters the Ministerial Council will now be in full control of South-West Africa. The signing of legislations by the administrator general will be just a formality; the decisions of the Ministerial Council cannot be referred back.

As the representative of South Africa in South-West Africa, until independence, the administrator general will be the formal head of state of the executive authority. He will conduct matters on the advice of the Ministerial Council, and in fact this comes down to orders from the Ministerial Council, which he must execute as head of state.

However, all powers which could have been transferred to the Ministerial Council before independence are now transferred over and this includes administrative powers.

We now actually have a government with teeth. Therefore it can be expected that we will be able to govern effectively.

Now we can derive an advantage from the fact that we are governing and this means a lot for us in the struggle to victory.

Adjustments

Du Toit: Have all accomodations now been made or are there still matters which must be adjusted?

Mudge: There are certain changes which the administrator general will have to make. This has to do with smaller matters which will have to be adjusted. To cite an example: It is our policy that there should be no forced ethnic classifications. It is up to an individual to want to register as a member of a national group. Persons who do not feel at home in some of the national groups, or feel that they do not belong there, need not register.

Such persons are simply South-Westerners and the central government will be the one to look after them. They do not form a so-called twelfth group with a representative authority.

Our policy is that a person may not be classified against his wish nor may he be rejected against his wish. A person belongs to his maternal group. Such a group may not reject him if he wants to be a member of that group. Take the case of the Seemueller boy: He belongs nowhere else then in the German language group and therefore among the whites; his real mother was white and German speaking and the mother who adopted him was white and German speaking.

Priorities

Du Toit: Can you give us an indication of the priorities set by the Ministerial Council?

Mudge: When someone sets priorities the inclination is perhaps to set them on material things: Housing, job opportunities and things of that nature. The Ministerial Council will certainly give attention to these things.

Of course agriculture is also of the utmost importance, because we are so dependent on it. The same applies to our other sources of income such as the mines and the fisheries.

However, the most important priority remains political stability and confidence and the maintenance of law and order. This is the highest priority. It is impossible to buy the people's support with houses and job opportunities. More than that is necessary.

If we want to combat radical forces effectively then we must get the population behind the government. As a government body the National Assembly can take strong and unanimous action. This can be brought about through the support of all parties, but not just that; what is also necessary is the support of individuals. We can form a united front despite differences. I therefore make an appeal for unity to everybody.

Risks

Du Toit: Does the amount of insecurity prevailing in the country impair the formation of a purposeful unity front?

Mudge: There is a measure of insecurity due to economic conditions, the drought and the fact that no finality has been attained with respect to the constitutional future of the South-West. However, this is not of such a nature as to prompt fear in us.

The Ministerial Council will not run any risks with the future of the South-West. We will not allow ourselves to be cheated. In conjunction with this it is necessary that the masses form ranks behind the internal parties, but this is dependent on the creation of dispositions and dispositions cannot be bought.

Some of the greatest stumbling blocks in the way of good dispositions are racial prejudice and discrimination. All of us must get away from these sort of things if we want to maintain a harmonious unity against the attack.

Emotions

Du Toit: Don't you find that there is a greater amount of calmness in the country?

Mudge: Certainly so. The relations among white ranks are much more relaxed than before.

I am very happy about this, Emotions have subsided.

I can point out with appreciation that the most recent consultations between the Ministerial Council and the white Executive Committee have taken place in a particularly good spirit. The example set by leaders can be followed up by the population.

We say that we are democrats and this means that we want a system which has a place for parties and differences. In a democratic system there is a right of existence for differing viewpoints.

We are fighting for such a system and it is exactly for this reason that we do not want to condemn the existence of differences.

However, we must learn to differ without hating, without being harsh and personal.

SWA MEDIA NOT INVITED TO SA PRESS BRIEFING

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

LOCAL executive management of the media in SWA were not invited to a confidential top-level press briefing in Cape Town last night concerning the present round of negotiations on the Territory.

The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, the Minister of Foreign Affiars, Mr Pik botha, the Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, and the Director General of Foreign Affairs, Dr Brand Fourie met the editors of all major newspapers in South Africa, the SABC and the chairmen and general managers of the main newspaper groups.

The purpose of the meeting was to brief the press fully on the SWA negotiations on a confidential basis and to request them to use circumspection in reporting owing to the delicacy fo the issue.

Reacting to the Sapa report this morning, Mr Peter Meinert, Managing Director of the John Meinert Group in Windhoek said that the exclusion of the local media from the briefing is indicative of "a typical neo-colonial attitude."

"I can understand that the SA media should be briefed on the situation, but we, who are intimately involved with the independence issue, should certainly not be excluded under the present circumstances," he said.

Meanwhile the SWA Ministers' Council and the majority DTA said in a statement in Windhoek yesterday that they would not react further to the scant information that has been leaking out via the media.

"The Ministers' Council and the DTA will be prepared to enter the talks when and if they are fully involved and exhaustively informed as has been promised by SA and the US," the statement said.

VAN ZIJL'S RESIGNATION LEAVES VACUUM IN PARTY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] The surprise resignation yesterday of Advocate Eben Van Zijl as Vice-Chairman of the National Party in SWA has created difficulties for the Party in finding replacements to fill several top positions in the Party hierarchy.

Mr Van Zijl's resignation means that a replacement has to be found for him as part of the Aktur delegation in the National Assembly, as well in the Executive of the Administration for Whites which is dominated by the NP.

Mr Kosie Pretorius told the Advertiser yesterday after the announcement of Mr Van Zijl's multiple resignation that Mr Pretorius' own seat in the National Assembly would also have to filled.

He said these would be announced shortly.

In terms of Proclamation AG 8 of 1980, the Chairman of a second-tier authority may not be seated in the National Assembly, and with Mr Pretorius's recent election to the Chair of the White Administration's Executive, the leadership of the Aktur delegation in the National Assembly has also become vacant.

Both Mr Pretorius and Mr Van Zijl's vacant seats in the Assembly would have to filled before the next session later in October.

Added to that, there are the two additional seats to which each second-tier authority has become entitled in terms of AG 21 of this year, which Aktur would also have to fill before the resumption of the Assembly, bringing to four the total number of National Assembly seats remaining to be filled by Aktur.

The National Party is the main component of Aktur, with only one non-NP member seated in the National Assembly along with the other four delegates.

On the second-tier level, Mr Van Zijl's resignation has created one vacancy, which according to Mr Pretorius would be filled by nomination when the NP caucus meets early next month.

Mr Adolf Brinkman who will now probably move from second vice-chairman of the party to number one vice-chairman, will leave a gap in the vice-chairmanship which still has to be filled as a result of Mr Van Zijl's resignation.

According to Mr Pretorius, the Central Committee of the Party will decide on a new vice-chairman during the course of next month as well.

There is speculation that Mr Edward Benadie, newly appointed Editor of the Party mouthpiece Die Suidwester, might be asked to take up one of the National Assembly seats for Aktur.

TRADITIONAL

Previous editors of the Die Suidwester have traditionally landed equivalent Party posts in the SWA Administration.

Other names from amongst the ranks of prominent NP figures who might be called upon to take their place in the official vacancies in public life, include Fanie Vilonel, Ronnie van Zyl, Fritz Potgieter and Petra Hamman. Dr Grammie Brand, MEC has been suggested by some, as a candidate for the National Assembly.

Informed opinion has it that Mr Jannie de Wet, who has acquired considerable stature within the Party hierachy of late, will not accept the Party's vice-chairmanship, and would not go back to the National Assembly since he has only recently resigned from there. On the other hand, pressure of circumstances might force him to lend a hand.

Coming shortly after the resignation last week of Suidwes Drukkery's manager Mr Frans Aucamp, Mr Eben Van Zijl's resignation this week is regarded as a sign by many political observers in Windhoek that the NP is losing more momentum and is on the way downhill, especially after the retirement of the father figure of the Party, Mr A H du Plessis a few months ago.

With Mr Eben Van Zijl, until recently considered to be the Crown Prince of the NP, also out, there is little weight left, so it is said, in the NP leadership.

SPEECH DELINEATES MAIN CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENTS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Sep 81 pp 4-5

[Text]

THERE ARE a few cardinal points which should be born in mind when one is discussing or meditating on any constitutional system or process in SWA at this stage.

1 SWA is not an independent State.

2 Constitutional institutions presently operating in SWA constitute only an interim and limited government. Certain aspects of government can only be exercised by independent states and since we are not independent, those aspects cannot be excercised by the interim government.

3 Our present interim government system is based on democracy.

4 Whenever one considers the scope and signifisance of the Representative Authorities proclamation AG 8 of 1980 (often simply referred to as AG 8) one should remember that it should be done in conjunction with:

a the different constitutions of the various representative authorities;

b the constitution of the Central Government consisting of the Administrator General, the Council of Ministers and the National Assembly.

Our present constitutional dispensation is one of multiple government, ordinarily referred to as a multiple tier government. Firstly we have a central government with residuary powers. Secondly there are a specific number of representative authorities with enumerated powers but with the interesting exceptions, as I shall indicate later on, that representative authorities have the individual option of exercising only those functions, powers and duties which are conferred to them by the Administrator-General. Such powers not so conferred remain vested in the Central Government.

A second feature of representative authorities is that they exercise jurisdiction in respect of those powers conferred to them, over all members of their particular population group and not over a specific geographic region. Thirdly we have a system of local government, municipalities, village management boards etc.

This latter system has been investigated by a public commission whose report is presently being considered by the Council of Ministers' and some adaptations could be expected in view of our changing circumstances.

● To come closer to Proclamation AG 8 and the system of representative authorities.

The composition of a representative authority is regulated by Proclamation AG 8 and the constitution of the particular authority. As far as AG 8 is concerned it provides for a Legislative Authority, which is empowered to make Ordinances within the framework of AG 8 and the constitution of that Authority, on those matters which are listed in the Schedule and which have been conferred on that Authority by the Administrator General.

The Proclamation (AG 8) also sets out the minimum qualifications of suffrage to elect the members of the Legislative Authority (generally also referred to in the various constitutions as Legislative Assemblies). These minimum qualifications may be augmented by the representative authority itself by its constitution and so also the number of representatives.

Certain disqualifications of membership are contained in the Proclamation, and these may likewise be augmented by the constitution of every particular representative authority. Similarly the Proclamation and the particular constitution provides for other matters such as the duration of the Legislative Authority, the frequency of sessions, languages to be used and other relevant matters.

It must however be noted that Ordinances of representative authorities are subject to the assent of the Administrator General, who has the power to refer it back to the legislative authority for reconsideration in the light of such information or advice as he may prefer to offer.

Ordinances become of force after such assent and on their promulgation in the Official Gazette of the Territory and each authority has the right to publish his own Official Gazette.

MANY people in SWA and elsewhere have complained that they have not been able to keep up with constitutional developments in the country and do not fully understand the rationale of the multiple government system that has emerged during the past three years.

Top constitutional expert in the AG's office, MR FRED VISAGIE, explained just that in a presentation to the Namibian Educational Forum last week. We have published Mr Visagie's speech in full as we believe that it is an important document.

● A representative authority also consists of an executive authority (generally called the Executive Committee) for the membership of which, like the legislative authority, minimum qualifications are laid down, and which could be augmented by the constitution of every representative authority. An executive committee conducts the administration of the affairs of the particular population group in respect of those matters that are conferred to the legislative authority.

It could also allocate its powers, duties and functions to different administrative divisions, which have the same functions as government departments, vix the actual administration of the affairs of the population group.

It is normal in any system of multiple government that each constituent political body has its own administrative system to enforce its local laws.

● In order to provide for the financial requirements of representative authorities the Proclamation (ie AG 8) creates a Revenue Fund for every representative authority. This fund consists of all revenue which accrue to the representative authority as well as moneys which are paid to it in terms of any law.

Expenditure from this fund can, subject to certain emergency measures, only be effected if it is duly appropriated by the legislative authority. Estimates of revenue and expenditure must therefore be appropriated by the legislative authority.

I may point out that the legislative authority is also empowered to levy direct taxes on the income of members of the population group and personal taxes on them. Such taxes are considered as revenue and are paid to the Revenue Fund.

It is of interest to note that this Proclamation does not prescribe or determine the basis of the customary allocation by the Central Government to representative authorities. Such allocations are paid over in terms of law, usually the Appropriation Act passed by the National Assembly.

● Those population groups for which representative authorities may be instituted are enumerated in the proclamation. Thus representative authorities have been instituted for all those groups except the Basters and the Bushmen. Once a representative authority is instituted, it does not touched the person he realised that he was dead.

At that moment, Van Eeden said he was panick-stricken. He decided that he should get rid of the body for fear of the consequences. He started the car which was parked alongside the river and decided to throw the body into the water. After having driven about 100 metres, Van Eeden said he stopped the car, picked up a brick which he intented using to anchor the body of his victim.

He cut off a safety belt from the Mazda bakkie, tied the brick onto the one end and secured the other end to the body. He then dragged the body down to the river and waded into the water for about five metres before he finally sank it to the bottom.

After Van Eeden ended his affidavit, a plea of not guilty was recorded by the Court.

The Attorney-General Mr Don Brunette who prosecuted for the State was then asked to call witnesses.

Dr Jurie Paul Pieter Nel, a Senior State pathologist, said in evidence that he had carried out an autopsy on the body of Jacobus Reitz, whose age he estimated about 32 years.

Provision also exists that functions may be partially taken up. The Administrator General may transfer to a representative authority different subjects of a defined matter (ie a power of function). It is therefore possible to transfer a subdivision of a function as defined in the schedule but it must be borne in mind that a function or subdivision of a function once conferred, becomes the responsibility of the representative authority throughout the full scope of its jurisdiction, that is throughout the Territory, where ever its members may be.

Functions or sub-divisions of functions cannot be taken up within certain regions only.

The allocation of subdivision of powers is another method of not overburdening representative authorities with responsibilities it may not be able to cope with. Representative authorities are also further assisted in the execution of their powers and functions by the fact that in terms of Section 30 of the Proclamation the Administrator General (thus the Central Government) may make officers and employees available. These would normally be officials or employees who possess the skills, expertise and experience needed by the representative authority.

Another form of assistance is the so called agency services which will be discussed a little later on.

The allocation of powers to representative authorities and especially the progressive manner in which it could be done presupposes a mutual responsibility on the Central and representative government.

The Central Government should be responsible not to transfer powers to such authorities that may not be equipped to exercise it properly. On the other hand the representative authority should be responsible enough not to claim powers it may not be able to execute.

The system allows opportunities for representative authorities to develop themselves from a small and uncomplicated form of government with only a few basic powers, to a position where it could take the full brunt of the totality of the powers enumerated.

The system not only affords opportunities for development of political bodies and those officiating in those bodies ie politicians but also on the administrative or executive side. This may be done without neglecting the interests of the members of their group in respect of such functions they are unable to handle, because the central government in the meanwhile takes charge of this.

● The system of representative authorities is an innovation in the sense that its jurisdiction is extended not to a geographic area but to all members of the particular population group wherever they are in SWA.

Representative governments are therefore not regional governments or homelands but group governments confined to the same regional area as the central government. They are group orientated and group aimed to render services to their members on matters which affect the group particularly and which are set out in detail in the Schedule to Proclamation AG 8. I mention only a few:

occupation and possession of traditional land, farming settlements, financial aid to farmers, education up to Std 10, personal health services, social welfare services, subeconomic housing, promotion of cultural matters including aspects such as libraries, museums archives, etc..

The advantage of group government as opposed to regional government is that a representative authority has the power to render services to its members wherever they reside or may be. In the case of regional governments similar services may only be rendered within the geographic bounds of the region.

Should a particular individual wishes to reside at a certain place, he need no longer be contend with what is offered by the regional government of that particular resort, his needs and aspiratoins are fulfilled by his own group government. Group governments must therefore be equipped to render services to members of their group.

In this respect Proclamation AG 8 creates the necessary machinery to enable representative authorities to carry out its functions in respect of members of its particular population group. The representative authority may of course carry out its functions directly by its own administrative organs. Where this is not possible or practical it could recruit, by agreement, the services of any other representative authority or the central government to carry out such functions on its behalf.

Representative authorities may on the other hand again render services, by agreement, to any other representative authority or to the Central Government. Examples of such agreement are common: eg the central department of National Education is rendering educational services to almost every representative authority in areas where they find it impracticable to run their own schools.

Hospital facilities and other health services in the northern areas such as Ovambo, Kavango and Caprivi are, by agreement, available to members of other population groups.

The system of group government has proved not to be as impracticable as it would appear on the fact of it. It has the advantage that through the system of agency services, functions are carried out and services rendered to members of a population group to the satisfaction and according to the wishes and policy of the representative authority responsible for the well-being of its members.

It has the further advantage that matters and problems affecting a population gorup in particular, which could in our heterogenous society be of a peculiar and sensitive nature, are dealt with by the representatives of that group themselves, without interference from outside.

The common interest of that group can best be served by themselves in terms of their own taste, their own way of living and according to their particular customs and traditions.

A third advantage lies in the fact that representative authorities have a large area of responsibility and have of necessity to cast their spheres of interest much wider. This brings new dimensions, new problems, new challenges and therefore stimulates the activities and responsibilities of the representative authority. The fact that it carries responsibilities in remote areas, where it may not have administrative facilities and is bound to seek assistence from other representative authorities, forsters a climate for closer cooperation between different representative authorities, different population groups.

It offers opportunities to better understand each other, to have mutual empathy for each others problems, outlooks and aspirations. I can quote you a good example: in order to assist the Damara authority in their struggle against drought the Tswana authority made a farm with sufficient grazing available to them in return for the exchange of a couple of fullbred cattle which is to form a neucleus of a stud by the Tswana authority.

● To summarise:

1 representative authorities are part of our present interim and multiple government system.

2 Proclamation AG 8 together with the different constitutions provide for the composition of the authorities, the organs necessary for their functioning as well as for financial and other incidental matters.

3 provision is made for progressive allocation of powers allowing for development.

4 representative governments are group and not regional governments and could render services through agents and are not constrained by regions.

TOPNAARS RESIST RESETTLEMENT ATTEMPTS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Sep 81 pp 8-9

[Text] The Topnaars, one of the oldest Nama tribes in Namibia, is facing a terrific struggle for survival.

It occupies the Kuiseb valley near Walvis Bay and is being pressurised to move by the Department of Nature Conservation and the Department of Water Affairs.

This became clear recently when I visited the Headman, Mr Seth Kootjie, at his home in Narraville. Mr Kootjie is also a fulltime employee of SWAWEC. Newly-elected, he is only 30 years old.

The Topnaar tribe consists of about 600 people and it is the intention of the authorities to resettle them in the south of the Territory.

The Topnaars however have vowed that they will stay where they are and their bones will be buried in the Kuiseb valley.

The Topnaars are headed by a Topnaar Council which has jurisdiction stretching from the Kuisebmond Black township (near Walvis Bay) to Conception Bay in the south, and from there eastwards to Hudaob (bordering on the Maltahöhe district). The jurisdiction also includes several settlements along the Kuiseb river.

When I visited Mr Kootjie at his place of residence in Narraville, he said in clear language that his people were facing a major confrontation with the Department of Nature Conservation on the question of the occupation of the Kuiseb valley.

The former SWA Administration proclaimed the Kuiseb valley a nature and game reserve. This resulted in the establishment of the well-known Namib Naukluft Park by the Department of Nature Conservation inside the traditional land of the Topnaars without apparently consulting them.

The headman Mr Seth Kootjie also alleged that the Walvis Bay Municipality was about to establish a rest camp on the graves of former traditional leaders of the Topnaars who were buried at Rooibank as far back as the Great Depression of 1933.

"This unfriendly act of the Municipality is a disgrace," the Headman said and shook his head in silent anger.

Mr Kootjie said that ever since the Department of Nature Conservation established a permanent camp at Gobabeb, many restrictions were imposed on the general movement of the Topnaars in their traditional tribal land.

He quoted a recent example where members of his Council of Five tried to survey the centre of the Kuiseb River in search of easily accessible underground water.

The Department of Nature Conservation officials said that without permission the Topnaars could not enter prohibited areas. But said Mr Kootjie, his Council did not pay much attention to the gimmicks of these officials, whom he regarded as intruders. He said that his Council continued unabated with the scheme and a number of fountains were discovered. He declined to disclose the location.

Various attempts have been made since the introduction of the notorious Odendaal Plan in 1962 to remove the Topnaars from the Kuiseb valley, Mr Seth Kootjie said.

"Many officials of the former SWA Administration visited settlements during those years and urged my people to move out."

Farms have been bought by the authorities between Berseba and Gibeon where the Topnaars could possibly be resettled.

Headman Kootjie said that every nation has its pride. The Topnaars will never move out of the Kuiseb valley. He said that if needs be, all the Topnaars would die on the Kuiseb riverbanks.

The Headman went on to question the sincerity and real motives of Nature Conservation in grabbing the Kuiseb valley without consulting the traditional rightful owners of the land.

ABUNDANT WATER

He feared that his people might lose an area with abundant sources of water. The Headman maintained that the Kuiseb valley could easily supply water to the rest of the country from its underground reserves.

The Department of Water Affairs has set up a camp at Rooibank from where it is supplying water to the Rössing Uranium mine, Swakopmund and Walvis Bay.

Headman Kootjie said that Water Affairs was making a lot of money by depleting the subterranean water reserves of the Kuiseb valley. While they were selling water to the three centres mentioned and profiting from the traditional land of the Topnaars, his people were suffering from poverty and lived in a primitive style.

Water Affairs was not even paying a fee to the traditional owners of the land, he added.

Headman Kootjie said he hoped to establish a Topnaar Tribal Fund, which could tax companies which use Topnaar water.

The present activities of the Department of Water Affairs is detrimental to the general welfare and interest of the Topnaars, according to Headman Kootjie.

He said that in the past his people, some of whom are also farmers, used to dig shallow wells from which they provided water for their animals.

But since Water Affairs had encroached on the area, he alleged, the water level had dropped. This made it difficult for people to reach it with simple tools and resulted in a shortage of water at some settlements.

WASTING

When he took up the matter with the Administration, Mr Kootjie said, Water Affairs built five windmills with boreholes. However, not one of the windmills worked. It was more a case of wasting valuable State-money, he said.

No regular maintenance teams were sent out to look after the bore-holes. Mr Kootjie complained that at Klipneus, goats contracted disease and some died due to yellowish water extracted from one of the boreholes. He alleged that this was the kind of service the Topnaars received in lieu of their land which is being exploited.

The stretch of 140 km of the Kuiseb valley where his people lived was rich with manifold minerals Mr Kootjie said. There is a copper mine at Gorob.

He said that the Rio Tinto mining group discovered minerals at Soutrivier recently.

Although RTZ had no prospecting rights from the Topnaars as rightful owners of the tribal land, they moved into the area.

"We are keeping a close watch on them" the Headman said with a grin.

LEGAL

Headman Kootjie quoted the existence of legal treaties 16, 14 and 11 of which copies were available at the offices of the Walvis Bay Magistrate and the Windhoek Archive. These documents gave his people every rights to be in the area, he said.

Besides the local documents, the culture of the Topnaars was different from the rest of other Nama tribes. He said that his people could never adapt to another lifestyle outside the Kuiseb valley.

Apart from normal animal husbandry, the Headman said that some of his people lived from sea-fishing while others make a living from the annual harvesting of the !nara fruit, a kind of a wild melon, grown near the sanddunes.

Mr Kootjie said that the !nara is a income generator for the average Topnaar family. He said that a bag weighing 40 kg of roasted !nara pips sells for about R35 at varoius markets in mainly Swakop-

BLACK BUSINESSES RESENT WHITES IN KATATURA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] The Katutura Advisory Board reversed a controversial recommendation of its Management Committee yesterday to allow a White tenderer to take over a former Municipal beerhall in the centre of Katutura at its monthly meeting.

Mr D van Coller Wessels of Windhoek was one of seven applicants for the use of the hall. He offered R1 386 per month in rental.

The beerhall was formerly used to sell sorghum beer to residents of Katutura. There was also a bar where hard liquor was sold.

It is not known at this stage whether Mr Wessels intented using the hall for the same purpose.

If the recommendation of the Management Committee was accepted by the full Advisory Board, it would have meant that Mr Wesels could have become the second White man to own a business in Katutura.

About a month ago, Mr A Lubbe took over a refreshment shop at the Katutura Owambo Hostel.

Black businessmen were up in arms when they heard that another business was about to be taken over by a White. Some felt that Whites had all advantages in the business field and chances should be given to Blacks, especially in Katutura.

They vowed to air their objections through the Namibia Chamber of Commerce and Industries, of which the majority are members. They declined that their names be quoted at this stage.

Mr Johannes Huiseb, Chairman of the Katutura Management Committee who made the recommendation that Mr Wessels could occupy the beerhall, said that nothing barred Whites to qualify for businesses in Katutura.

He said that Article 35 of a proclamation dealing with this matter was changed by the former AG, Mr M T Steyn, to such an extent that persons of all colour, regardless of race could obtain businesses or even plots in Katutura.

Mr Huiseb said that there is no law giving special protection to Black businessmen and from now on they can expect to compete against Whites even if this meant that they would have to face up to stronger competition from Whites on tenders.

Mr Leon Venter, the Director of Katutura said upon enquiry that he forsaw no problems at all in the manner Whites were obtaining business in Katutura.

He said that tenders were called for during March this year, to let the old beer-hall in the centre of Katutura. It just happened that a White offered the highest amount to occupy the hall.

Mr Venter said that since a few Whites had taken up permanent residence in Katutura, they had a right to occupy businesses where they lived.

ANGRY GROOTFONTEIN FAPMERS THREATEN VIOLENCE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Sep 8. p 1

[Text] Farmers in the Grootfontein district yesterday threatened to blow up the water canals which are being built between the Okavango river and the Von Bach dam near Okahandja.

The canals are being built by the Department of Water Affairs at a cost of R250m.

The threats emerged on the farm Ossa yesterday when farmers in the Grootfontein and Otavi areas got together to protest about the Department of Water Affairs project coupled with the lack of industrial development in the Grootfontein area.

They met under the auspices of the Grootfontein Farmers Union and were met by Ministers' Council member Mr H von Hase and the Secretary for Water Affairs, Mr J Jordaan. Mr Von Hase is responsible for infrastructure.

The main grievance concerning the canal was that the construction work damaged farmland and that the farmers were not being compensated.

The farmers claimed that they had suffered the same sort of damage at the hands of the Roads Department.

The farmers were also up in arms that the water table in their areas was being overtaxed by the mines, such as Kombat and TCL, and that again they were not receiving compensation.

"We are as little interested in Windhoek as Windhoek is interested in us," one angry farmer, a Mr Pretorius, told the meeting.

"I will fight this canal across our farmland to the last. I do not want compensation for losses incurred. I do not want to be paid for land expropriated for the canal. I want my water", he added.

A voice called from the floor: "He has lots of support from us, Mr Chairman." That was greeted with an enthusiastic "hear, hear."

The farmers insisted on seeking written guarantees that intensive planning by the Department of Water Affairs would not lead to an overtaxing of their underground water resources, and that if it did, they would be fully compensated.

Fears were also expressed that adverse effects on the water table would be detrimental to tourist centres in the area.

The Eastern Water carries system will consist of a series of dams north of Windhoek joined by canals and pipelines and it has reached its fourth and second last stage, explained Mr Jordaan.

Once the canal and pipeline network that joined up the Von Bach, Swakopport and Omatako dams with the underground Karstveld water system due for completion in 1986, the final stage would commence, linking the entire system with the Okavango River.

SCARES

It is the interim stage where the canal system will be fed with water pumped from underneath the Karstveld agricultural area while the final canal to the Okavango is under construction till sometime in the 1990s, that scares the farmers and urban communities in the Territory's north.

The meeting also protested against the trend for Windhoek to be favoured for new industrial projects, in spite of its critical water problem, while Mr Von Hase tried to explain that the State could not go too far in stimulating decentralisation at the expense of a free enterprise economy.

The meeting decided to take its case to the SWA Agricultural Union congress next month, which would fight its case at a higher level with the Government departments involved.

BRIEFS

WHITE SELLOUT BLASTED--Pretoria: The leaders of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, the National Conservative Party and the Afrikaner Weerstands Beweging has called jointly for action to prevent the "selling out" of SWA's Whites by the South African Government. "Independence for SWA is no solution," Mr Jaap Marais, Dr Connie Mulder and Mr Eugene TerreBlanche said in a joint statement issued in Pretoria by the HNP secretariat. "On the contrary, it (independence) creates dangers that will bring the pistol to the heart of SA. This is why the UN and the leftist forces want SWA detached from SA. "There is only one road to be followed: Swapo must be completely defeated through sustained military action like that recently in Angola and all forms of help and assistance must be withheld from Zambia and other states that accommodate terrorists. Negotiations with the UN on independence for SWA must be abandoned (gestaak). "Only when the terrorists have been driven out of southern Africa and peace, order and stability restored can thinking begin about constitutional changes, if this is at all necessary or sensible." [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Sep 81 p 2]

SWABC WHITE GUILT WARNING--The SWABC has been warned not to allow itself to be used as an instrument assisting in the creation of a guilt complex amongst Whites in SWA. Mr Sarel Becker, leader of the HNP in SWA, issued a press statement in which he refers to the recent programme on the German service of the SWABC dealing with the German-Herero War at the turn of the century. Without quoting evidence to the contrary, Mr Becker maintains that the historical interpretation of the war which poses General Van Trotha and the SWA German community as the villains, is essentially false. According to Mr Becker, "the cruelties committed by the Herero are reduced (in the radio programme) to a minimum." Although the contents of the programme constitute an attack on the Germans, the trend entails aggression against the Whites as a whole, Mr Becker says. S.W. AFRICAN TV OPERATIONAL--The chairman of the SABC [South African Broadcasting Corporation] board, Professor [Christian name indistinct] (?Van Turen) today officially handed over control of the South West African Television to the South West African Broadcasting Corporation. Overseas programs, SABC material and local news programs will be broadcast and there will be regular broadcasts in German. Apart from the SWABC's own news programs, the EWS Service will also show the SABC's TV news, but a day later. The television service will be picked up in the Windhoek and Oshakati areas. PCR STATES UNITED LEFT NEEDED TO EFFECT CHANGE

/Communique by the Central Committee of the Reunion Communist Party, after its meeting on 2 August 1981, at Le Port: "How Can Change be Achieved in Reunion?/

/Text/The Central Committee of the Reunion Communist Party, meeting on 2 August, published the following statement:

Twelve weeks after the election of Francois Mitterrand to the presidency of the French Republic, and six weeks after the victory of the Left in the last legislative elections in France, the Central Committee of the Reunion Communist Party wishes to express its views on the political, economic, and social situation in Reunion and on its future evolution.

The persistence of the worldwide economic crisis in the capitalist system continues, and will continue, to weigh heavily upon the evolution of the situation of other countries' economies, especially that of France. The desire of the leaders of the United States by their refusal to decrease the high interest rates on the dollar... to maintain, especially the supremacy of American interests over those of others, constitutes a considerable handicap so far as other countries are concerned. In particular it can hinder or render much more difficult the realization of the economic, social, and political goals that the leftist government in France has set itself. The consequences on the situation in Reunion are immediate and considerable.

Even though in France the Left really does hold political power, and even though it is making an effort, if not to dominate the economic power, at least to increase the influence of the state in it, in Reunion, on the contrary, the Right is still in power.

This was seen at the time of the last legislative sessions, during which the defrauders who prevented the victory of a leftist candidate in the second precinct had the advantage of obvious complicity at both political and administrative levels. And today, the attitude shown then by certain leaders of the Reunion socialist federation appears in all its full harmfulness.

This was seen, and is still being seen, in FR3, which despite a few attempts to make it accessible, is still, because of the wishes of certain people, a propaganda function for the Right.

It was also seen after 10 May, in the decision by officials in important commercial sectors to increase all prices, systematically, week after week, to the extent that there is talk of a veritable game of musical price-tags.

The repeated increases are giving rise to justifiable anger among the population, especially since they are aggravating the ones decided upon by the central government (transport, cigarettes...) and sometimes imposed by the international situation (petroleum, rice...)

It is obvious to everybody that most of these increases were decided upon in a spirit if political revenge. But they are also having serious economic repercussions (the need to reopen the issue of salary agreements, reduction of planters' revenues, the endangered future of certain construction enterprises with recent increases, in the price of cement, etcetera...)

As of now, it is imperative that the government act quickly to control all prices and to freeze a certain number of them.

What is happening with prices demonstrates that here the Right has not disarmed. It is more than ever motivated by the desire for revenge, and anything offers a pretext for it to attack the new government.

The conditions under which the FEDECANNE [expansion unknown] leaders conducted the last planters' strike, with the open complicity of rightist politicians like Gaston Hoarau, Marie Therese de Chateauvieux, Paul Benard, and their gang; the vindictive articles in the JOURNAL DE L'ILE, heaping blame on the present government for the disastrous results of a policy for which it was not responsible; the persistence of Michel Debre's use of intellectual terrorism, brandishing, at the slightest suggestion of change, the scarecrow of "dumping" independence, dislocation of the republic, etcetera, all indicate very clearly the determination of the Right to oppose systematically the new policies of the Left.

It would be a mistake to underestimate these attacks and to assume that they concern only Reunion aspects of power politics. To let oneself be drawn, as some leaders of the Reunion Socialist Federation are doing, alas! into the political maneuvers of the Right to divide the Left in Reunion, is to guarantee that issues will be reopened through the reaction of Reunion's left-wing politics as a whole, and at the same time shake confidence in the left-wing government in France.

The Left must present a united front to cope with the maneuvers of the Right in Reunion. Unity is indispensable, and it must rest on the alliance of the two main organizations of the Left, the PCR [Reunion Communist Party] and the Socialist Party Federation.

This alliance would form the basis for great rally of Reunion men and women for the future of Reunion; it could be founded upon the preparation of a joint development plan made up from each party's projects.

This project would start with a thorough evaluation of the situation that is the legacy of more than 25 years of rightist policy in Reunion. It would attack the serious problems worrying the majority of the men and women of Reunion and would make an effort to reduce the imbalances existing in the various sectors, as well as social inequities. The main thing is to create the best conditions possible for real development of the country with a view to reducing unemployment, substituting jobs for assistance, etcetera.

The PCR is convinced that the path to be taken will have to turn away from the systematic policy known as integration, practised for decades by the Right. Respect for Reunion's specific needs and the necessity for self-sufficient development will have to be the paths taken.

At a time when on the one hand a two-year provisional plan is being devised, and on the other hand discussions are about to begin on application of decentralization measures for the DOM [Overseas Departments], the PCR feels that the time has come for the men and women of Reunion themselves to propose the solutions appropriate for their own country.

The way in which the government approached the problem of the planters, by setting up joint consultation structures and in undertaking to investigate thoroughly in the spirit of settling the issues in the best interests of the most disadvantaged, shows that anything is possible on condition that everyone take his share of responsibility. The PCR, for its part, states that it is ready to assume all its own.

It recalls its statement on last 14 May, asserting its view that the bill submitted by Gaston Deferre and the socialist deputies under the former government constitutes an acceptable framework for the future.

The PCR feels that henceforth there should be nothing to prevent meetings taking place between political organizations of the Left and prominent individuals in the political, economic, social, or cultural spheres to consider together how to plan and implement actions under the new policy.

The seriousness of the situation, like the importance of the responsibilities that the men and women of Reunion will have to meet under the new administrative measures for municipalities, departments, and regions, make it necessary to act quickly, and also to gather the largest possible consensus concerning the project for the future.

For its part, the PCR will spare no effort to reach these objectives.

FIGHT AGAINST SPECULATION--Sao Tome--The council of ministers of the Democratic Republic Sao Tome recently issued a communique in which the Ministries of Agriculture and Fisheries, of Commerce and of Justice are charged with carrying out a series of concrete actions to eliminate speculation in the country. The same communique notes that these entities should improve the distribution system, organize the producers' activities and adopt legal measures to punish violations of officially determined prices. The communique of the council of ministers indicates that this decision results from its having noted, during its last ordinary session, that the rise in the prices of foodstuffs produced within the country is due to low production, the deficient distribution system and the activities of various groups of speculators. "The speculation which allows a group of individuals to live at the expense of the deterioration in the people's living conditions is in contradiction with the principles of social justice inspiring government actions," the communique of the Sao Tome council of ministers stresses. OPPOSITION LEADER HITS GOVERNMENT 'PLOT'--Mr Abdoulaye Wade, secretary general of the Senegalese Democratic Party [PDS]--the only parliamentary opposition to President Abdou Diouf's Socialist Party--condemned, in Paris Monday, 28 September, the "political machination" in his country against his party, several members of which were recently arrested. During a press conference Mr Wade rejected the accusation of subversion leveled at his party and expressed the view that this "plot" is the work of a group of people belonging "either to the government or to the socialist party." Mr Wade stated that the PDS has never contemplated seizing power by force. He denied that members of his party had been in possession of "weapons." "Despite many searches," he said, "no weapons have been found, nor will they be since we have never had any." The PDS also stated that he had not been informed of a visit to Libya by several members of his party. OPPOSITION TO U.N. SEATING OF POL POT REGIME VOICED

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE ousted regime of Pol Pot — the Khmer Rouge — has won the "right" to continue to represent Kampuchea at the United Nations.

It is the third consecutive time that the General Assembly has allowed in representatives of the man whose four-year genocidal rule had reduced a nation's population from eight million to five million.

The scenario leading to the weekend vote in favour of Pol Pot in the General Assembly was a finale in the drama which opened at the July international conference in New York which debated the so-called Kampuchea question.

Most of the delegations which voted in favour of the ousted Pol Pot regime said in the same breath that they wanted to dissociate themselves from the large-scale human rights violations committed by the Khmer Rouge.

The contradiction so obvious in this sort of logic reflects the considerable pressure that has been exerted in the General Assembly by the leading powers of the so-called "free world" in an effort to frustrate the victory that has been won by an oppressed people.

That Pol Pot ran a regime of genocide and terror is admitted even by Pol Pot's own advocates in the world body. What seems to be questioned is whether the Kampuchean people have the right to liberate themselves using what ever means available!

During his days, Adolf Hitler conducted a pogrom, the memory of which is an embarrassment to the very champions of a "free world" and when he finally embarked on a spree of unprovoked aggression against other sovereign states in Europe, was he not nipped in the bud? Who today questions the move?

Apart from unleashing a war of genocide against his own people, Pol Pot engaged in sorties of aggression against his southern neighbours which have been played down by the "free world." Should men of conscience bemoan him or vote for him when he has finally been kicked into the dustbin of history?

The People's Republic of Kampuchea is a reality. It is a sovereign state whose government has been confirmed in office by a massive popular vote in the legislative elections which took place only in May this year.

Those bent on delaying the process leading to the new Kampuchean government's rightful assumption of its seat at the United Nations because of past grudges or cold-war rivalry should realise that sooner or later truth will prevail and that they will not succeed in turning back the wheels of history.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS OFFICIAL REPORTS ON TRIP

Victoria NATION in English 21 Sep 81 pp 1,2

[Text]

SEYCHELLES established international reputation and the developing and non-aligned countries' increasing headway in an international forum dominated by the rich and the powerful were stressed by Mr. Jeremie Bonnelame, the Principal Secretary for Foreign Affairs, when he returned on Friday from an exhaustive trip abroad.

Accompanying the Foreign Minister, Mr. Jacques Hodoul, the Principal Secretary had spent nearly three weeks at major international meetings in Paris and New York.

"The choice of Seychelles by the African member states of the United Nations as a vice-president of the 36th ordinary session of the General Assembly, at a time of so much international tension in the world and with the developing countries facing so many challenges to their peace, security and progress, shows the international recognition of the Republic's capabilities, credibility and respectability on the complex international front," he said.

Although Seychelles could not afford to keep a delegation at the UN throughout the session to accompany the Republic's UN Chargé d'Affaires, Mrs. Giovinella Gonthier, the Foreign Ministry would certainly do its best to live up to the trust put in us, Mr. Bonnelame added.

The long trip started last month with a week in Paris, and in the delegation's first contact with its counterparts in the new French Foreign Ministry and at the Presidency, the impression gained, Mr. Bonnelame said, "was that the present French administration have grasped quite well the nature of the problems of the Third World countries."

France's socialist administration looked at the organisation of society, the philosophy of socialism and international relations more or less like Seychelles, he added.

Turning to the UN's recent Paris conference on the least developed countries (LDCs), the best result in Seychelles' view was the participants' willingness at least to look at the basics of aid development. Getting right down to the core of the matter, they debated and analysed the meanings of aid and development, the Principal Secretary pointed out.

"Until now we have had a tendency to refuse to reflect on this question of what development really means to the Third World."

Mr. Bonnelame placed as second to the question of principle, the undertaking by the developed nations to double the aid being extended to the developing nations, in particular the LDCs, by 1985. It was clear, he said that as far the developing world was concerned this was not enough.

"We think the developed nations should and could do much more to help our countries develop."

Still, the conference was a success even if all the commitments were generalised, with no pinpointing of targets.

From Paris, Mr. Hodoul and Mr. Bonnelame went on to New York to join Mrs. Gonthier at the UN's extraordinary session on Namibia and subsequent ordinary sessions. Reviewing the two weeks of tough discussions and negotiations, Mr. Bonnelame noted the irony of the Organisation using a 31-year-old resolution introduced by the United States to get UN military support in intervening in the Korean conflict, to sanction foreign military help for Angola against South Africa.

The resolution stated that in the event of international peace being menaced and of clear aggression by one country against another, the UN had a duty to resort to a military solution if need be. Under the resolution, the UN members at the session on Namibia recognised the right of Angola and the South West Africa People's Organisation to seek foreign military help if they so wished to counter the South African invasion of southern Angola.

The UN's 36th ordinary session of the General Assembly followed, and one of the Seychelles' duties as a session vice-president has been to scrutinise the record list of subjects that will make up the agenda.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Jacques Hodoul, who may preside over a sitting in the near future, is expected to address the Assembly early this week, the Principal Secretary said.

OPENING OF INTERNATIONAL TOURISM MEETING REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 23 Sep 81 pp 1,2

[Text] Opening the Second International Tourism Marketing Conference yesterday morning, the Minister for Transport and Tourism, Mr Matthew Servina, welcomed representatives from seven neighbouring countries, international airlines, tour operators, hotel companies, international commercial organisations, the international press and Seychellois overseas tourist representatives. The Minister said the occasion was an opportunity to present to visitors attractions and services which are worth the money brought in by the tourists to spend.

The Tourism Week, through this Second International Tourism Marketing Conference and through the conference participants, would also serve as an opportunity to launch a new strategy for that industry on which Seychelles still depends as its biggest foreign currency earner. That strategy, Minister Servina said, "apart from trying to secure better economic returns, will also contribute positively towards bringing mankind together through education, understanding and peace". Such a new phylosophy, he said, was now being advanced by the World Tourism Organisation and he believed Seychelles was well-placed to contribute substantially to it.

VARIOUS MARETS

As part of the new strategy, it is hoped Seychelles' tourism industry will now go more towards the various markets rather than just wait for them to come to the country. It is with this in mind that such organisations like the now legally established Seychelles Tourist Board and the National Tourist Agency have been brought into existence, with the hope that they will acquire the competence and resources to present the country and its attractions more efficiently.

Probably next year, Minister Servina announced to delegates, the country would be able to establish its own international air service to fill the gap existing in the transportation of visitors to and from the market spots.

The Minister announced other important developments which have taken place since the first conference in October last year when resolutions demanded actions to uplift the national tourism industry. These developments are the preparation of the Tourism Master Plan which has been prepared with the assistance of the Irish Tourist Board, and the Air Transport Policy which has already been adopted by Government.

SET EXAMPLE

Minister Servina told the conference participants later in his Chairman's Report, that there was a need for the tourism industry to do more for itself rather than wait on other people to do the work. On that point he said the Government would set the example but he assured the participants in the trade that there was never any intention for the Government to fight the private sector in the business.

Those non-commited people whose involvement in the industry does more harm than good were criticised by the Minister who said the time had now come for them to change their attitude. He called on those in the business to work together instead of allowing each one to go their individual ways. The reorganisation of the taxi business, the marine charter trade and the car hire operations were examples of good cooperation in the interest of providing better services.

As effforts were being made to improve the image of the tourism industry, the authorities were at the same time making sure that irresponsible persons did not damage the country's reputation. Minister Servina said that next year the tourism authorities would be more firm in assuring proper standards and services, and drastic actions were expected against those not playing their part.

The closure recently of the Pirates Arms Hotel, Minister Servina told participants in the conference, was an example of the action taken by the authorities after eight months of appeal to the hotel's owners to clear up their mess.

REGIONAL COOPERATION

The Tourism Minister also stressed Seychelles' commitments to regional cooperation in tourism development. He said our region had a lot to offer the world in terms of tourist attractions, so a special effort needed to be made so that our countries could develop services and attractions which were complimentary to one another, he told delegates.

The conference, which ends on Friday, will also analyse holiday prices in Seychelles.

The various activities organised for the Tourism Week have given the Seychellois people an opportunity to show how they live, how they work and what they can do, while the international tourist industry representatives will be able to note these.

Only on Monday night at the People's Stadium car park, the Variety Fair presented a cross section of Creole food, costumes, services and other attractions.

COMMENTARY REAFFIRMS STRUGGLE AGAINST ETHIOPIA

EA011916 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 1 Oct 81

[Commentary by Warsame Hirsi (Olow)]

[Excerpt] Somalia has on several occasions suggested direct talks between Somalia and Abyssinia in order to find a peaceful and political solution to the instability and crisis in the Horn of Africa. This has all fallen on deaf ears.

The Abyssinian reply has been to launch unprovoked air and ground raids into civilian-settled areas of the Somalia Democratic Republic. We may ask ourselves, will this solve the problems of the Horn of Africa? Are these obstinate Abyssinian policies in the face of reality any good to the people of Ethiopia? Whatever weapons the Russians give to the Abyssinian regime and however many troops are brought into fight alongside the Abyssinian colonial forces against the Western Somali and ABO [liberation fronts] they will not be able to break their iron will and determination to achieve their liberty and independence. History has proved that those who are struggling for a just cause will always succeed against oppressors.

It is imperative for the Western Somali and ABO liberation fronts to redouble their efforts against the Abyssinian colonial forces and those who support them and the unjust Abyssinian causes.

It is also imperative for the ordinary Somali people wherever they may be to give moral and material support to the Western Somali and ABO liberation forces who are fighting for their legitimate rights of self-determination, as well as to continue to defend their sacred land from all forms of unprovoked aggression.

MILITARY SUCCESS--The heroic Western Somali liberation front freedom fighters clashed with the Abyssinian black colonialist soldiers at Bulaleh, in Dagahabur Province, on 17 September, killing 25 enemy soldiers and wounding many others. After their mission, the freedom fighters returned safely to base. As they fled, the routed Abyssinian soldiers came across a civilian vehicle carrying women, elderly people and children and attacked it, killing five people and wounding five others who managed to escape. The Abyssinian action demonstrates its heinous treatment of civilian populations. These people were on their way to the liberated areas near Kabradahare. ETHIOPIAN ATTACK--The forces of the Abyssinian regime yesterday at 1300 launched an artillery attack on the town of (Beled Hawa) and the villages of (?Malca Rie) and (Bananay) in the (Gedo) region of the Somalia Democratic Republic. A statement from the Ministry of Defense says that in the unprovoked attacks waged by the Abyssinian forces in the area four people were killed and four others injured. Seventy houses and [word indistinct] belonging to civilians were also destroyed. The statement goes on to say that the damage caused by the Abyssinian forces is still being assessed. It is feared that the damage and number of dead and injured might be higher. The attacks waged by the Abyssinian regime demonstrate the provocations perpetrated by the regime against the Somali people in their collaboration and unholy alliance with foreign forces. VILLAGES SHELLED--Mogadishu, 27 Sep (AFP)--Somalia said today that Ethiopian troops shelled and rocketed three Somali border villages on Friday, killing and wounding a "considerable number" of people and causing extensive damage. A defence ministry statement quoted by the Somali news agency (SONNA) named the villages as Belet Hawo, Marka Harrey and Bananey situated on the meeting point of the Somali-Ethiopian and Kenyan borders. Damages included destruction of government and public-owned houses as well as farms, the statement said. "The enemy's bombardment of these towns is part and parcel of the continued provocative acts of aggression being carried out against Somalia by the Addis Ababa regime in collusion with foreign powers," the statement charged. KILLINGS IN HARGEISA ALLEGED--Hargeisa--Our reporter in Hargeisa has sent us a confirmed report that on 23 September the terrorist regime of Siad Barre killed 14 people in Hargeisa town. These people were killed on the pretext that they were against the regime. This, however, is a pretext that Siad Barre has used in the past for killing Somali people. This behavior has encouraged the Somali people to wage armed struggle against the Siad regime to remove him from power. Our reporter in Hargeisa adds that many people, including Col Ahmad Ali, the commander of the 8th Battalion of the Somali Army based in the north-western region, have been imprisoned, the latter after he refused to obey orders through which Siad Barre aims to tarnish the name and dignity of the Somali people. BATTLE SUCCESSES REPORTED--The Radio Kulmis reporter in Ghel Gudut region has filed us a report that says the heroic Somali Salvation Front [SSF] forces launched a bitter and [word indistinct] attack on a unit of Siad Barre's soldiers comprising mainly army officers stationed at Balumbale town. These officers were trying to poison the minds of the people of the area with evil and malicious propaganda in a bid to mollify the Somali people who are waging a united military struggle against the failing Siad Barre regime. The reporter added that the heroic SSF forces killed 13 of Afweyneh's soldiers, including three army officers. The reporter concluded by saying that the SSF forces suffered no casualties in the fighting. [Text] [EA032110 (Clandestine) Radio Kulmis in Somali to Somalia 1800 GMT 3 Oct 81]

KOORNHOF: CISKEI AGREEMENTS TO INCLUDE CONFEDERATION CONCEPT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

HOUSE of ASSEMBLY. — The Government was preparing an agreement with the future independent Ciskei which envisaged the establishment of a South African Confederation, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, said yesterday.

Dr Koornhof was moving the second reading of the Status of Ciskei Bill and said that the road to independence taken by the Ciskei had been a unique road.

The Ciskei's independence would be accompanied by a convention between the South African and Ciskeian governments to set out the details of agreements reached in the "package deal" acceptance of indpendence by Ciskei.

The issues dealt with in the convention and which would be taken up in legislation of both countries, included:

- The right to work-preference within the RSA — Ciskeians not being treated as aliens;
- Residential rights;
- Uniform and uncomplicated procedures governing movement across future international boundaries;
- Use of community facilities;
- Social benefits, and
- Any other rights and privileges sanctioned by law or usage, as further agreed upon.

Dr Koornhof said that none of these matters would be found within the Bill itself.

"An important matter concerning the package deal was the retention of what the essence of South African citizenship means to the Ciskeian citizen," Dr Koornhof said.

The unique road to independence for the Ciskei had not ended with its referendum. The Ciskei Government had continually kept its people informed and involved with the negotiations through meetings at Taba Kandoda and the people's sanction of its government's actions had repeatedly been obtained.

To date 70 agreements had been approved by the joint Works Committee on Independence and of these, 33 had already been approved by the joint Cabinet Committee.

"There are an additional 12 agreements being worked on, one of which concerns the establishment of a future confederation," Dr Koornhof said.

Dr Koornhof congratulated the Ciskeian nation on its coming independence and said the Government of the Republic of South Africa had a strong desire to live in peace with the Ciskei and to work for the good of both countries' people.

He hoped that in his lifetime there would be a declaration which would read: "They are sovereign communities within the borders of present South Africa, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common love and loyalty for, and as members of the South African Confederation of Autonomous Nations."

Further Debate Details

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

HOUSE of ASSEMBLY. — The Government, if it had had a choice, would have postponed legislation granting independence to the Ciskei, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, said yesterday.

Replying to points raised in committee on the Status of Ciskei Bill, Dr Koornhof said the Government would have postponed the legislation in order to solve certain practical problems.

The Bill had, however, been introduced on the insistence of the Ciskei Government which wanted independence by December 4.

"This the Opposition does not appear to understand. They must accept that the Ciskei is desirous of independence."

The Bill itself was concerned with independence and not a confederation, which was not possible unless everyone enjoyed equal status. Without that it would be impossible to get everyone around a table. Equal status, therefore, was the "golden key".

Dr Koornhof predicted that the Ciskei would, after independence, experience greater and increasing economic growth.

Earlier Mr A Savage (PFP, Walmer) opposed the independence clause, describing it as "too loose, ill considered and too vague".

More clarity was needed, especially since millions of rands were involved.

Mr Vause Raw, leader of the New Republic Party, also opposed the clause, saying independence for the Ciskei should have taken place simultaneously with the establishment of a confederation.

The people of the Ciskei should have been offered something so clear that it gripped their imagination.

In terms of the Bill, Ciskei would become a sovereign and independent state and yet the Republic would continue to administer, assist or have part in the administration of the territory by agreement.

"The Ciskei is therefore ceding certain elements of its sovereignty to the Republic."

The NRP felt that these were matters which should be dealt with jointly by all members of a confederation, a concept which clearly differed from that of the Government.

Mr Errol Moorcroft (PFP, Albany) said the borders of the Ciskei, as defined in the Bill, created a false impression of the extent of the territory. A considerable amount of land still had to be added in terms of the 1975 land proposals.

The chairman of the Consolidation Commission and nominated Member of Parliament, Mr Hennie van der Walt, said much of the land provided for in these proposals had to be purchased before it could be given to Ciskei.

"We know, however, exactly what land has been earmarked.

"The Opposition does not realise that we are trying to give independence to a people and not to a territory."

After independence, the Ciskei would be as free as Lesotho, but as bound as Lesotho to the economy of the rest of southern Africa.

"In terms of National Party policy, sovereign independence means the freedom of a nation and not the severing of economic agreements with other countries."

Dr Koornhof, re-entering the debate, said if the Opposition recognised the sovereignty of the Republic of South Africa the wording of the Bill, which stated that this sovereignty was being given to Ciskei, should present no problem.

Vause Raw Statement

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

HOUSE of ASSEMBLY. — The unique situation of South Africa required a unique confedral solution, the leader of the New Republic Party, Mr Vause Raw, said in the House of Assembly yesterday.

Speaking in committee on the party's alternative to the preamble to the Status of Ciskei Bill, Mr Raw said the debate over the past three days on the Ciskei's independence had brought the clearest exchanges of view and had highlighted the differences of basic political philosophies between the parties in Parliament.

The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, had defined clearly what the government saw as a confederation. "We have a different vision. What we envisage as being right for the future of South Africa is a unique solution.

"For South Africa's unique situation and problems we need a unique South African solution. One cannot super-impose a western concept taken from the book on confederation.

"The Minister has defined the loosest form of the classic concept of confederation, which goes no further than basic consultation," Mr Raw said.

"We believe the one we should aim for is the content of the package deal and the objectives the Ciskei set for their independence," he said.

These were three basic goals — shared citizenship, more land and a structured system. Mr Raw said his party would like to see a Council of Ministers start working now on the details of such a confederation.

He moved an amendment which he said would include the aim of a confederation as the basis for granting independence to the Ciskei. This goal should be included as motivation for an independent Ciskei, he said.

Mrs Helen Suzman (PFP, Houghton) said her party would not vote for Mr Raw's amendment as it did not believe that what Mr Raw anticipated was a real confederation.

"But mostly we will vote against this preamble because it contains a clause saying that it is deemed expedient that Ciskei becomes independent to this purpose."

The real situation would be best described if the two phrases were interchanged.

The preamble read that "whereas the government of the Ciskei is desirous that Ciskei become an independent state" and "the Republic of South Africa deems it expedient to grant independence."

It should rather read that the Ciskei deemed it expedient to become and the RSA Government was desirous to grant.

"That is the truth of the situation," Mrs Suzman said. "That would put the two positions in the right perspective.

"They were made an offer they could not refuse. It was not the people's wish to be independent, it was the wish of the Ciskei Cabinet", she said. There were more reasons for opposing independence.

"There was no clear expression of the will of the Ciskeian people in this matter. The referendum was held under false pretences and there is going to be deprivation of existing rights for many Ciskeians living outside the borders of Ciskei."

Their future participation in the political process in South Africa was being removed, she said.

"This measure is also going to deprive them of sharing in the economic fruits of the Republic of South Africa and, finally, they will become foreigners in the land of their birth."

Dr Koornhof, replying to the debate on the preamble, said it was unbelievable that Mrs Suzman could say the referendum was held on false premises.

"She argues as if we had arranged that referendum. It was an all-Xhosa matter and we had nothing to do with it, whatsoever.

"I get hurt every time I see how you (the PFP) insult the Xhosa nation these past three days. They cannot defend themselves here," he said. — Sapa.

KOORNHOF DISCUSSES PLANNED RELOCATION OF BLACKS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 23 Sep 81 p 6

[Text]

THE Government still intends to move black people from eight areas of black-owned land in the white border corridor between Ciskei and Transkei.

But it does not know how many people live in these areas nor has any timetable been set for the removal of these areas.

This emerged yesterday from a reply given in Parliament yesterday by the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, to a question tabled by Mr John Malcomess (PFP, Port Elizabeth Central).

Surveys

Dr Koornhof said only one of these areas — a farm called Alsatia in the Cathcart district — was a black spot.

There were [illegible] seven "badly situated areas" — released and [illegible] areas — in the border [illegible]

Dr Koornhof said it was "the intention to resettle the black communities of the said black spots and other badly situated areas but no fixed date has as yet been determined for the proposed resettlemment projects.

"Surveys to determine the exact number of people involved will only be conducted shortly before the resettlement actions take place," Dr Koornhof said.

These "badly situated" black areas were: Lesseyton in the Queenstown district, Goshen in the Cathcart district, Umgwali in the Stutterheim district, Wartburg in the Komga district and Mooiplaats and Kwelera in the East London district.

Although the Minister was unable to give any figures for the population of these areas, a large number of people live in the Mooiplaats and Kwelera areas — and the Ciskei Government has said it is opposed to the transfer of these areas to white ownership, particularly as the remains of great Xhosa chief, Gcaleka, are buried there.

POLL SHOWS ISOTHA STILL POPULAR CHOICE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 28 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Poen de Villiers]

[Text]

Mr P W Botha is still first choice among the Whites to be Prime Minister of South Africa, according to two nation-wide opinion polls.

The results of the polls are, however, conflicting about Mr Botha's popularity. The one says his popularity has slipped since last year, while the other claims he is the overwhelming favourite of the voters.

The polls were conducted independently by The Sunday Tribune and Rapport and the resuls published yesterday.

The Sunday Tribune conducted a poll in conjunction with the Centre for Applied Social Science at Natal University, while Rapport commissioned market and Methods Surveys.

Both polls were conducted among Whites only.

The Sunday Tribune conducted its poll to mark the end of the third year of power of Mr Botha and involved 1 363 people.

Rapport's survey was among more than 2 000 people who were asked who they would elect prime minister under present conditions.

The results of the two polls are that Mr Botha would probably be re-elected prime minister should whites be allowed to elect him.

The Sunday Tribune showed that 71 percent of the people approved of Mr Botha as prime minister — 16,6 percent were of the opinion that he was doing an excellent job and 54,4 percent that he was satisfactory.

The Rapport poll showed that 46,9 percent of those interviewed preferred Mr Botha as Prime Minister. He headed the popularity stakes by a vast majority, Mr Pik Botha being his closest rival with 15,1 percent support.

Third in line was Dr Frederick van Zyl Slabbert, leader of the Opposition, with 9,1 percent and then Dr A P Treurnicht with 4,3 percent.

In the Sunday Tribune poll, Dr Slabbert is second, with Dr Piet Koornhof filling the third berth.

Interesting, however, the results of the Tribune poll show that Mr P W Botha's image seems to be slipping, compared to that of a similar poll in May last year.

Last year he was given an overall score of 7,2 points out of 10, but he falls to 6,64 points in the latest poll. Dr Slabbert's popularity received a score of 5,05 points, while Dr Koornhof was given 4,7 points.

The reasons given for the drop in popularity of Mr Botha in the Tribune survey was that he had failed to fulfil his reformist pledges, while the main reason for those who back him is that he is steady and acts true to party principles.

In the Rapport poll Mr Botha also received good support among English-speaking people. He was given 37,4 percent of their support, Dr Slabbert 17,4 percent and Mr Pik Botha 12,2 percent.

Of the Afrikaners, 53,6 percent were for Mr P W Botha, 17,1 percent for Mr Pik Botha, 7,3 percent for Dr Treurnicht and 3,3 percent for Dr Slabbert.

REPORTAGE ON PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL DEVELOPMENTS

Resignation of Members

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Sep 81 p 7

[Excerpt]

DURBAN. — A prominent member of the President's Council, Mr Pat Poovalingham, who said he would resign by the end of the year if Blacks were not admitted to the Council, will leave the body tomorrow.

Mr Poovalingham said yesterday that earlier this year he issued a statement to this effect.

But since it was now apparent the Government had no intention of asking Parliament to amend the Republic of South Africa Constitution Act to admit Black South Africans to the President's Council, he would resign as from today instead of December 31.

Mr Poovalingham said in a statement: "It was with regret that I was unable to accede to a request by Dr Denis Worrall, Chairman of the Constitutional Committee, of which I have had the honour of being a member, to remain at least until this committee presents its report and recommendations early early next year.

● The Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis, announced yesterday that another member of the President's Council had resigned.

He is Mr Hendrik van Zyl. Both his and Mr Poovalingham's resignations come into effect on October 1.

Mr Heunis said an announcement regarding the appointment of members to fill their places would be made shortly. — Sapa.

Heunis' Comment

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — There was never any possibility of Blacks being included on the President's Council to meet the conditions of membership set by a Durban attorney, Mr Pat Poovalingham, Mr Chris Heunis, Minister of Internal Affairs, said yesterday.

"Mr Poovalingham knew this," Mr Heunis said.

He was commenting on Mr Poovalingham's resignation from the council three months before the "deadline" he had set for having Blacks included on the council.

The resignation of Mr Poovalingham is being seen in some circles in Cape Town as a setback for the Government, but this was hotly denied by Mr Heunis who said it was quite obvious from Mr Poovalingham's statement that he saw the council as being able to serve a useful purpose.

"It was quite obvious he resigned, not because the council was ineffective, but because of his previous commitment."

Dr F van Zyl Slabbert, leader of the Progressive Federal Party, said the resignation showed the so-called "Poovalingham option" was in fact no option at all.

It had been suggested at the time when the PFP decided to stay out of the President's Council that the party should have followed the "Poovalingham option" by joining the council conditionally.

The main reason for the PFP staying out of the council was because of the exclusion of Blacks.

Dr Slabbert said that however well-intentioned the establishment of the council had been, he still believed that as a constitutional mechanism for change it was bound to contradict its good intentions because Blacks were deliberately excluded.

He said Blacks who would be affected by any constitutional recommendations could not be excluded from the process of negotiation.

In an interview, Mr Denis Worral, Chairman of the constitutional Committee of the President's Council, supported Mr Heunis's statement that there was no chance of Mr Poovalingham's demand being met.

There had been "no consideration" of the demand.

"Mr Poovalingham is an erudite man with a nimble mind and he made a substantial contribution to the workings of the council," Mr Worrall said.

Mr Vause Raw, leader of the New Republic Party, said Mr Poovalingham's resignation did not affect the attitude of his party to the President's Council.

His party had entered the President's Council with the attitude that it would withdraw support only if it was seen not to be serving a useful purpose and this could not be judged until the council submitted its first report on constitutional proposals. — Sapa.

New Powers, Privileges

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 22 Sep 81 p 8

[Text]

CAPE TOWN — A Bill giving the President's Council powers and privileges similar to those of commissions of inquiry was published in Cape Town yesterday.

It gives the council the power to subpoena witnesses, council members will be protected against insults or assaults, and one clause is aimed at preventing the disclosure of confidential information by council members or officials.

Freedom of speech and legal privilege are given to council proceedings and to witnesses and evidence before the council or its committees.

STATUS

In Parliament the new measure will be handled by the deputy Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr P J Badenhorst.

An official of the department said today that the measure was meant to bring the council in line with commission of inquiry as the council was in effect such a commission, but one with a higher status.

The spokesman said the interpretation of the clause of confidentiality should be interpreted as a measure aimed at officials or council members who may divulge confidential information, rather than at newspapers which published this.

Municipal Executive Memorandum

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 20 Sep 81 p 20

[Article by Neil Hooper]

[Text]

A DETAILED plan for multiracial regional government in South Africa, and the massive devolution of power to municipal level, is contained in a memorandum now before the President's Council.

The memorandum, which was submitted by the United Municipal Executive, is believed to be the Government's secret blueprint for constitutional change at the local and regional government level.

Among the most startling changes called for in the document are:

- Multiracial regional councils whose members are nominated by each of the municipalities — white, black, coloured and Indian — in the region.
- Separate white, coloured, Indian and black municipalities with additional powers
- Two-tier citizenship for urban blacks — municipal citizenship and homeland citizenship.
- The redrawing of provincial boundaries.

Document

The 43-page document — of which the Sunday Times has a copy — was submitted last year to the Schlebusch Constitutional Commission, which forwarded it to the Constitutional Committee of the President's Council, headed by Dr Denis Worrall.

A sub-committee of the council headed by Dr W C Dempsey, a former senator and for many years president of UME, has been appointed to investigate recommendations for new local government in South Africa.

Although the UME represents the municipal associations of the Transvaal, Free State, Natal and the Cape, as well as the divisional councils of the Cape, the subcommittee found there was not unanimous support for the UME proposals.

As a result, each of the bodies has been asked to submit its views on the UME plan.

The UME report also deals briefly with the constitutional issue on the national level, saying that South Africa is faced with two alternatives:

- The continuation of the present highly-centralised system with a white parliament only, which will probably lead to a greater degree of political tension and conflict internally, as well as in South Africa's international political relations.
- A fully integrated multiracial Parliament based on an equal vote and full representation for all population groups, that is to say a one-man-one-vote system.

The solution, according to the memorandum, probably lies in a compromise between the two.

Dealing with local government, the report makes the following recommendations:

- Central and provincial government control of local government should be completely eliminated because it destroys local autonomy and democracy and creates political frustration.

Functions

- The functions and rights of both the central government and autonomous local authorities should be incorporated in the Constitution.
- White political and administrative control over municipal institutions of coloureds and Indians should be phased out as members of these population groups are trained to take over their own autonomous municipalities.
- In urban areas black community councils should be abolished and full municipal status granted equal to that of whites, Indians and coloureds.
- A portion of government tax money should go to municipalities, including the envisaged new Indian, coloured and Black councils.

SOUTHERN AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK ENCOUNTERS PROBLEMS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 23 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Helen Zille]

[Text] THE proposed Southern African development bank — the economic foundation of the Prime Minister's proposed constellation of states — has run into problems.

Due to unforeseen setbacks and obstacles in important areas, the launching of the bank has been considerably delayed and no further news on the progress of the project is expected until November.

The multimillion-rand bank was envisaged by Government planners as the launch pad of the constellation of states, with a primary goal of stimulating regional economic development, particularly in certain designated homeland areas.

The planners hoped all Southern African states, including South Africa's northern neighbours, would join the scheme, but the original blueprint has since been scaled down.

South Africa and the various homelands are now regarded as potential members.

However, even this scaled-down model is now running into problems and according to informed sources the launching of the bank has been considerably delayed because of them.

Restricted

The major obstacles include disagreement on qualifications for membership. Government officials have made it clear only fully independent states will be eligible for membership.

Non-independent states will be restricted to associate membership, carrying fewer rights, privileges and obligations.

Chief Gatsha Buthelezi of KwaZulu, in particular, has rejected these conditions, saying that unless he is granted full membership status, he will shun the bank.

Independent homeland leaders and some Government officials are strongly opposed to the restricted approach and the planners are working hard to find a way round the impasse.

Economic and technical hitches are also snarling up the plan. Government planners working on the project have estimated the bank will need between R4 000-millon and R5 000-million in order to succeed — a vast amount at a time when the country is facing an economic squeeze.

There is apparently resistance in top Government circles to this magnitude of allocation and the Cabinet has yet to take a final decision on the matter.

Resistance

There is also a measure of resistance from organisations and individuals whose functions could become redundant or less important when the bank starts operating.

These groups are said to include the Economic Development Corporation and Benso, the research organisation attached to the Department of Co-operation and Development.

Much of their work will be incorporated into the operations of the new bank and Government officials want a complete change in style.

The new approach is said to be meeting strong resistance from vested interests in Benso and the EDC.

Despite these problems, people close to the planning of the bank believe the obstacles will be overcome and the bank will eventually be launched.

WHITE PAPER SUPPORTS WHITE MINERS' JOB SECURITY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Oct 81 pp 1-2

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — The Government has accepted the principle of eliminating race discrimination in the mining industry — but will not amend legislation until measures have been effected to safeguard White miners' job security.

The Wiehahn Commission of inquiry into labour legislation recommends in part six of its report, tabled in Parliament yesterday that the definition of "scheduled person" in the Mines and Works Act be replaced, on certain conditions, by the non-discriminatory definition of "competent persons".

In a White Paper tabled with the report, the Government says it is, in principle, in favour of adjusting the definition "at an appropriate time and in suitable manner", but emphasises that the employer organisations and the trade unions themselves must take the initiative to reach a compromise.

"In pursuance of the proposals made by the parties concerned in this connection or in the light of the pattern which the negotiations take, the Government will determine further action but want to emphasise that no legislative amendment will be made before alternative safe-guarding measures have been effected.

The commission recommends that the definition be changed on condition that:

- Adequate measures are taken to allay the possible apprehension of White workers about their future job security;
- Standards of work are rigorously maintained;
- All workers are required to achieve the same level of proficiency in training and experience before being appointed to a post;
- The principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value is maintained;
- Changes in work practices and conditions of employment are not introduced unilaterally by employers but rather with due regard to the process of consultation and negotiation with affected employee organisations;
- Adequate job security measures are incorporated in collective agreements; and
- Adequate protection against racial victimisation is provided for all groups.

The White Paper says: "The Government accepts that adaptations are needed in the mining industry, as in other industries, in the light of the economic growth and development of the Republic and the accompanying structural changes in the economy and changes in employment patterns and in the supply and demand conditions in the labour market."

In its findings the commission reports that the complete removal of discriminatory measures in the mining industry, with the active co-operation and concurrence of the White unions concerned, appeared to be capable of achievement provided that the recommended conditions were applied.

Mr A I Nieuwoudt and Mr T S Neethling, who served on the commission, submitted the minority view that the mining industry could obtain enough Whites for training in most of the occupations requiring skill in the mines.

"Experience in recent years had demonstrated that a far greater number of trainable candidates seek careers in certain sectors of the industry than are in fact accepted by the mines. Far too many White people who have the necessary qualifications and aptitude for training are turned down.

"The so-called shortage of suitably qualified White workers is thus artificially created by the lack of adequate training facilities and the lack of communication between mines to divert surplus applications to other mines.

"This situation seriously threatens the security of the already declining numbers of Whites working in the industry," Mr Nieuwoudt and Mr Neethling said. — Sapa.

STRIKES UNDERWAY AT SEVERAL PLANTS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Cas St Leger]

[Text]

LABOUR unrest was widespread in South Africa yesterday, with thousands of workers striking for a variety of reasons.

In Natal, 800 Hulett's workers downed tools — 500 at Amatikulu and 300 at Darnall. The strike was sparked by protracted disputes involving pending pension fund legislation

Police were on standby at the Game Discount World store in Durban, after the dismissal on Wednesday of 141 striking workers.

There were no incidents and the police were recalled after the disgruntled workers had dispersed.

The unrest, in its third day yesterday, had been sparked by demands for higher pay.

The 800 workers at the South African Pulp and Paper Industries' Tugela plant, Mandeni, who were on strike early yesterday after demanding pension contribution pay-outs, were back at work and all appeared normal.

This followed overnight proposals put to the workers by the Fosatu-affiliated Paper, Wood and Allied Workers' Union to accept a bank guarantee arranged by Sappi regarding payouts of pension money and to discuss with management a long-term solution.

In East London, 288 motor car assembly workers were on the second day of their strike in protest against the dismissal of a colleague, Mr Today Dayimani.

Mr Dayimani, a worker at Car Distributor Assembly was dismissed, as a result of an attack on the senior technical foreman.

All the strikers were from Mr Dayimani's section of the plant, and yesterday stayed away from work for the second consecutive day in protest at his dismissal.

Mr Leo Borman, CDA managing director, said the company had contacted the National Union of Motor and Rubber Workers which was sending a representative to East London from Port Elizabeth to discuss the strike.

The entire work force of 550 of H Lewis and Company, in Kempton Park a member of the Tongaat group, decided on Wednesday not to return to work. Their protest concerned the dismissal of a committee member of the unregistered African Food and Canning Worker's Union who allegedly forged a clock card.

For the third time this week, Dorbyl Railway Products in Boksburg suffered strike action when 400 workers went out in support of a demand for a 60 percent wage rise.

RETENTION OF 'CLOSED SHOP' UNION SYSTEM RECOMMENDED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — The National Manpower Commission has recommended that the closed trade union shop system be retained.

In a report to the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, tabled in Parliament yesterday the Chairman of the Commission, Dr Hennie Reynders, said while there were strong philosophical and practical objections to the closed shop system, it was a long established practice in South Africa and its retention would, on balance, probably have more advantages than disadvantages.

The Commission was instructed to investigate the closed shop practice after the publication of the Government White Paper on the first report of the Wiehahn Commission on labour legislation which supported a minority recommendation which rejected the closed shop principle.

Dr Reynders said that, among other things, the closed shop was a way of recognising that trade unions needed some sort of security arrangement which was justified from the point of view of the community as a whole, because of the role they played in the maintenance of industrial peace and the promotion of sound and stable industrial relations.

"A consideration which is given particular weight by the National Manpower Commission is that a prohibition on future closed shop agreements, despite its possible merits, will result in profound disruption of the large number of stable employer-employee relationships of which such agreements constitute a part.

"However, it is equally clear that if closed shop agreements are applied without self-restraint or control, this may lead to a variety of malpractices and abuses."

Dr Reynders said the Commission recommended that the Government repeal its decision in principle to suspend the closed shop practice, contained in the White Paper.

It also recommended that present legislation on closed shops remain in force, with the addition of a post entry clause which would enable non-union members to become members within 30 days of being employed by parties to closed shop agreements. The amendment would also enable employees to become parties to agreements within 30 days of employing members of closed shop unions.

Dr Reynders said care should be taken to ensure that provisions no longer occurred in industrial council agreements in terms of which employers were obliged, or undertook, in employing workers, to give preference to trade union members. — Sapa.

MAKGOTLA MEETING DISCUSSES ANTI-CRIME MEASURES

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 21 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Nkopane Makobane]

[Text]

THE SOWETO makgotla said yesterday they could stamp out crime on trains if they were allowed to patrol by the South African Railways.

The undertaking was made by numerous speakers at an open air meeting called by the organisation's president, Mr Siegfried Manthata, to discuss crime in general, the coming railways fare increases and house rents.

Well over 200 weapons of all kinds were displayed for the people to see, as well as a number of firearms confiscated from thugs.

The emotion-charged meeting, characterised by shouts of "power to makgotla" and "away with shebeens and parties", was told that the makgotla were disappointed by the attitude of the SAR police and at times the South African Police for showing little co-operation with the organisation.

Incidents were cited where makgotla men had arrested armed people next to stations, only to have railway constables later tell them to let the men go free.

DOING UTMOST

Lieutenant D Gojane of the SAR police at Dube, said grievances and complaints of all sorts were welcome so that they can be attended to immediately. He said they were doing their utmost to fight crime in trains and commuters had power to assist police where they were not available.

The Government was also blamed for not doing enough to lower crime in the townships. Instead, it was said, it was encouraging it by legalising shebeens. The courts were also attacked for passing light sentences on criminals.

The frequent increases in house rents were described as the second high crime concern for Soweto, caused by councillors who do not have a heart for the residents because they were earning a fortune.

Mr David Thebehali, the Soweto Council chairman, came under severe criticism in particular.

Councillor Eric Mothibeńyane disputed a claim that rents were to be raised to R50 in Soweto next January. He gave an assurance that to his knowledge there would not be any increases.

He said he has also been shocked to learn through the newspapers that Mr Thebehali earned R1711,50 a month — making him the highest paid mayor in South Africa. According to his information, Mr Thebehali only got an allowance of R700 a month.

He lashed out at Dr Nthato Motlana, chairman of the Soweto Committee of Ten, for saying he was going to organise a meeting to decide against paying the increased rents because of Mr Thebehali's earnings.

SOWETO SERVICE CHARGES TO BE INCREASED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

SERVICE charges in greater Soweto would go up by R8 per household per month from October 1, the chairman of the West Rand Administration Board, Mr John Knoetze, said in Johannesburg yesterday.

Addressing a Press conference, he said the increase had been approved by the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof.

He said while considering the current budgets for greater Soweto, it had became clear that the rapidly deteriorating financial position of the Soweto, Dobsonville and Diepmeadow council, required urgent attention.

"As in previous years, estimated losses, which now exceed R1,5-million per month, are caused mainly by losses on water, electricity, sewerage and refuse removal services.

"Every possible avenue of reducing expenditure and economising on services has been explored, even to the extent of using maintenance reserve and renewal funds for current expenditure and obtaining special interim loans from the Government to tide the community councils over their financial difficulties. But the stage has been reached where an immediate increase in service charges is unavoidable.

"Consequently, the Minister of Co-operation and Development has decided that with effect from October 1 and as an interim measure while the budgets of Soweto, Dobsonville and Diepmeadow are being finalised, an increase of R8 per household will become payable throughout greater Soweto," he said.

Mr Knoetze said the increase would reduce the average loss per household from R20 to R12 per month, and make the overall deficit more manageable. It was important the increase was paid by every household to avoid further losses.

"It is emphasised however, that families who are unable to pay the increase because of illness or deaths in the family, unemployment or any other causes beyond their control, should immediately apply to the township manager, chief executive of the area or to the ward councillor for exemption from payment of the additional amount."

He added all employers in the West Rand area had been consulted and told of the necessity for the increases.

Consultations had taken place with and information had been conveyed to individuals through employers, organisations such as Assocom, ICI and the Johannesburg Sakekamer in a local Press and radio.

Black employees could feel sure their employers would sympathetically consider appeals for help in justifiable cases, Mr Knoetze said. — Sapa.

HORWOOD: GOLD-BASED MONETARY SYSTEM NEEDED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Sep 81 p 15

[Text]

THE international monetary system has not been working very well and despite its complexity it needs gold in a pivotal monetary role more than ever at present, Finance Minister Owen Horwood said yesterday.

Replying to questions submitted by Reuter on the eve of his departure to the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Washington he said: "A return to a gold-based international monetary system of one kind or another is highly desirable.

"This is necessary to bring more stability into the system, to reduce uncertainty and to improve confidence in international monetary arrangements," he said, adding that there is now a strong case for setting up a new international code of conduct for the use and valuation of gold by monetary authorities.

Mr Horwood said agreement on such a code of conduct would not by itself imply a return to a new parity system or the establishment of a fixed price of gold in terms of the dollar or other currencies.

These, he said, would be separate decisions.

"Gold is playing a major monetary role in the international monetary system at present and is likely to continue to serve as a primary official reserve asset and as a means of payment," he said.

He said, if considered desirable, a formula for pricing official transactions in gold could be based on a fluctuating price, such as the London gold price.

A variation would be for monetary authorities to agree that official gold transactions within a given price "band" which would then be supported by central bank purchases and sales, but which would be adjusted monthly or quarterly if necessary.

Asked if it would be possible to find a reasonable lasting gold price to which the dollar could be tied, he said "if a price has to be set which will remain fixed for a long tie it will have to be a relatively high price, one which could be defended for some time with relative ease." — Reuter.

AIR FORCE HAVING DIFFICULTY RECRUITING PILOTS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Oct 81 p 10

[Text]

THERE is an alarming drop in applications for pilot training in the South African Air Force, according to Brigadier Jules Moolman, Officer Commanding SAAF Training Command.

Briefing military correspondents at the Central Flying School, Dunnottar, this week, Brig Moolman said the decrease in applications was causing concern.

Previously, an average of 800 applications was received from young men for a course, but only 278 were received for a course now being presented at the Central Flying School, he said.

Seventy-five of these applicants have been accepted for the course.

The brigadier said 98 applications for a course next year were received from matriculants who were interviewed in July. "Not one was received from the Free State," he added.

Ninety came from the Transvaal, two from the Cape and six from Natal.

Brig Moolman said poor salaries could no longer be the reason for young men's lack of interest in being trained SAAF pilots.

With risk and flying allowances, a pilot could earn as much as R14 500 a year only five years after being accepted for training.

The SAAF, he said, was now selecting matriculants while they were still at school. "We feel that in this way we get a correctly motivated person."

For this purpose a SAAF selection board will interview any matriculants who are interested in a career as a pilot later this month.

The board will be in Bloemfontein on October 19, Cape Town on October 20, Port Elizabeth on October 21, East London on October 22 and Durban on October 23.

Brig Moolman said applicants should have Afrikaans, English and mathematics as school subjects.

"I must stress that it is not a career for super people only. What we are looking for are normal South African boys."

BRIEFS

NEW DETENTIONS--Another five people have been detained by Witwatersrand Security Police and two of the nine detained earlier this week have been released. This brings the number of people detained under Section 22 of the General Laws Amendment Act this week to 12. Colonel Hennie Muller, head of the Security Police on the Witwatersrand, yesterday confirmed the latest detentions. But he would not comment on allegations made by colleagues of Mr Mandla Mthembu, one of the detainees, that he had been taken to his home in leg-irons by Security Police. The four other detainees are Mr Auret van Heerden, Mr Allen Fine, Mr Robin Bloch and Mr Stan Maseko. Mr Van Heerden is a former Nusas president. He preceded Mr Andrew Boraine, now under a five-year banning order. Mr Fine is assistant secretary of the Witwatersrand Liquor and Catering Trade Employees Union. Mr Mthembu is a member of Sached Trust, a continuing education programme aimed largely at Blacks. Mr Block is a student. The General Laws Amendment Act makes provision for the detention of people for periods of up to 14 days without having to be brought to trial. NP INFORMATION SERVICES--Cape Town--The information services of the Transvaal National Party as well as of the federal council of the four provincial National parties, have reorganised their structures with a view to changing the contents and overall presentation of their permanent news circulars. Nat 80s, mouthpiece of the federal council, is to be changed drastically regarding its contents "because it does not have the impact while it also does not reach the purpose for which it was established," an informed NP source told THE CITIZEN. A committee of four MPs, one for each province, has been appointed to handle the flow of information to Nat 80s, while the party is considering the appointment of a full-time information officer again. He would be responsible for liaison with the media and the public. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 28 Sep 81 p 9]

NATIONAL PARTY RESIGNATIONS--Cape Town--There is a strong difference of opinion in top National Party ranks regarding the shock resignation this weekend of 39 members of the National Party divisional council of Lichtenburg. Mr Andries Beyers, a former Nat MPC, and Mr Piet Steinman, a former chairman of the Council, were the first to resign last month. The 39 dissidents apparently resigned because they did not like the changing constitutional provisions in South Africa. Some members of the Transvaal NP hierarchy told THE CITIZEN yesterday Mr Beyers and Mr Steinman should be approached with a view to solving their problems and keeping them in the National Party. But other top Nats said these two men and those who shared their political opinions should in any case have left the NP long ago. "They belonged to the HNP and far rightwing groups," one Cabinet Minister said yesterday. It was also pointed out that Mr Beyers was "obviously sour" after he lost a nomination fight during the recent general election and that his step should not surprise anyone. NEW MILITARY CONSTRUCTION--The South African Defence Force is definitely not planning to move its headquarters to Wonderboom, a Defence Force spokesman said in Pretoria today. He dismissed a report in Hoffstad yesterday that the SADF intended moving from the old DHQ Building in Potgeiter Street as being "totally unfounded." While being reluctant to be specific about what the huge site in Wonderboom was being used for, he said it was to house a new military base. The SADF has bought several thousand hectares in the Buffelsfontein, Klipdrif, Murrayhill and Walmansthal areas, and construction work is already well underway. Roads have been improved and a R18-million contract awarded to Savage and Lovemore for a water reticulation system. The report yesterday also alleged that the whole army base at Voortrekkerhoogte would be shifted to Wonderboom. This was also denied. Residents in Wonderboom are also in the dark. Very few people even know it is the SADF doing the building. [Text] [Johannesburg THE STAR in English 22 Sep 81 p 4]

COLORED, INDIAN DIPLOMATS RECRUITMENT--The Foreign Minister, Mr Pik Botha, said yesterday his department was losing potential coloured and Indian diplomats because they could earn higher salaries in their own communities. Mr Botha was replying during the Foreign Affairs debate to calls for more coloured and Indian recruits to the diplomatic service. He said the Cabinet had decided three or four years ago to appoint colored and Indian cadets in the service on exactly the same conditions as white recruits. There was now one colored diplomat. There had been coloured and Indian candidates, suitable people if slightly older than white applicants. "But what happened? When they heard what salaries they would be paid they lost interest because, with the qualifications we require for the service, they could get work in their own communities at considerably higher salaries than the South African diplomatic and consular service could offer them," Mr Botha said. KWANDEBELE MEDICAL FACILITIES--South Africa's newest homeland, Kwandebele, does not only have no doctors--it does not have a hospital within its borders. The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, said yesterday in reply to a question tabled by Mr Horace van Rensburg (PFP, Bryanston) that there were no hospitals in Kwandebele. He added: "The Philadelphia Hospital situated outside but adjacent to Kwandabele, also renders service to Kwandabele. There are 15 clinics in Kwandabele of which two are mobile clinics." Last week, in reply to another question by Mr Van Rensburg, Dr Koornhof said there were no doctors in the homeland either. Earlier, in reply to yet another question by Mr Van Rensburg, Dr Koornhof said it was estimated that there were 166000 people in the homeland. INDIAN ELECTION--Not one of the four registered Indian political parties is contesting the election for the South African Indian Council in the Transvaal. As nominations closed for the November 4 election yesterday, 21 candidates were named for the 10 Transvaal districts, of which three were elected unopposed. All the candidates were running as independents. [By Marilyn Cohen] [Excerpt] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Sep 81 p 7]

SCAW METALS STRIKE--A strike by more than 2,000 black workers at Anglo American's giant Scaw Metals plant in Wadeville has ended following a decision by management to reinstate a black worker who was fired after assaulting a white. A company spokesman said yesterday all 2,200 of the workers returned to work on Monday night. The work stoppage started in one department on Friday and spread to the rest of the plant on Monday. It followed an incident in which a black worker assaulted a white worker who had verbally abused him. After an inquiry the white worker was suspended and the black worker dismissed. The decision was interpreted by the black work-force as being racially biased and this led to the stoppage, the spokesman said. After consultations with the workers, management agreed to reemploy the black worker and to give him the same punishment as the white. This decision was accepted by the black workers who then returned to work, he said. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 23 Sep 81 p 3]

COST-OF-LIVING INDEX--South Africa's inflation-riddled cost-of living took another upward turn last month--to an index of 208--showing an overall increase of 16 percent in the past year. Official Department of Statistics figures released in Pretoria yesterday show clearly how the country's cost of living has more than doubled in the past six years when a basis of 100 points was set. As always, the increase has hit the lower-income and middle-income groups hardest. For the higher-income group the index rose to 207,6 points from 204,2 in July and 179,4 in August last year. The lower-income group's index climbed in August to 208 points from July's 204,7 and last August's 177; the index for the middle-income group rose to 208,6 points from 205,1 and last year's 179,8. The figures show clearly rising food costs are the biggest cause of the skyrocketing CoL. In August the index for food alone stood at 227,1--a rise of nearly five points in one month alone from July's 222,2. Analysis of the figures shows that the cost of food has increased by nearly 25 percent--an exact figure of 23,1 per cent--in the past year. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Sep 81 p 7]

SUGAR CROP ESTIMATE--The South African Sugar Association will stop releasing official monthly estimates of the domestic sugar crop for the time being, association general manager Peter Sale said. He said in Durban the decision to stop releasing monthly forecasts at this stage was taken for competitive reasons. The last official estimate of the 1981/82, May to April, crop projected output of 1,94-million tons tel quel, sharply up from 1980/81's drought-hit outturn of 1,61-million tons. Earlier this month, Cane Growers' Association general manager Ernie Morrison said early spring rains in South Africa's main cane growing areas are expected to boost the crop estimate to nearer two million tons tel quel. Mr Sale said, however, although some cane growth can be expected following good August rains these benefits could be partially offset by lower sucrose content, which can be caused by rain at this stage of the season.--REUTER [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Sep 81 p 15]

TANZANIAN PAPER ON U.S. AID TO ANGOLAN REBELS

EA021116 Dar Es Salaam in English to Central and Southern Africa 0400 GMT 2 Oct 81

[From the Press Review]

[Text] The party newspaper, UHURU today comments on the vote taken by the U.S. Senate to rescind the Clarke Amendment Act, banning underground operations in Angola and U.S. aid to Angolan rebel groups.

The party newspaper observes that although the amendment still has to be lifted by the House of Representatives, the vote by the Senate is a clear indication that the Reagan Administration intends to fulfill its malicious ambition. It points out that, despite reported remarks by some U.S. Government officials, the move did not mean American involvement. It is difficult to believe such a (?sincerity).

UHURU questions Washington's justification of the necessity to lift the ban if it did not have any accomplice. The paper states that there is every reason of doubt on the Senate's decision, because of the attitude of the present U.S. Administration toward independent Angola.

UHURU notes that since it came to power, the Reagan Administration has denied Angola its territorial integrity. What the administration sees in Angola is the presence of the Soviet Union and Cuba. The Reagan Administration does not want to turn the other side of the coin, to understand the reasons of foreign presence in Angola.

The paper recalls that at the time of her independence there were no Cuban troops in Angola which, as an independent nation, tend to ask for Cuban assistance following invasions of South African troops in its territory.

Here, the paper further points out that Pretoria's long desire has been to destabilize Angola. The Boers' dream is justified by their frequent attacks in Angola, which, in order to defend itself, has been forced to seek assistance from brotherly nations. Therefore, notes 'Uhury, the American decision to life the 1976 Clarke Amendment banning clandestine operations in Angola and U.S. aid to Angolan rebel groups will further endanger the situation in Southern Angola and Southern Africa in particular.

In such a situation, UHURU concludes its editorial, Africa is also worried on Washington's commitment to the Namibian independence settlement.

NEED FOR TANZANIANS TO PRODUCE MORE FOOD STRESSED

Dar es Salaam MZALENDO in Swahili 20 Sep 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Summary] To make known the importance of food in the world the 147 member countries of the UN Food and Agriculture Organization [FAO], decided in 1979 that 16 October would be celebrated every year as international food day. The big question which we Tanzanians must ask ourselves and answer correctly is: what is the purpose of a day like this? Fortunately, the citizens have already been given an answer, which was provided by the minister of agriculture, Joseph Mungai, yesterday in his message opening officially the activities celebrating international food day.

Minister Mungai mentioned the two major purposes of international food day. First, to remind all people about the importance of having sufficient food for all. Second, to remind all people about the shortage of food in the world and to ask them to do the following:

Those who do not produce a sufficient quantity of food but are capable of doing so should prepare plans which will increase production and develop methods of storing food and using it well. Those who produce sufficient food should increase their effort and knowledge to produce even more and be able to help those who cannot fulfill their own needs for food.

If we Tanzanians investigate carefully, we see that we are entering the group of those nations which do not produce sufficient food to feed all citizens, although the capability of becoming self-sufficient exists. For this reason we are continuing to be harassed by a shortage of food. Therefore what we must do is obvious and it is to produce a larger quantity of food.

Farmers must increase their efforts and use good farming methods. These methods include using ox-drawn plows, tractors when possible, fertilizer and good seed, irrigation, insecticides, planting early and well and tending the fields well, and harvesting and storing crops well.

Also various agricultural organizations have the responsibility for making certain that the farmers obtain their requirements for tools and supplies and for purchasing crops with cash. Moreover, the citizens in general must use food carefully and avoid waste.

We Tanzanians should not deceive ourselves that we can always depend on other countries to obtain food. We must try to produce sufficient food in our country. This is the important message of international food day.

LANDMINE KILLS SOME 20--Kampala, 29 Sep (AFP)--At least 20 people were killed in a landmine explosion Monday near Ngoma Trading Center, 60 miles (96 kms) north of Kampala, according to reports reaching here today. There were no precise figures of the dead as some of the bodies were taken home immediately by relatives while others were rushed to Nagalama and Mulago hospitals. Some 30 others were reported to have been injured. According to some reports here the number of dead was at least 40 and could rise as high as 70. The injured were taken to the Mulago Government hospital in Kampala where six of them have since died, hospital sources said today. All were travelling in the Lorry to Ngoma Trading Center for the market day yesterday when the Lorry hit the landmine planted in the middle of the Murram Road, one of the survivors said in hospital. We were in a bend, then an explosion, then blackness. The Lorry which struck the landmine was at the head of a convoy of trucks, all carrying traders to Ngoma Market. OPPOSITION ASKS GOVERNOR'S INVESTIGATION [Text] The Federation of Zairians Overseas, closely associated with the former prime minister Mr Nguza Karl I Bond, presently in exile in Brussels, is asking that the former governor of Shaba, Mr Monchakini Manzikala, accused of having massacred some 30 Europeans in 1967 (LE MONDE, 14 Sep 1967) be tried by an international court. Mr Manzikala, who was serving a jail sentence for fraud in Belgium, was released Friday 21 August by the prosecutor's office of the Brussels city court. The Belgium law disallows legal action for crimes committed abroad by foreigners. For that reason, the Belgian families of the victims of the Lubumbashi massacre would like the French to ask the extradition of the former governor, in the name of two French citizens, Michel Thibaut, a pilot who, it is suspected, was killed by the governor's men, and Marie-Louise Savant, who was severely brutalized.

Paris LE MONDE in French 23-24 Aug 81 p 2

The ministry of justice explains that in order to obtain Mr Manzikala's extradition, a complaint based on civil law would have to be filed, or an investigation ordered by the Republic's chief prosecutor. In this case, the appointed prosecuting attorney could then institute a rogatory commission which would permit obtaining the information from the Zairian authorities in order to reconstitute the crime of which Mr Manzikala is suspected. But such an action, if possible legally, is most improbable in practice.

DEVELOPING ZAIRE RIVER'S REACH TOPIC OF MEETING WITH ANGOLA

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 8 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] Zaire and the People's Republic of Angola are strengthening their good-neighbor relations. The reopening of the border between the two countries at Matadi has made it possible, especially for Zairians and Angolans to associate with one another more frequently. They are learning more about each other. It goes without saying that an atmosphere of understanding presently prevails along the entire border between the People's Republic of Angola and the region of Bas-Zaire, thanks to the determination of the two countries' authorities.

To carry out this determination, a mixed Zairian-Angolan commission was formed at Luanda in 1979. It meets once every 6 months. Its last and fifth meeting dedicated to the maintenance and the development of the maritime reach of the Zaire river, took place at Kinshasa, from 20 to 25 July. However, belonging also to the region, the Bas-Zaire was represented by the region's director, comrade Malinguend o Monga Oyaka who participated actively in the foundation of the commission. Reporting on his work upon his return to Matadi, he especially emphasized that the Zairian delegation submitted a series of proposals aimed at increasing the performance of the waterway.

It should be mentioned, in this respect, that the Angolan delegation gave its support to the proposals and agreed in principle to the program. Nevertheless, the delegation will have to consult with the Luanda authorities before giving its final assent to the program initiated by the Zairian delegation.

At the close of the meeting, the Angolan delegation visited the region of Bas-Zaire. Accompanied by their Zairian counterparts, the Angolans went successively to Matadi, Boma and Inga. For the Zairian hosts, this was the opportunity to discover the realization of a few projects by the 2nd Republic, and to examine the lighted buoy system along the Zaire river between Matadi and Boma.

The Angolan delegation took advantage of its stay to express its wishes concerning the Zairian-Angolan cooperation. It is in view of this that, while visiting the shipyard of the Maritime Administration at Boma, it expressed the wish to see this administration be responsible for the maintenance of small Angolan boats equipped with "Johnson" motors. Moreover, the Angolan delegates who were very pleased with the training given to their compatriots at the department of hydrography of the Maritime Administration, also expressed the wish that the Angolan team based at Soyo be connected with establishing the new international buoy system at Kimpunzi and Bulambema.

Furthermore, it must be mentioned that since the creation of the mixed Zairian-Angolan commission for the maintenance and the development of the maritime reach of the Zaire river, the Maritime Administration has already dredged 91,000,000 m^3 in order to make the reach between Boma-Muanda more usable. For the same purpose, this has brought the depth of the river, which was 22 feet (or 6 meters) in 1979, to 28 feet (8 meters) in 1980.

ZANU (PF) STARTS TO REORGANIZE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 6

[Text] ZANU (PF) for Mashonaland Central Province has embarked on a massive restructuring drive aimed at strengthening the party, secretary and Member of Parliament for the area, Mr Naison Muroyiwa, said yesterday.

He said the exercise was in line with recent appeals by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, to strengthen the organisation. The Prime Minister made the appeals during his tour of Manicaland, Mashonaland East, the Midlands and Victoria provinces.

Involved in the exercise will be the Minister of Community Development and Womens Affairs, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeramayi, the Deputy Minister of Youth, Sport and Recreation, Mr George Rutanhire, and other senior Government and party officials. The ministers are all MPs for the area.

ELECTIONS

Mr Muroyiwa said elections would be held on October 2 at Glendale in Mazoe and on October 3 at Manhenga in Bindura as an initial stage in the reorganisation of the party.

There will also be an election at Shinje in Sipolilo on October 11. In both areas elections will start at 10 am, Mr Muroyiwa said.

SITHOLE'S ZANU HITS BACK AT HOVE'S WARNING

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 pp 7, 10

[Text]

THE Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole's ZANU yesterday reacted to a warning by the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, that the Government would take action if minority parties did not curb their political activities and conduct themselves lawfully.

A statement issued by ZANU's national chairman, Mr Phineas Sithole, said the current upsurge in political activity was due to the fact that the people felt "threatened by the idea being canvassed by ZANU (PF) and the Government to declare a one-party state in Zimbabwe.

"The minister should be aware that it is desirable for ZANU to hold meetings in order to correct the malicious propaganda being spread by ZANU (PF) which is deliberately designed to distort and misrepresent the history of the real ZANU formed by Mr Sithole in 1963."

Mr Sithole said the inaccessibility of the local Press, radio and television to minority parties made it imperative for them to hold many meetings and political gatherings.

"The minister should not overlook the fact that it is ZANU (PF) which is organising public demonstrations, some of which were against the police and that PF demonstrations were provoked by previous ZANU (PF) demonstrations," he said.

Mr Sithole condemned some ministers for allegedly using divisive slogans which were contrary to "the whole noble concept of reconciliation".

[Editorial]

Freedom or...

NO government can stand with folded arms while its opponents plot subversion or mouth sedition against it. Opposition carries with it a heavy responsibility which should not be abused.

The Constitution of Zimbabwe guarantees freedom of expression, of assembly and of association. It also obliges the Government to safeguard the State against any and all manner of subversion.

The Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Hove, has warned minority political parties to behave themselves in a "proper manner" — or else.

This is not the first time a senior member of the Government has found it necessary to issue such a warning. Mr Hove himself has sounded the same warning in the past; so has the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe.

In essence, what the Government is saying is that as long as the peace which we achieved after years of blood-letting is not threatened by the words or deeds of minority party leaders, everything will remain normal.

On the other hand, if they decide to preach subversion against the State, the law of the land must take its course. It would be irresponsible of the Government not to act.

No one really wants to see a situation in Zimbabwe where free political activity is curtailed in any way; we had enough of that under successive settler regimes, including the most notorious of them all, Ian Smith's.

The minority parties are frightened of the one-party state; Mr Mugabe has vowed that it would not be forced upon the people. We can only surmise that the minority parties are frightened of the unknown.

ZVOBGO INTERVENTION IN DEMONSTRATIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] Any suggestion that civil servants should be exposed to political issues is irresponsible, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said during the adjournment debate in the Assembly.

In reply to two PF MPs who criticized the minister's intervention in the recent spate of demonstrations, he said: "We must protect our civil servants from political issues and all the demonstrations that have occurred have been political."

Dr Zvobgo told the MPs they should not have brought the matter up in the Assembly. "It is clear to me that although the honourable members may have good intentions they have gone about this matter in the wrong way.

"They have not complained to me--they have not sought enlightenment--as to what exactly happened at each and every demonstration.

"By raising this matter here they compel me to deal with this issue in public which will necessarily trigger, if not more demonstrations, certainly greater partisanship in matters which underline some of these demonstrations."

He told Mr Sydney Malunga (PF, Matabeleland North) it was "gibberish nonsense" to call every minister a "custodian of justice" and "the highest court of appeal."

His ministry's philosophy on demonstration was that as long as they were peaceful there was nothing wrong.

On why he had intervened, he said: "Some other government, imbued with a different philosophy regarding the people, may have said this was not for ministers. They should sit in their offices while Rome burns."

The recent demonstration in Norton, he said, had been against the beerhall superintendent who was a former policeman and said to be a UANC supporter. "This was not an issue of rents for which I could have sent my officials."

He countered PF MPs' allegations of "instant justice" by saying he did not fire the superintendent. He listened to the complaints and told the people he would investigate them.

"I am now in the process of holding discussions with the rural council. I can't dismiss him as I don't employ him."

At Chitungwiza he had heard allegations of corruption, nepotism and tribalism, but he would investigate these himself.

The demonstration there had been "huge."

"Officials could not get in. What do I do? Send my permanent secretary to deal with a situation like that?" A public servant would not even know where to begin in such a case, he said.

PM MAKES ONE-PARTY POLL PLEDGE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Melbourne. Unofficial as well as official candidates will be allowed to stand in parliamentary elections in any one-party state in Zimbabwe and experiences in other African countries showed such candidates can get elected, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said last night.

He was answering questions after a short talk to more than 1500 people at Monash University in Melbourne during a meeting organised by the All-Africa Students' Union of Australia and the country's churches.

A hesitant questioner asked if the rumours that Mr Mugabe wanted a one-party state were true and, if so, how did the desire square with his commitment to democracy?

The Prime Minister said such a system would still allow full debate of policy at all levels from the cell to national organisation and people could "differ and box each other" as much as they liked during the debate

Consensus

[Words indistinct] to the consensus of the majority when a decision was reached.

Such a system of rule by consensus and consultation was traditional in Africa and countries like Tanzania, Kenya and Zambia were still democratic despite having such a system.

All argument was under one roof and there was no opposition for the sake of opposition.

If a block of MPs respresented a tribe or a region and voted as a block it did not help unify the country.

Zimbabwe had not forcibly nationalised any industry and had no immediate plans to do so, he told a student who asked when the Government would implement its socialist policies.

A capitalist system had been inherited and it would take time to transform it, but already workers' committees and workers councils had been set up and two firms had voluntarily offered and sold large shareholdings to the State. Other shareholdings had been acquired when South African interests had been found trying to dispose of their shares on the market.

Companies

Private companies had to localise their management as soon and as far as possible, he added.

In his address, the Prime Minister said Namibia had to become independent under an unmodified implementation of UN Resolution 435 and South Africa should be pressured into ending apartheid and incursions into neighbouring countries.

He emphasised that he had not come to Melbourne to demand a certain policy commitment from Commonwealth leaders, but he would certainly put forward his views in the discussion on Southern Africa.

PTC SAYS FOREIGN STAFF NEEDED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] The Posts and Telecommunications Corporation suffered a serious loss of skilled and experienced personnel last year, the chairman of the PTC board, Mr Robert Cole, said yesterday.

Addressing the annual congress of the Posts and Telecommunications Union in Salisbury, Mr Cole expressed the corporation's grave concern and promised the delegates that everything possible was being done to "retain staff and to clear away the causes of uncertainties which have given rise to frustration and anxiety".

He said the union had an important role to play in helping to create a sound and harmonious working relationship.

Mr Cole told the delegates that promotion within the corporation must be based on merit if the organisation was to meet its obligations efficiently and effectively.

"It is now time for all of us to look ahead and work positively towards carrying out our respective tasks to meet the needs of the people of Zimbabwe."

The loss of skilled and experienced staff was reflected in the drop in the high standard of service given to the public and in the increasing criticism being levelled at the PTC.

The corporation was doing everything in its power to overcome the shortage of staff by increasing the intake of local recruits and accelerating their training.

He added that the training helped to replace the staff losses — especially in the postal services.

He, however, disclosed that it would take between three and five years to overcome the loss of skilled people in this department.

During this time trained and experienced staff should be obtained from other countries if telecommunications services were to meet the people's needs.

"I must emphasise that the services of such personnel are required until such time as trained Zimbabweans become sufficiently experienced to undertake the work themselves. This issue is being actively pursued."

POSTAL WORKERS BACK KANGAI ON ONE UNION CALL

Salisbury THE HERALD in Endlish 30 Sep 81 p 11

[Text]

THE Posts and Telecommunications Union yesterday came out in full support of the Government's call for one union in each industry.

Addressing the union's annual congress in Salisbury, the organisation's president, Mr Max Walton, said the call by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, would give workers more power and improve 'heir conditions of service.

"We associate ourselves with the minister's call which will bring about increased productivity," Mr Walton told more than 100 delegates.

Mr Kangai, who made the call at the weekend, gave the trade union movement in Zimbabwe less than a year to unite and establish one union in each industry.

He vowed to stamp out any remaining racial discrimination practised by industrial councils.

Mr Walton told delegates his union agreed with the minister and the organisation was discussing a merger with Posts and Telecommunications Workers' Union.

"We agree with the minister's view and also support him on his contention that the interests of low-ranking workers are most important. Our record of achievements in this regard bears this out."

There was a dire shortage of experienced personnel in the PTC and he urged that exceptional measures be taken to fill the vacuum.

"It is also important that any exceptional measures taken should not inhibit the normal career prospects or legitimate aspirations of our members," he said.

Mr Walton said the union was fully behind the Government's intention to keep the numbers of expatriates to the lowest. It did not favour the recruitment of expatriates but "we have to acknowledge that some may be necessary".

Another way to alleviate the problem was to re-engage retired PTC staff to fill vacant positions. He called for a vigorous training programme at all levels, including refresher courses.

Training was important to ensure standards were maintained. "Without career-type personnel the corporation will crumble," he added.

He claimed there was frustration in the PTC caused by the Africanisation directive by President Banana and many in-service personnel felt that they were being overlooked.

Mr Walton also appealed to the management to have a good relationship with employees and pay them adequately.

"The employer has the responsibility to keep up with our rapidly changing world in regard to our total remuneration and treatment. They must not only pay adequate salaries but must also offer attractive fringe benefits and improve working conditions and ensure equal rights."

It was also imperative for workers to show a positive approach to their work and be loyal and enthusiastic.

UNIONS UNDER FIRE FROM BOTH SIDES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] Trade unions came under fire from both RF and ZANU (PF) MPs in the Assembly.

In a hard-hitting attack on the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, Mr Richard Cartwright (RF, Hatfield), said that instead of working for the good of the nation, it was "aiding and abetting the ruination of the economy of the country."

"I think trade unions should be strong and divorced from politics," he said, referring to an article in yesterday's Herald in which trade union chief Mr Albert Mugabe, was quoted as urging the Government to take over control of public transport.

"I also think that trade unions should stick to their own job and leave alone things they have no knowledge of," he said.

While congratulating the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai for his successes in diffusing wildcat strikes during the past year, Mr Albert Taderera (ZANU-PF, Victoria), said the trade union movement had been infiltrated by agitators bent on sabotaging the economy of the country.

Mr Taderera, a former trade unionist, also called for the scrapping of the Industrial Concilliation Act which, he said, did not encourage good employer-worker relations.

"The minister would not be running around the country if it were not for the irresponsibility of people we find in the trade unions.

"Instead of educating the workers to understand the value of good labour relations we find these people going into the farms and denouncing socialism. It is time we rid ourselves of these agitators."

Mr Sydney Malunga (PF, Matabeleland North), urged Mr Kangai to increase the industrial minimum wage from $85 a month to a level where workers could "make ends meet."

KANGAI PLEDGES NATIONAL PLAN FOR PENSIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] The Government is going to introduce a national pension scheme to cater for Zimbabwe's workers, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, told the Assembly during the debate on his ministry's expenditure estimates.

"It is a matter which causes a great deal of concern," he said, "that some workers who had given years of service found themselves pensionless and destitute when they left their jobs.

"The Cabinet has already approved proposals from my ministry on this subject."

Mr Dzikamai Mavhaire [ZANU-PF, Victoria] suggested that the various funds for caring for old people may undermine African culture, according to which the children traditionally looked after their aged parents.

The minister disagreed, and said this was not a scheme to cater for the entire aged population, but mainly for expatriates who left their own countries many years ago and had "given the better part of their lives to this country." He said it was the responsibility of this country, therefore, to look after them.

Mr Kangai also told the House that an official from the International Labour Organisation recently spent two weeks in Zimbabwe assessing the feasibility of introducing a national pension scheme.

Commenting on concern expressed by Mr Henry Elsworth (RF, Midlands) over the plight of small mines which he said might be forced to close down or discharge workers because of their inability to pay the minimum wage, Mr Kangai said his ministry would step in where such situations arose to try to "arrest" the situation.

Replying to a call by Mr Sydney Malunga (PF, Matabeleland North) for an increase in the minimum wage of $85 a month, Mr Kangai said that he hoped that in the not-too-distant future the Government would announce its plans on this issue.

He accused some employers of resorting to tactics designed to avoid paying the minimum wage and warned that in any future minimum wage regulations, loopholes that could be used to circumvent such regulations would be plugged.

Commenting on the $43 million earmarked for demobilisation gratuities for former combatants who opt to leave the army, Mr Kangai said: "The $43 million is not the ceiling. It is just a bare minimum to get the scheme going."

He assured the House that the demobilisation money would go to the people for whom it had been set aside and that the Government would try to help those demobilised by offering such things as schooling.

Mr Robert Marere (ZANU-PF, Mashonaland East) said there was still discrimination by employers in the building industry and artisans were paid lower wages when doing a job in African areas than for doing the same job in areas covered by National Industrial Act regulations.

Mr Kangai replied that the building industry and a trade union and employers had negotiated an agreement which would come to the ministry for approval. He said this agreement was open to objections for 30 days and said that members of the House could--and in fact had an obligation to--make any objections they felt necessary to any agreement.

Regarding the trade unions the minister agreed with Mr Rowan Cronje (RF, Central) on the principle of freedom of association, but said that public interests and public safety were sometimes more important than freedom of association.

AFC TO BUILD RURAL DEPOTS

[Text] The Agricultural Finance Corporation has announced a massive programme to build depots in the rural areas. Under the programme, the parastatal body would spend huge sums of money.

In an interview with Ziana in Salisbury last night, the general manager, Mr Richard Tuckniss, said the programme was a follow-up to the Prime Minister's pledge for the corporation to establish depots in rural areas.

The general manager said the AFC wanted to increase marketing outlets by establishing depots throughout the rural areas.

"We realise how important this programme is to us and it is our hope that the Prime Minister's pledge is implemented as soon as possible," he said.

Opening the Mrewa Agricultural Show, the Prime Minister said the Government is to streamline the distribution of credit being expanded by the Agricultural Finance Corporation to enable all farmers to benefit from the scheme.

And Mr Tuckniss said last night his organisation was doing everything possible to ensure that all farmers in the rural areas were satisfied.

The general manager also dispelled fears among farmers that the recent loan rate increase from 9 to 12 percent would affect them.

"We have the interests of the famers at heart and it would be suicidal for us to punish the farmer, who we very much depend on," he said.

Mr Tuckniss explained that the increases were meant to lessen borrowing from the bank.

STATE STEPS IN TO HELP BOOST CROP DELIVERIES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 11

[Text]

TRUCKS from the Central Mechanical Equipment Department are being used to supplement private contractors moving crops from communal farms to marketing depots.

The chief Agritech agronomist for the commercial sector, Mr Harry Howden, who is coordinating the Government fleet, said it was hoped the move would enable all communal crops to be in by November 20.

"So far we are concentrating mainly in areas with heavy soils which make it difficult to operate when it rains. We will go to areas with sandy soils later.

"We are not competing with private companies, but supplementing where they are not willing to go.

"For instance in Mzarabani, Centenary, contractors are willing to take fertilisers down the escarpment and are not willing to carry crops uphill on their return.

"We have stepped in to carry crops in areas such as these, plus those considered inaccessible by private contractors."

To encourage private contractors to continue operating the Government was charging a fee equivalent to that asked for by private hauliers.

Government operations started last week in Mangwende, Mudzi, Matibi One and Sipolilo. Trucks issued to Agritech's division for the communal sector had moved 77 000 tonnes of produce from Weya in two days.

In Gokwe 55 Government trucks are expected to handle 10 500 tonnes of cotton and 33 000 tonnes of grain — 90 percent of it maize and the rest groundnuts and soya beans.

A total of 75 trucks will be deployed throughout the rest of the country to move 17 000 tonnes of grain and 500 tonnes of cotton.

"It takes time to get things organised," said Mr Howden. "Everything is going to plan so far." Rain was the only threat to the operation.

"We received details about the size of the produce from our 1 250 field staff, local government authorities, political committees, women's groups master farmers and young farmers' clubs.

SALE OF DOMESTIC PRAWNS ANNOUNCED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 11

[Text]

GIANT Kariba freshwater prawns will be on sale in Salisbury before November.

In an interview this week consultant marine biologist Dr Mark Caulton said that prawns had already gone on sale in Kariba.

"By November the first of regular consignments of prawns will reach Salisbury and other parts of the country since we now have 750 000 prawns in stock with another 250 000 hatching every month," Dr Caulton said.

Describing Zimbabwe's pioneer prawn production project as "having gone much better than expected", Dr Caulton said that by early next year 24 ponds with a surface area of 15 ha would be filled with giant Malaysian prawns.

TARGET

The total production target would be 30 tonnes a year which would ensure a continuous supply on the local market. Although there were no plans to export yet, Zambia was interested in buying prawns, Dr Caulton added.

The breeding stock was imported from Thailand last year by Zimbabwean businessmen who believed that prawns would multiply fast in Kariba's warm water.

Scientific research, trial and error and an investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars have resulted in a successful new industry with the processing and packing plant now nearing completion.

"Quality-wise the Kariba prawns will be better than those from Mozambique since they will be frozen within 30 minutes of capture," Dr Caulton said.

After being taken from the ponds the prawns will be kept for 24 hours under running water in concrete tanks. This ensures that no food remnants are left in the stomach which obviates the need to remove the black vein or gut before eating.

They are killed in icy water, washed and hand-sorted into sizes before being frozen and packed.

"This process takes place within 30 minutes which ensures that the prawns are absolutely fresh with no risk of contamination. Since they will be airfreighted from the farm to the consumer their quality is assured," Dr Caulton stressed.

To meet demand the ideal weight of each prawn was 30 grams with between 30 and 40 prawns to a kilogram, but some were big enough to weigh in at only 10 to a kilogram, Dr Caulton said.

The price? About $15 a kg, including tax.

BRIEFS

WORKERS DISCONTENT--Bulawayo. The workers' committee of Hippo Valley Estates will meet before the end of the week fo review grievances, the committee chairman, Mr Simon Mupindu, said yesterday. He was speaking after the Sepbember 28 deadline set by the workers for the firing of manpower resources manager, Mr Martin Duffield, had passed. Mr Mupindu said he could not comment on what the workers intended to do next. "The workers' committee will meet before the end of this week to discuss various issues affecting the workers," he said. He noted that Mr Duffield had not been fired and said workers were "still on their toes awaiting the development of the promises made to them by management." Last Friday Mr Mupindu said the workers reserved the right to strike if Mr Duffield, whom he described as "the biggest single problem for the workers," had not been fired by Monday. ROMANIAN TEAM--A Romanian economic delegation led by Dr Stefan Masu, the director for African affairs, yesterday paid a courtesy call on President Banana at State House in Salisbury, reports Zimbabwe Information Services. Receiving the delegation, President Banana said that their visit to Zimbabwe "brought back the happy memories of my visit to Romania last year." The visit afforded the delegation the opportunity to explore various areas of co-operation between the two countries, said the President. He said that since his visit to Romania there had been tremendous progress in following up the decisions taken by the officials of the two countries. "Your visit here is yet another step toward consolidating the co-operation agreement. Paper agreements in themselves are not very important," the President said. He expressed confidence that the ministries would respond positively to the issues to be discussed and would do everything to facilitate the discussions. Earlier, the leader of the Romanian delegation told President Banana that President Ceausescu was paying special attention to the development of relationships between Romania and Zimbabwe. FARM PROBE--The Commission of Inquiry into the Agricultural Industry has decided to hear oral evidence in Salisbury in camera in a bid to protect publicity-shy farmers. The chairman, Professor Gordon Chavunduka, said yesterday: "I have been given power to review the situation from time to time. "The trouble is when you (reporters) are in, people become nervous and do not give us all the information that we need because of your presence." The ban, he said, also applied to Ministry of Information officers, who had been attending the hearings, which end next week. Dr Chavunduka said reporters were free to interview farmers after they had given evidence. But yesterday, one farmer who gave evidence, Colonel George Hartley, was reluctant to go into details. "I have told the commissioners of the need to settle the squatter situation and attend to input and machinery costs," was all he had to say. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 1]

CASH FOR GMB--A supplementary capital budget of $1,386,429 for the Grain Marketing Board was tabled in the Assembly. Included in the provisions for expenditure is $74,500 for a new coffee depot. The provisions note that the current estimate of the cost of the depot is $480,000, $74,500 more than the original estimate. Under expenditure for new projects are $75,000 for a training centre at Aspindale in Salisbury, $290,000 for primary marketing depots, $205,000 for improvements to depots, and $150,000 for plant, machinery and works. 'ECONOMY EXPANDING'--The minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, told Parliament that the country's economy was "definitely expanding." Answering questions from Mr Rowan Cronje (RF, Central) during debate of the committee of supply for his ministry's vote, the minister said that about 36,000 people had been found employment in the first half of 1980. "I am quite sure the figure has doubled by now," he added. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 5]

DAM PROJECT--Kuwait was interested in funding the development of the Sabi-Limpopo Valley area, the Minister of Natural Resources and Water Development, Senator Joseph Msika, told the Assembly. Answering points raised during the committee of supply consideration of his ministry's $32,726,000 vote, Senator Msika said the possible involvement of Kuwait in the development of this area was the reason why no funds had been earmarked for the planned Condo dam project during the current financial year. He added that his ministry had completed "all the preliminary work" on the project. "My ministry is considering the best site for this dam," he said. Before being interrupted by the automatic adjournment of the House the minister also said that Zimbabwe had been divided into five water development provinces and that his ministry had managed, despite lack of funds, to establish one or two water development schemes in each province. Consideration of Senator Msika's ministry vote will be resumed today. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 5]

MUZOREWA's GUARDS--Three security men assigned by the Government to guard Bishop Abel Muzorewa shortly after independence, have been withdrawn. Bishop Muzorewa said yesterday that the men were withdrawn without notice about two weeks ago. "I was not told anything," he said, "they were just removed. "The only question I have is that the Prime Minister had said that I would have them for as long as I needed." Asked if he had any fears about his personal security, Bishop Muzorewa said it was "immaterial." "I can take care of myself. God is my helper," he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Sep 81 p 7]

CONNECTION WITH SAAM DENIED--The government of Zimbabwe has categorically denied any connection or association with the socalled Southern African Antiapartheid Movement [SAAM] led by (Filiman Muzorewa). A statement issued by the ministry of foreign affairs yesterday described as preposterous lies claims by Mr Muzorewa that the movement was established after prior consultation with the government. The statement said these preposterous claims about government involvement by Mr (Filiman Muzorewa) are designed to give credibility to the Saam. Describing the movement as unwarranted, the state said Zimbabwe's commitment to the liberation struggle in Namibia and South Africa remains as enunciated by the Prime Minister Comrade Mugabe. In a statement a spokesman for the minister of foreign affairs denounced the SAAM as a front organization for the enemies of the liberation struggle in Namibia and South Africa. The spokesman said that the true and authentic liberation movements in Namibia and South Africa remained the SWAPO, the Pan-African Congress and the ANC. He advised those who might have been cheated into supporting Mr (Filiman Muzorewa's SAAM to reconsider the affiliation with the movement, adding that genuine support should be given to SWAPO, the ANC and the authentic antiapartheid movement based in London. FINNISH DELEGATION ARRIVES IN ZIMBABWE--Salisbury: The 25-member Finnish delegation led by the Finnish foreign trade minister, Mr Rekola, arrived in the city today. Speaking to newsmen on arrival from the Mozambique capital, Maputo, Mr Rekola said his visit is aimed at intensifying economic cooperation between his country and Zimbabwe. During its stay in the country the delegation is expected to hold discussions with the president, Comrade Banana, and other government officials. Mr Rekola was met at the airport by the acting minister of trade and commerce, Comrade Kangai. [Text] [CA021012 Salisbury Domestic Service in English 1400 GMT 1 Oct 81]

UNDERDEVELOPMENT, RECESSION HIT AFRICA HARDEST

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 15 Sep 81 pp 4-5

[Article by Marie Joannidis]

[Text]

PARIS, September 13 - Africa would appear to be the continent worst hit by underdevelopment and the world recession, in spite of its huge resources, numbering 21 of the 31 countries recognised by the U.N. as being the least developed.

Nearly half of the world's 10 million refugees and displaced persons are in Africa, which has a very low level of literacy and one of the highest infant mortality rates.

Often victims of natural calamities such as drought, aggravated by geographical isolation, the people of these countries are also prey to civil or national wars fanned by interference from foreign powers exploiting their economic weakness and sometimes the local political regime.

"One is more ready to give us arms to tear ourselves apart and encourage destabilisation than to give us the resources and facilities necessary for our development", said one of the participants at the conference here on the Least Developed Countries (LDCS), Niger's Planning Minister Brah Mahamane.

The African group at the conference has several times joined forces to stress that the problem of underdevelopment must be re-situated into a global context and to call for greater justice in Africa's relations with the rest of the world.

"We have decided to concentrate all of our battle on achieving economic independence in order to be able to make our contribution to the resolution of international problems", Mr. Mahamane said.

Niger is a typical case of the countries under discussion here : land-locked, prone to periodic drought, and with an economy highly dependent on exports of just one product, uranium.

Enormous needs

A fall in the world price of uranium has badly hit Niger's development and investment programme, which it had in recent years been able to finance from its own export revenue.

"We were in a state of precarious convalescence with regard to our needs, which are enormous, and this fall threatens to slow down our whole programme", Mr. Mahamane said.

He stressed that "interdependence of the world today" and his conviction that the economic crises of the industrialised world could not be resolved "within their own restricted framework" but in the North-South Dialogue .

The Minister said that his country already suffered from climatic vagaries and was obliged to import cereals to augment the population's food supply, while health and illiteracy were also priority concerns.

Big step forward...

He said that France's proposal that the "Stabex" system of guaranteeing export revenues currently practised within the European Economic Community (EEC) be extended to the LDCS would be "a big step forward".

"The target of 0.15 per cent of gross national product of the industrialised nations for public aid to the LDCS is a minimum, and the results (of the conference) must meet the level of hopes", Mr. Mahamane said.

For the countries of Chad, Somalia, Ethiopia and Uganda, among others on the continent, the low level of economic development or drought and isolation have been further aggravated by war and its ensuing destruction and human upheaval. Countries such as Sudan and Tanzania have also had to bear the burden of an influx of displaced people.

All of the African delegates here officially say that it is the economic battle that must be won, even if political problems are often still to the fore. (A.F.P.)

FRENCH SOCIALISTS LOOK AT AFRICA

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3344, 31 Aug 81 pp 1980-1981

[Article by Alex Rondos: "Socialist Look at Africa"]

[Text]

M. JEAN-PIERRE COT'S visit to Nigeria is indicative — just as his previous visit to Ghana was earlier in the month — of a desire in the socialist administration in Paris to extend horizons beyond the traditional field. M. Cot, who is the Minister responsible for Co-operation at the French Ministry of External Affairs, refers to his desire to "consider Africa as an ensemble", and he has promised himself that everytime he goes to a Francophone state he will also visit an Anglophone or Lusophone area.

This is not without its problems as the new government is rapidly finding out. France, M. Cot has said, does not have the means to ensure that the whole of Africa receives large and significant amounts of public aid. France will, therefore, "concentrate its efforts on its traditional friends". Some of these friends can be troublesome and even embarrassing, especialy when they are obligations inherited from the Giscardian era.

Hence, M. Dacko, of the Central African Republic, can rest assured that the French will continue to offer financial support so that the civil servants can be paid, thus avoiding the chaos of the oft-quoted example of Uganda. France is also prepared to help Chad, especially in the reconstruction of N'Djamena. However, the abivalence displayed towards Libya by Giscard d'Estaing is not quite so apparent. Libya, in the view of the present government, must show that it is more than an army of occupation. Proof of Libyan assistance to Chad will be the day when they are no longer needed, so the argument goes. No ambassador will be named to N'Djamena until the French Government feels assured that the Chadian Government enjoys what it calls "a certain independence".

The one leader for whom the socialists' distaste has been made manifestly clear is President Mobutu, of Zaire. The latest Franco-African summit was to have been held in Kinshasa in September. President Mitterrand has postponed the occasion and it will be held later in the year in France. However, there has been no question of removing some of the military officers who are helping train the Zaire forces.

What the socialist government is practising is the simple principle that you stick by your friends, many of whom your country helped create, however dislikeable or embarrassing they may have become, until you are absolutely certain that the friend can be replaced by someone who is more palatable. The tradition of an overseas empire, the survival of which has always depended on the discovery or creation of an indigenous group of collaborators, has not been forgotten in Paris. Even the most well-meaning government, as I think the socialist government in Paris is, fears possible chaos as much as it does existing tyranny.

What M. Cot would like to do is "decolonise co-operation". He has said that he wants to find out exactly where French money that is given as aid has gone. But above all, M. Cot is emphatic about the need to train more Africans. At present, according to M. Cot's estimates, 55 per cent of technical teachers in Africa are French. He wants to see more interest in assistance to rural areas. "Peasants well-being must be made permanent so that they do not flee to the cities." Self-sufficiency in food production is another source of concern to him and he wants African countries to produce their own sources of energy.

On arriving at his ministry, he said he was "horrified to see that Central Africa had been recolonized. This country had practically come back under French administration."

As to the problems of The Gambia and the Senegalese reaction, he had this to say

CATHOLICISM SAID ONLY TOLERATED IN FRANCOPHONE AFRICA

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 18 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Barnard Degioanni: "Catholics At Government Mercy"]

[Text]

YAOUNDE, September 16 - The Roman Catholic Church functions in French-speaking Africa at the mercy of the political authorities in each country.

On the whole it is tolerated rather than welcomed, and it constantly watches its own behaviour to avoid being confronted by the earthly powers-that-be. At a meeting here at the beginning of the month ordained and lay members of the Church from 12 states all agreed that, while the position might change from country to country, Catholicism was generally gagged by the government.

They particularly deplored the fact that any policy which did not confirm to the thinking of the party or government in power was automatically censured. In addition the central powers kept a tight rein on broadcasting media, which were used as a propaganda weapon to feed the masses on government policies, the delegates agreed.

Representatives at the one-week conference were all members of the International Catholic Association for Radio and Television (UNDA) and the International Catholic Organisation for the Cinema (OCIC), from Benin, Burundi, Cameroun, Ivory Coast, Gabon, Mali, Centrafrica, Rwanda, Senegal, Togo, Upper Volta and Zaire.

Under observation...

Such a situation greatly compromised the Church 's freedom of action, and it was virtually impossible for it to campaign against social inequalities or corruption. As an example of the gagging of social campaigning, the Yaoundé meeting was told that in Upper Volta it would be impossible to point out publicly that eight bottles of champagne were worth the equivalent of a farmer's annual budget.

Government hold over the church was particularly strong in Benin, Burundi, Zaire and Togo, the delegates agreed, while in all the other states apart from Gabon and Ivory Coast it could be described as being under observation. As one priest remarked, "we have to make use of existing legal structures to push the law to its limits and beyond". .../

Islamic operation...

But the law differs from country to country. In Benin, Burundi, Togo and Zaire the Catholic press is banned, although Zaire and Togo give the Church access to radio programmes.

In Rwanda the Government accepts criticism on condition that it is "constructive", and the Church-inspired daily newspaper Kinyamateka has a circulation of 14,000.

Practising Catholics in Senegal fear that a sly operation is under way to Islamicise the national broadcasting service and relegate Catholic programmes to regional stations.

But despite their many problems delegates from all 12 participating countries have rejected Vatican proposals to install a continent-wide transmitter in Central Africa to broadcast in French.

They argue that the Protestant Church tried a similar operation 10 years ago, based in Addis Ababa. But it was abandoned after the Ethiopian revolution. (A.F.P.)

AID GROUP CHANGE PROPOSAL--Paris, September 16—France is to propose changes in the operations of an aid group for Africa set up with some other Western countries by the previous government, Co-operation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot said here Tuesday. The group is called Concerted Action for Development in Africa (ACDA). The brainchild of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, it became operative in December 1979, with the participation of the United States, Britain, Belgium, West Germany and Canada. The system called for each member to supply development aid independently but in concert with the other partners. Each country furthermore took over a selected field of operations—France handled rural development, the United States health matters. Mr. Cot said the new French Government wanted a different system of consultations which would do away with each country being in charge of a given sector. The African countries themselves would be asked to take part in the harmonisation of projects, he said. There was an outcry in some French political and medical circles earlier this year over the allocation of the health field to the United States. It was alleged that the decision was intended to benefit the powerful American pharmaceutical industry. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 18 Sep 81 p 4]

ACCENT ON RADIO—Nairobi, September 17--It is cause for concern that after two decades of independence African countries are still not self-reliant in meeting their needs for appropriate technology, Kenyan Information and Broadcasting Minister Peter Oloo Aringo said here on Wednesday. In a speech to the second pan-African conference of permanent secretaries and directors of broadcasting, read on his behalf by his Assistant Minister, Ntere Mbogori, Mr. Aringo observed that "no radio production or transmission equipment is manufactured in independent Africa except for a few receiver assembly plants in some countries". The potential of radio broadcasting for servicing development in Africa was greater than for other media, the Minister said. That was because radio had "wider penetration" among urban people and "significant penetration in the rural areas where the majority of our people live". (A.F.P.) POLITICAL BUREAU DECLARATION ON GAMES

[Text] The MPLA-Labor Party Political Bureau yesterday made public an important declaration on the holding of the Second Central African Games.

In this declaration, which we have prominently published in this issue's inside pages, the Political Bureau, after pointedly alluding to the games in Angola, goes on to say that "they are taking place," as Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos stated, "in an intricate and difficult international context in which disagreements are becoming vehement not only in developed capitalist societies, but also within the very imperialist system itself, on the one hand, and in which relations are becoming more strained among industrialized countries in the capitalist bloc and socialist camp.

Therefore, the declaration further emphasizes, it is within an international situation such as this, in which imperialistic aggression is increasing against the People's Republic of Angola, and has reached the point of recently invading it with the South African regular army backed by mercenaries of several nationalities and Angolan puppets in the south of our country that the Second Central African Games are to be held.

This fact has once again clearly proven our people's willingness to maintain friendly ties with every nation in the world and especially with the people on our own continent, thereby making it possible to strengthen unity and brotherly relations among African nations.

After emphasizing that any evidence of this nature will win the party's attention, the Political Bureau Declaration stresses that in our country physical culture and sports constitute an integral part of the educational system in the working people's daily life thereby enabling them to assume a stronger commitment to and a greater physical ability for the national reconstruction tasks and the establishment of a new socialist society.

For this reason, as can be read in the declaration, the holding of the Second Central African Games in the People's Republic of Angola will contribute not only to our sportsmen's athletic proficiency but will also enable them to acquire new experiences as well as proving our competency in the area of intense competition.

In the declaration, the Political Bureau also highlights the involvement of several of our country's active sectors in activities proper for the occasion and welcomes all athletes who will defend the People's Republic of Angola's colors, spurred on by the earnest desire to see our country once again win the greatest prestige in this very important sports event on the African continent.

As stated in the Political Bureau Declaration, "our country, traditionally hospitable and friendly, is called upon once again to receive our visitors in a befitting manner, thus proving their strongly disciplined spirit, organization and vigilance against saboteurs and all those who, through shameful acts, may wish to jeopardize the success which we wish for this Second Central African Games.

The MPLA-Labor Party Political Bureau, therefore, is urging all our people and, especially, all residents of the cities of Luanda and Huambo, to give their wholehearted cooperation and strict conformity to all established disciplinary standards so that this sports event may take place within the most favorable friendly and brotherly environment.

HUAMBO POLITICAL SCHOOL GRADUATES CADRE

[Text] In an interview granted to ANGOP, Nuno de Oliveira, director of the institution, said that the Huambo Party Albano Machado Provincial School, founded 7 May 1977, has to date graduated 505 party cadres among whom were 345 political activists and 180 officials, members of provincial committees and party coordinators in towns and communes.

Students who attend the school where they undergo 4 months of political and ideological training, the time allotted for the courses, come from the Bie, Kuango Kubango Provinces and from the Huambo Province itself, after having been previously chosen, provided they are members of the party, JMPLA [Youth Movement for the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola] or of one of the UNTA [National Union of Workers of Angola] provincial secretariats, and of OMA [Organization of Angolan Women].

Four professors with intermediate courses taken at the Party's National School teach subjects on Marxism-Leninism, MPLA and Angolan history, the party structure and the scientific orientation of society. There are also two instructors who are in charge of cultural development.

Resident regulations facilitate the good use of the students' time. There is, therefore, a schedule for classes and for recreational and sports periods as well as for visits to well-planned enterprises in the provinces and for participation in conferences with local party leaders.

The students in this school are not cut off from productive tasks. In this context, a small collective farm and a vegetable garden were established to alleviate some food problems.

Requested to comment on the placement of graduate students, the school director replied that these are directed to the party's provincial committees' organizational departments which, in turn, assign the students to the work according to their capability.

To date, they have already completed seven courses and are about to finish the eighth, with a total of 54 students.

One of the main difficulties which causes deep concern for the establishment's administration is that of providing food for the students, for the plan drawn up by domestic trade does not meet anticipated needs.

PRESIDENT MOI ISSUES DIRECTIVE ON CASH

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 16 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Daniel arap Moi yesterday told the police to be vigilant on the movement of Kenya's currency. The President said he was determined to see that currency regulations were adhered to and proper Government spending was observed.

President Moi was addressing a luncheon hosted by the Central Bank of Kenya to mark its 15th anniversary.

"I have directed that serious steps must be taken to make sure that stricter measures are taken to save public funds," he said.

The President said he had issued instructions to conserve the country's scarce foreign exchange.

"This will mean in practice that henceforth, foreign exchange will only be allocated for such essential items as raw materials, capital goods, medicines and agricultural inputs," he said, adding that "while we must be realistic, there are now some signs of hope and prospect; both in the national arenas and across the worldwide spectrum, which may dispel the distressing thought of any permanent gloom."

President Moi said new banks would not be making their optimum contribution to national development unless in terms of presence and service — they were prepared to reach into the rural areas where the majority of Kenyans lived and worked.

"It is not enough, and it is no great cause for satisfaction, when these bodies are represented only in Nairobi and Mombasa," he said.

"It is quite imperative in my view that commercial banks should understand and perform their role, as a catalyst, in helping us to increase productivity and improve living standards in the rural areas," President Moi said.

He recalled that when the bank was inaugurated in 1966, its first task was to replace the notes and coins of the East African Currency Board, then amounting in value to something over Shs. 400 million.

He noted that this was smoothly accomplished and in June this year the total amount of national currency in circulation had risen to well over Shs. 1,000 million. He said in recent times, the Central Bank had been issuing our Nyayo currency now familiar everywhere in the Republic.

The occasion was attended by, among others, the Vice-President and Minister for Finance, Mr. Mwai Kibaki, the Minister for Constitutional and Home Affairs, Mr. Charles Njonjo and a Minister of State in the President's Office, Mr. G. G. Kariuki.

MP'S COME UNDER POLICE QUESTIONING

[Article by GIDEON MULAKI]

[Text]

SEVEN Members of Parliament are being questioned by police over alleged false mileage claims and other issues.

The MPs personal files have already been taken from the National Assembly by officers from the Criminal Investigations Department (CID).

The seven are Nakuru North MP Koigi wa Wamwere, Ugenya MP James Orengo, Kitutu East MP Abuya Abuya, Nyando MP Onyango Midika, Eldoret North MP Chelagat Mutai Bungoma South MP Lawrence Sifuna and Lurambi South MP Wasike Ndombi.

The file of Wundanyi MP Mashengu wa Mwachofi is also understood to have been taken to CID headquarters but the MP has not yet been questioned.

Mileage

One of the MPs said they were being quizzed on why they were claiming mileage allowance for cars which they are understood to have sold.

Bungoma South MP Sifuna said: "They asked me why I was claiming mileage on my car while it is known that I have sold it to a European.

"They also asked me about my political connections in some countries like Bulgaria, China and Israel and also my bank.

Mr. Sifuna said Miss Mutai was also being questioned.

He said of the other six that they "are all sailing on the same boat".

Police have also searched their houses, he said.

"When police came to my house they searched all documents, but they never got anything," he said.

Nyando MP Onyango Midika confirmed he had been quizzed but declined to give details, saying it was a very sensitive one.

Asked for comment, the Clerk of the National Assembly, Mr. Leonard Nguri, said he had heard "the rumour".

Efforts to reach the other MPs were fruitless.

BOYCOTT OF LOS ANGELES OLYMPICS URGED

[Editorial]

[Text]

NOW that the racist rugby team has concluded its tour of New Zealand and gone on to the United States, there is no reason why the African countries should continue equivocating on the issue of participation in the 1984 Olympics.

African nations have made it a principle that they would not entertain having sporting links with South Africa. This principle has on the whole been honoured in the past. We expect that they will continue the same in the future.

Some doubt has been cast about this, particularly in American circles, where some elements have argued that sport should be totally divorced from politics. Yet it is the same Americans who led a boycott of the Moscow Olympics to show Moscow that the world was displeased with its invasion of Afghanistan.

If that was not political then the term must be getting a new meaning which is not yet in the universal dictionaries.

Officially the Americans are saying they will not interfere in any way with the racist tour since the invitation is strictly private. This stand is as nonsensical as the New Zealand stand was.

There is no way one is to separate the activities of national, or for that matter, regional sporting organisations when it comes to having links with the racists.

In the American case this has been recognised by the leadership of the host city — Los Angeles — who have expressed their concern over the potential boycott of the Olympics. They clearly state that allowing the racing rugby team to play in the US will lead to even non-African countries joining the boycott.

When African nations were urging New Zealand to stop the racist tour New Zealand responded by arguing that she was being pressurised since she is just a small power. The need to demolish this kind of argument for all times becomes another compelling reason why the African nations must announce their boycott of the Olympics in the US now. Such a boycott of one of the super powers would establish the principle for good.

These days, the nations of the West have a way of thinking that all their interests are linked. It is time the African nations realised that their interests particularly with respect to Southern Africa are all related. Thus the Namibia independence, assuring Angola's integrity and creating a multiracial society in South Africa are all interrelated.

DEVALUATION AIMS AT SPURRING EXPORTS

[Article by KARIUKI-WACCIIRA in column "News Background": "Devaluation Is To Spur Exports"]

[Text]

WHEN news came that Kenya had devalued the shilling by 18 per cent, I felt uncomfortable. In February this year, it had received a 5 per cent chop. The effective devaluation this year thus amounts to a high 23 per cent scale-down.

As a result, if Kenya was able to import 10 tons of medicine last year, the same money will now bring in only 8 tons. All things remaining the same, Kenya will now acquire only 78 per cent of what she would have been able to acquire last year, without having to reduce her import bill at all. Kenya's purchasing power in the international market has simply cascaded.

On the other side of the picture, the purchasing power of all other countries trading with Kenya has climbed up. It would be just as though these countries had revalued their currency against the Kenya shilling. These foreign countries will experience the exact opposite of the effects Kenya will experience in her international market transactions.

If Britain could buy 10 tons of coffee from Kenya last year, the same amount of money will now enable her to get 12 tons of coffee, without as little as adding a penny. Kenya has made itself a source of cheap goods for international buyers. Cheap coffee, cheap tea, cheap pyrethrum etcetera.

If Kenya fetched 20 pounds from selling coffee to Britain last year, the same amount of coffee will earn it less than 16 pounds in foreign exchange this year. Kenya will have to produce and sell more and more just to keep earning the same amount of money after the devaluation.

My sense of foreboding was perhaps whetted by the words of an accountant in a company that relies on imported raw materials who said: "We had trouble getting the amounts of our foreign exchange applications approved by the Central Bank before the devaluation. Now we shall need to increase our applied allocations by at least 15 per cent to import the same amount of raw materials. The Government seems to be tightening the string on the country's foreign exchange earnings, under the pretext of trying to loosen the string.

Of course, this accountant was not altogether right. But he was drawing my mind closer to the one question that must be asked: How much additional foreign exchange are we going to earn through making our exports cheaper and building up international demand for them, in comparison to the foreign exchange we stand to lose, in compensating ourselves for a lower purchasing power of our shilling in buying our imports? Put in another way, is devaluation good, fairly good, or very bad for us?

It is fairly bad. But it was imperative that the Government should devalue the Kenya shilling. We live in a complex world.

For a long time now since the oil crisis made its presence felt in Kenya, we have not been earning enough foreign exchange to pay for all our imports. As this problem has increased in intensity, so also has been our difficulty in keeping vital import inputs flowing into the country's economy. We can cut imports, but only up to some extent. We can reduce the importation of gramophone records, video tapes, grapes, blackcurrant juice etcetera. But we cannot stop the flow into the country of medicines, fuel, industrial spare parts and so forth. Today, our purchase of vital categories of imports is hampered. An SOS has to be sounded, and a way of struggling out of the difficult bind has to be sought. One eventuality, rather than a solution, is to devalue the shilling.

When Kenya cannot pay for all her imports, she has to borrow in the structural arrangement of the International Moneytary Fund. Kenya has been running a trading deficit through the assistance of IMF. The Central Bank of Kenya draws advice from IMF in operating her foreign exchange transactions. In fact, the first governor of the Central Bank in 1966 was an officer seconded for service in the Kenyan Government by the IMF.

Kenya can spend more on imports than the total it earns in foreign exchange. Additional foreign exchange comes from what it borrows, plus what it receives as gifts. But gifts form a very tiny proportion of any country's "income".

If Kenya has to keep importing what it requires, boosting exports to earn more foreign exchange is not a plausible solution. Our main exports are coffee, tea, and pyrethrum. Farmers cannot change the supply of these things at short notice. Prices of coffee are determined by the London-based International Coffee Organisation, on the basis of world quota supply. Kenya will have to adhere to standing prices, and will not get a bigger quota just because it has devalued its currency. We will get only a marginal increase in the level of tourism, most probably to be offset by lower earnings per tourist.

So, why has the Kenya shilling been devalued?

The answer is simply to get us more credit from the IMF, to allow us to run a bigger trading deficit and to get debts rescheduled. This is the standard prescription of the IMF for a payments crisis such as Kenya has found itself in. A foreign exchange crisis is in our midst, and our finance authorities have to explore solutions — at least in the short-term, by bowing to international pressures to devalue the Kenya shilling.

The ordinary man will enjoy living in a country where vital imports are flowing in — medicines, machinery and so forth.

However if salaries remain the same, the common man will manage only lesser purchases of goods than he was able to do before the devaluation. In an economy such as ours that is import-oriented, expensive imports will raise prices of locally produced goods with a sweeping rapidity.

Take for instance the way high oil prices in the past have raised the prices in transport and other related services. Oil import prices will in effect rise after the devaluation. Oil companies will ask the Government for higher petrol pump prices or they will hit the doldrums.

UNIVERSITY APPEARS TO BE BACK TO NORMAL

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 18 Sep 81 pp 4-5

[Excerpts]

Academic year ends in two weeks

THE atmosphere at the University of Nairobi appears to have returned to normal at the close of this academic year which according to some observers has been one of the most troubled years at the university. What must have come as good news to some academic members of staff was the recent return of passports to some lecturers whose passports were taken by the government approximately two weeks after the last student unrest. According to sources at the university so far, two lecturers out of the ten that had their passports taken have had them back and have been allowed to travel outside the country. The move to restrict the lecturers' travel followed the presidential directive that no lecturers would be allowed to travel outside the country without official clearance.

The measures to restrict the lecturers' travel was introduced soon after some lecturers were accused by the government of instigating student disturbances. Several lecturers were then turned back at the Jomo Kenyatta International Airport on their way to attend a conference in Zimbabwe. The denial of permission to the lecturers to travel was seen by some observers as an admission on the side of the government that it suspected that the frequent student disturbances may have been caused by foreign connections.

This academic year will come to an end at the end of this month. The only group of students so far left at the campus are the non-final year students who are expected to complete their examinations towards the end of September. The other groups of students, the post-graduate and the final year students, sat for their examinations at different times but the latter group has not yet had their results which will be officially released after the external examiners have had a look at the scripts and the senate has approved them. In the meantime, the students who were asked to vacate the halls of residence two weeks ago have to wait for the results from their homes.

HARAMBEE ABUSES SAID TO WARRANT PROBE

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 19 Sep 81 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

COMPLAINTS that funds raised for harambee projects in many parts of the country are falling into the wrong hands are now too many to be ignored. Obviously there are people around who are not worthy of the trust placed on them by those they pretend to be serving.

Here is a true account of a case that took place in Nyeri District. Two successful people were approached by the committee of their local primary school to help organise a harambee for its development. They were more than willing to do this, bearing in mind the fact that it was that very same school that started them on the road to success.

A successful harambee was held where, apart from the money raised from the others who attended the meeting, the two individuals made sizeable contributions, including donations from their friends throughout the country.

Sometime back this year, the same committee approached them saying that the funds raised had not been sufficient to complete the work, and could they organise another harambee?

Although they were rather surprised knowing fully well that little work had been done, they were still willing to aid a genuine cause. They therefore asked the committee for certified audited accounts of how the money had been spent before they went ahead with another fund-raising drive.

The committee panicked, apparently suspecting trouble. They did produce audited accounts, but the auditors had obviously been fed the wrong information. The accounts did not even reflect the very substantial amounts that the two gentlemen had made!

It would seem clear from the reports coming from other parts of the country that this is not an isolated case. Generosity by members of the public is being turned to selfish private gain and deserving causes are not being served as they should.

No one would like to demean the concept of harambee. It has been one of the great success stories of Kenya and is intimately linked with our national outlook and image, to the extent that we have adopted it as our national motto.

As the Minister for Constitutional and Home Affairs, Mr. Charles Njonjo, pointed out the other day, it is a demonstration of people's willingness to help the less fortunate members of society.

The people must, however, be protected from greedy individuals who manoeuvre themselves into positions of trust for the purpose of getting their hands to resources meant to help uplift the social welfare of the communities they live in.

Some countries have incorporated self-help into the central planning of the government. In South Korea, it forms a part of the Ministry of Social Services and has been a huge success. It has been suggested that a similar move be made here.

While such suggestions are being studied, there is the urgent need to ensure that the funds that have been collected throughout the country for harambee projects do actually end up where they are supposed to go.

The provincial administration in particular, has a clear duty here to probe the use of harambee funds, since they are the ones in direct touch with the people.

It is a great betrayal of the contributors of such funds, both here and outside the country, to see them ending in the pockets of individuals.

VILLAGE ENJOYS BENEFITS OF BIOGAS

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 16 Sep 81 pp 11, 13

[Article by Joyce Ciira: "The Biogas Village"]

[Text]

IT IS sometimes said that rural people are conservative and do not welcome innovations, especially when they are bound to change their way of life.

This is certainly not true of the residents of Nderu Village in Kikuyu, Kiambu District, who have embraced the new idea of using biogas for cooking and lighting wholeheartedly.

"We are all very enthusiastic about the project," says Samuel Kiarie Ngugi, chairman of the newly formed village committee in charge of the project.

The Nderu Rural Settlement Community Biogas Demonstration Complex is a Ministry of Energy and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlement (Habitat) project.

It was started in June this year and when complete will consist of four gas digesters — two of eight cubic metres capacity each, one of 25 cubic metres and another of 35 cubic metres capacity. Already, the two digesters of eight cubic metres capacity each are complete and six homes are using the biogas for cooking and lighting. When the other two digesters are complete, they will supply piped gas to 30 to 32 homes primarily for cooking and lighting.

The project is supervised by an Indian biogas expert, H S Hanuman, currently attached to Habitat. His organisation, the Gobar Gas Scheme of Bombay, India, has helped start such projects in Tanzania, Somali and Upper Volta. "However", stresses Mr. Hanuman, "all these others have been individual projects. This is the first time we are involved in a community project."

Talking about the project, Dr. Ganti Rao of Habitat says that his organisation sees the project as a training and testing ground for the transfer of technology from a developing country — this time India — to another developing country. The project could therefore act as a catalyst for technocal co-operation between developing countries.

This is especially in order, bearing in mind the sentiments of representatives of some developing countries at the recently concluded UN Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Enegy who felt that developing countries should co-operate more in developing renewable sources of energy. They felt this was necessary to avoid a situation whereby the developing countries would be dependent on the developed world for renewable energy.

Unlike some of the exhibits at the recent "Energy 81" exhibition that have to be imported, the Nderu biogas project does not require any imports. "All the materials are available locally," emphasises Dr. Rao.

The six homes already using the biogas have been fitted with a double gas stove and gas lamp each, manufactured in India, but which can be manufactured locally. The stoves cost the equivalent of Shs. 220, while the lamps cost Shs. 230 each.

However, the cost can be brought down with mass production. Commenting on this, Dr. Rao says that the Kenyan piping contractor who did the piping for the project, is willing to manufacture stoves if there is demand for them.

"What's more," adds Dr. Rao, "as stoves using biogas do not need any specialised burner, they can even be made by village fundis, thus cutting down costs even more."

The villagers are especially keen on the project because they do not lose anything. After the biogas is produced, the animal waste is used as fertiliser. "This even makes better fertiliser than when the dung is used straight", explains Mr. Hanuman.

It is significant that the project is located next to an already existing piggery, and the digesters have been built using locally manufactured components, construction materials, labour and building methods.

The project has also made provision for the construction of 10 communal toilets, so that the human waste can also be used to manufacture gas. Contrary to what many would expecct, the villagers are aware of this and welcome the idea.

"There is nothing wrong with it," says Samuel Ngugi.

Habitat hopes that the Nderu Village biogas project will be the forerunner of many such projects in Kenya — and the rest of Africa.

FOREIGN PRESS UNDER FIRE--Tourism Minister, Mr. Elijah Mwangale yesterday accused the foreign Press of misinterpreting Kenya and giving it a bad name. The Minister was speaking at a cocktail party organised by Pakistan International Airlines in honour of tour operators from Gulf countries. He said most foreign Press organisations had made Nairobi their base so every bad story written about Africa was datelined Nairobi. He said this made people think that everything bad was happening in Nairobi. He assured tour operators that Kenya was a peaceful country with a crime rate lower than that of other cities in the world. He said Kenya had the best beaches and parks for game-viewing. He invited tour-operators from Gulf countries to visit every part of Kenya. "The only way to overcome the misinterpretation done by the foreign media is to visit one another," he said. Americans were generally aware of what Kenya offered in tourism, he added. [Excerpt] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 22 Sep 81 p 3]

TEA-FARM WORM INVASION--Some tea-growing areas of Kirinyaga District have been invaded by an unidentified worm which is reported to be retarding the crop's production. This was said by farmers during the official opening of the Kabonge Tea Buying Centre in Mwirua Location, Ndia Division, at the weekend. The centre was opened by the general manager of the Kenya Tea Development Authority, Mr. Simon M. Kamunyu. Mr. Kamunyu told the farmers that KTDA field officers in the area would take specimens of the worms to a laboratory for identification. He said the farmers would then be provided with chemicals for killing the worms. He appealed to the farmers not to panic as KTDA would take action immediately. Claiming that some fertilisers of poor quality had been provided to the farmers, Mr. Kamunyu said the KTDA had provided farmers with better fertilisers. He commended the farmers for their tireless efforts in improving their tea production. He said over 145 million kilogrammes of tea leaves was picked last year. Addressing the same meeting, an Assistant Minister for Health who is also the MP for the area, Mr. James Njiru appealed to the farmers to leave politics to politicians.--KNA [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 21 Sep 81 p 3]

DUTCH GRANT, LOAN--Nairobi, September 14--Kenya is to receive 133 million Kenyan shillings (almost 15 million dollars) from the Netherlands to support its balance of payments, Dutch Charge d'Affaires Kleiweg De Zwaan said here today when he called on Vice President and Minister for Finance Mwai Kibaki. Mr. De Zwaan said that half the amount would be provided as a grant while the remainder would be given as a loan bearing an annual interest of 2.5 per cent, repayable over 30 years with eight years' grace period. The Charge d'Affaires said the purpose was to prevent a further deterioration of Kenya's present financial and economic situation which would have a negative impact on the country's development activities. The aid is intended for essential imports such as raw materials, spare parts, fertilizers and medical drugs. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 15 Sep 81 p 20]

PRAISE GIVEN FOR U.S. AID TO LIBERIA

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

African nations, from all indications, are tired of war, strife, hunger, poverty and illiteracy. Far from being a curse from heavens, Africa's predicaments, to a large extent, have instead been caused by colonial powers who had for centuries held the continent in servitude; hence exposing the continent to one of the most damnable tribulation in the existence of mankind.

In their exploitative pursuits, the colonial masters with impunity, roaped Africa bare of its once abundant resources - natural and human. In addition, their scramble for the continent resulted in the creation of appendages and divisions among African states and their peoples.

In a nutshell, this was the lamentable state of affairs that was bequeathed to independent African states by their unscrupulous colonial masters. This ugly situation therefore, left African countries with one option: to pick up their pieces and start resuscitating their battered and nearly depleted economies. The efforts, however, could not have gained any marked momentum without the help of some friendly nations as well as international financial and donor institutions.

Liberia, Africa's first republic South of the Sahara, which has always maintained an "Open Door" policy, has had in the process several powerful friendly nations which have continued to lend meaningful support to its efforts aimed at revamping all areas of its national development. Among these friendly countries are Britain, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Japan. Yet, there is, of all friendly nations, one friend of Liberia whose succour has continued to be so profound that it has enable Liberia to surmount its difficulties, especially economic. It can indisputedly be said that that friend is none other than the United States of America.

The governments of the United States, no matter what policies they have pursued, have always proved to be Friend among the friends of Liberia. Of the latest salient feature of the US Government's good intention toward Liberia was the visit of its Postmaster General, Mr. William F. Bolger, to Liberia from August 27 - 29, 1981. The visit itself was a consummation of a long overdue response to the Liberian Government's invitation for the US Postmaster General to visit the country. Mr. Bolger's visit to Liberia was the first of its kind by a top US Government official since the 1978 official visit by former President Jimmy Carter.

At the end of Mr. Bolger's two-day fact-finding visit, the Liberian government was assured of US government's assistance to improve her (Liberia's) postal system by providing needed equipment and training facilities. These included the provision of more than 200 vehicles, lock boxes, mail bags, safe and lead seal, and all other needs of the Liberia Postal Affairs Ministry. Mr. Bolger assured the Liberian Government that American technicians would be sent to work along with their Liberian counterparts to improve the entire postal system of Liberia, with emphasis on the rural postal program.

The US Postmaster General as a matter of fact, expressed disappointment over the activities of the Universal Postal Union (UPU) which, he said, has not provided enough assistance to its member countries including Liberia.

No sooner had the People's Redemption Council (PRC) assumed the leadership of Liberia did the USA appear on the scene to help solve the country's economic problems.

The former US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Mr. Richard Moose, at the head of several goodwill missions to Liberia following the April 12, 1980, Military coup, told officials of the Liberian Government that his government would give Liberia an initial $5 million for budgetary support, while an additional $5 million would be given as food assistance. In addition, he disclosed that with the cooperation of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), $9 million of Special Drawing Right (SDR) was guaranteed for Liberia.

Mr. Moose also revealed that arrangements were made with US commercial banks to loan Liberia $5 million, and that his government would help defray some of Liberia's oil bills.

"All foreign debts owed by Liberia to the US and other friendly countries would be rescheduled in order to help Liberia recover from the present economic crisis," Mr. Moose pledged.

From what became his assessment of Liberia's needs, Secretary Moose said he would return home and advance talks with international financial institutions and friends of Liberia for financial support to meet the teething economic problems that faced the young People's Redemption Council government.

In fact, Mr. Moose had as a member of his last entourage to Liberia, an expert of finance at the US State Department, Mr. Donald Born, who spent additional days in Liberia to hold talks with government officials on Liberia's immediate needs.

The result of Mr. Moose's goodwill visits enabled the PRC government to sail above the turbulent economic crisis that it inherited from the last administration.

But that was only a tip of the iceberg, as the US Government has thereafter continued to explore several other areas in which it could assist the Liberian Government. One of the areas on which the lot fell was rural broadcasting.

In October, 1980, the US and the Liberian governments signed an $11.7 million loan agreement for the establishment of a Rural Communication Network. When the project has gone into full swing, for the first time in the history of Liberia, both national and international news programmes would reach people throughout the country, through regional radio stations.

Similarly, the United States Government also undertook the improvement of the Information Ministry's library, and promised to assist in all phases of media development and training. The former Counsellor for Public Affairs at the US Embassy in Monrovia, Mr. Frank Paul Catanoso, who paid a courtesy call on the then Deputy Information Minister Lt. Col. Gray D. Allison, who is now Minister, said his government placed much emphasis on the training of media personnel. He therefore urged the authorities of the Ministry to take advantage of such programs.

Recently, the new US Ambassador to Liberia, Mr. William L. Swing, during a courtesy call on Minister Allison, intimated that several areas in the field of mass communications would be considered for bilateral cooperation between Liberia and the United States of America.

Mr. Swing observed that there was a substantial amount of resources that could be tapped in Liberia, and informed Minister Allison that his government was interested in developing close contact and cooperation in the areas of print and electronic media.

For Commander-In-Chief Samuel K. Doe, therefore, to have exalted the US Government during his November, 1980, major policy statement that the "United States Government has given us more direct financial assistance than it gave in the last year of the previous Tolbert administration," was certainly no misstatement, and was a demonstration of the PRC Government's appreciation of the US Government's assistance.

Another important area in which the American Government is assisting Liberia is the military. In fact, the 30th anniversary of the US military mission to Liberia was celebrated recently on August 27, 1981. The history of the US mission to Liberia dates as far back as 1911, when Liberia asked the US to re-organize its Frontier Force (now the Armed Forces of Liberia). Accordingly, the US War Department appointed three Afro-American officers who arrived in Liberia on May 1, 1912.

Subsequently, as a result of a treaty signed between the US and Liberia on January 11, 1951, US Military Mission to Liberia was born. Since its birth in Liberia about 30 years ago, the Mission's functions and involvement with the Armed Forces of Liberia have included among other things:

1. Managing and administering material and equipment transactions;

2. Managing military education programs to train Liberian military personnel; and

3. Assessing the Liberian government's military capability as well as identifying future requirements.

The US Air Force also constructed Robertsfield, now the Roberts International Airport, which today serves as a modern international airport. It also constructed the Freeport of Monrovia in 1948, which was the result of a meeting between the late Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt of the USA and William V.S. Tubman of Liberia.

The US Government's major military assistance to West Africa is being concentrated in Liberia, followed by Senegal. Liberia depends substantially on US Security assistance, which recently appropriated about $12.3 million for new equipment and a training program of $600,000 to help complete the re-organization of the Armed Forces of Liberia. Part of the loan is being used for the construction of new army barracks.

With the levels of assistance to Liberia from developed nations since the founding of the nation in 1821, the United States Government has provided the most desirable and impact-sustaining aid. Given Liberia's development needs, it can be said that she would foster mutually beneficial contacts and cooperation with not only the US, but all other developed nations which would view her development problems more seriously.

For now, the United States of America has proven that she is a genuine friend concerned about Liberia's problems - economic, social, political and cultural. Her material and other support during Liberia's transition period is ample evidence of this.

PETTIQUOI PRESENTS CREDENTIALS TO KREMLIN

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Sep 81 p 6

[Text]

Liberia's Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Francis T. Pettiquoi, has said that the cordial relations existing between Liberia and the Soviet Union would continue to grow in an atmosphere of peace and mutual trust.

A Foreign Ministry release issued here Saturday said Ambassador Pettiquoi made the statement Friday in Moscow when he presented his letters of credence to Mr. P.G. Gulashvili, Deputy Chairman of the USSR Presidium at the Kremlin.

The release further quoted Ambassador Pettiquoi as saying that the principal objectives of the Liberian Government were "to construct a society based on social justice, peace, equality, freedom and human dignity".

He extended special greetings on behalf of Head of State C-I-C Samuel K. Doe, the government and people of Liberia to the government and people of the Soviet Union.

Earlier, Deputy Chairman Gulashvili welcomed Ambassador Pettiquoi to the Kremlin and explained that the Soviet Union's policies were geared towards building its relations with African states and other developing countries based on "the principle of mutual respect, equality and non-interference in the internal affairs of other states.".

He also indicated the Soviet Union's readiness "for a dialogue with all forces that are striving to strengthen peace and international security."

On Soviet-Liberian relations, the release quoted Deputy Chairman Gulashvili as saying that "this had not developed regularly."

He, however, said that he looked forward to fruitful developments and assured Ambassador Pettiquoi that his activities in that direction would meet understanding and cooperation from the Soviet Government.

Ambassador Pettiquoi was greeted at the Kremlin by an array of high Soviet officials, including the Secretary of the Presidium, Mr. M.P. Georgadze and Deputy Foreign Minister I.N. Zemskov, among others.

PRC SPEAKER GBARTU DECRIES BRIBERY

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Sep 81 pp 1, 6

[Article by Samuel Johnson]

[Text]

Bribery is still rampant within the nation's security forces and it must be stopped, PRC Speaker Brigadier General Jeffrey Gbartu, said during a mass meeting with security agencies at the E.J. Roye Building Friday.

"In the Tolbert regime there was much corruption. We took over, but now we have found out that the same corruption is still going on," the PRC Speaker told assembled security officers in the E.J.Roye Auditorium.

General Gbartu said bribery within the security forces was on the rise and was embarrassing to the PRC. "Can we stopped receiving bribes?" he asked in a pleading voice.

Speaker Gbartu said reports has reached him that there were "lots of corruption" going on at the nation's borders.The PRC Speaker said because of this alleged practice by immigration and other security officers, there were many illegal entries and acts of smuggling have mounted.

Speaker Gbartu called on security officers to be disciplined. He told subordinate officers to respect their superiors. He said there should be compliance to order before complaint.

He told security officers that in performing their duties, they should treat both citizens and foreigners alike."Don't push or dragged a man simply because he is a foreigners,"he cautioned.

He also admonished the officers to be understanding in cases of minor violations of the laws. He said if a motirist breaks a traffic rule, simply because he did not understand the rule, he should be acquianted with the rule instead of being arrested.

Justice Minister Isaac Nyeplu responding, said many of the things the PRC Speaker highlighted can be seen "glaringly". The Minister however assured Speaker Gbartu that he and members of the Joint Security would redoubled their efforts in carrying out their duties.

Minister Neyplu told General Gbartu because of similar act of corruption, he had to detained a security officer who had been harassing residents in the Bong Mines concession area, Bong County.

LACK OF EQUIPMENT HAMPERS CID

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Sep 81, p 8

[Article by J. N. Elliott]

[Text]

The lack of advanced pathological equipment at the JFK Medical Center is hindering efforts to solve many homicide cases, CID Director Bangalee Saysay claimed in a recent interview.

He said homicide cases can only be solved through the aid of advanced pathological equipment. The Criminal Investigation Division, because it lacks such equipment, cannot solve many of the homicide cases, he added.

As a consequence, to solve a homicide case of a decomposed body, Pborensic Pathologist, Dr. Isaac Moses usually goes to Egypt to perform autopsy examination.

This, he said, last for weeks, adding that the process impedes solving of unusual death cases.

He said the autopsy report of Stalin Knowlden has been submitted to his office by Dr. Isaac Moses of the JFK Hospital. But added that the result of the report cannot be revealed since suspects allegedly involved have been indicted by the Criminal Court, Temple of Justice.

Director Saysay said his agency has sufficient evidences to warrant prosecution against the alleged suspects, Barbara K. Anderson and her accomplices, Benjamin Knowlden and William Knowlden.

He said there exists an extradiction treaty between the Governments of Liberia and the United States of America. But if extradiction proceedings against the alleged fugitive, suspect William Knowlden fails, there is the possibility of the two accomplices being tried in the absence of the third party.

William Knowlden, the alleged fugitive suspect, fled to the U.S. sometime this year after Stalin Knowlden, his brother, was allegedly killed during a fratricidal fight over rent money.

Director Saysay also said the two suspects, Barbara K. Anderson and Benjamin Knowlden, who have been detained, are awaiting court trial.

He said in the homicide cases of Summer Wright and Jassie Sonewa, there has been no report from the hospital to ascertain their cause of death.

Summer Wright, a senior female student at the B.W. Harris High School in Monrovia, allegedly committed suicide;while Jassie Sonewa, a female senior student at the University of Liberia, was found dead in her bedroom.Both incidents occurred early this year.

Director Saysay claimed that due to inadequate transportation, all other cases tend to stall. He said if a crime is committed, because of lack of vehicle, agents sometimes have to wait for hours on their single vehicle for transportation.

He said this has also led to criminals escaping after they have committed an offense.

WORK ON NEW CONSTITUTION PROGRESSES

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 17 Sep 81 pp 1, 6

[Article by A. Teage]

[Text]

The mechanics for drafting the nation's new constitution have begun and public hearings on the formulation of the document will commence in about a month's time, Chairman of the Constitutional Commission, Dr. Amos Sawyer, said at a press conference Wednesday.

Dr. Sawyer said, six standing committees have been established to undertake the various activities required for the drafting of a new constitution.

In about two weeks, following the presentation of a document to be circulated by the Secretariat of the Commission, the Commission would be prepared for public hearings. The hearings will be conducted nation-wide, Dr. Sawyer said.

He said the Commission currently has a $500,000 budgetary allotment from government, Dr. Sawyer however explained that projections show a possible need for additional funds in order to cope with the scope of work envisioned.

The six committees are those on Social and Political issues, Judiciary and Finance and the Economy, Government Review, Recommendation and hearings and Drafting.

A full-time secretariat, dealing with administration and research, has also been formed; it is currently functioning from offices at the OAU village in Virginia, near Monrovia, Dr. Sawyer said.

Mr. Winston Tubman, former Liberian Ambassador to the United Nations, heads the Secretariat's research department, while Mr. Willie Belleh, a former director of Special Projects at the Institute of Public Administration, heads the administrative arm of the secretariat.

The Secretariat, Dr. Sawyer said, is at the moment studying reports of the various standing committees that have been adopted by the Commission. The Commission began formal work on May 14, he said.

Dr. Sawyer said the Secretariat is also currently providing further analysis and synthesis of the reports which could be used as the basis for formulating the proposals that are necessary for public participation.

"What we intend to do before holding public hearings is to provide the public with the necessary information upon which informed opinion can be built," he said.

"There is a large sector of our population, he said "that does not know what a constitution is all about. We want to begin from there, informing our people on what a Constitution is and it isn't."

Dr. Sawyer said the Commission intends to infuse into the masses some idea that a Constitution requires the support of the entire people in order for it to be effective.

"It can't work by itself", he said, without the respect and support of the politicians and the general citizenry. A Constitution is nothing more than a piece of paper," Dr. Sawyer added.

He noted that the Commission would seek to synthesize the public as to its responsibility in ensuring the effective operation of a Constitution.

Once that is done, Dr. Sawyer asserted, "then we want to be able to inform the public on the details of the suspended (constitution) document. Many of us have not read that document. On many occasions, it was referred to but not in any substantive way because it was not part of the educational process-definitaly not part of any citizenry, training process in Liberia".

There is a need, Dr. Sawyer stressed, to inform the Liberian people on the details of the suspended Constitution. The Constitution of the nation was suspended on April 15, 1980 after the PRC took power.

He said the Secretariat's research department is currently preparing a document that will outline, article by article, the suspended document with an interpretation of what each article is meant to say.

"This document, along with other ideas related to what were the difficiencies in the old, suspended Constitution— some of its pitfalls, as we see them, some of the problems it encountered and whether those problems were resolved, how they were resolved or what's needed to be done to resolve them, will be embedded within the Secretariat's document", he said.

Based upon the experiences of other prople's cultures and nations, Dr. Sawyer pointed out, the Commission's Secretariat will be able to put together a comprehensive document that will contain suggestive issues, he said.

He said attempts will be made to study other people's constitutions and procedures in solving their problems. But, he added, there will be no attempt to copy other constitutions.

He said it will be on this basis that the people will be in position to form an opinion."They will know then what a Constitution is and what is expected of them.The kind of imput they are expected to make "etc.

Dr. Sawyer said the Secretariat's document is expected to be ready for circulation within 14 days and shortly thereafter, it will be made available to the press and public.

The Constitutional Commission Chairman said efforts would be made to recognize the people in order to ensure that in a systematic way, they can make their imput in the process of the drafting of the New Libeian Constitution.

Dr. Sawyer also revealed that plans are currently afoot to supplement the $500,000 budget given the Commission, noting that already,preliminary contacts have been made with a number of international donor agencies and foundations with the view of soliciting needed funds to carry on the works of the Commission.

Asked if there would be any strings attached should the donor organizations consent to given the funds, Dr. Sawyer said no, "there would be no such strings attached."

PRICE STABILIZATION COMMITTEE IS SET UP

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 24 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

Commerce, Industry and Transportation Minister E. Sumo Jones has established a nine-man internal committee within the Ministry to find possible solutions to the spiraling prices of essential consumer items in the country.

The committee, to be known as Price Stabilization Committee, is being headed by Assistant Industry Minister Isaac Randolph, while Assistant Commerce Minister J. Sie Williams will serve as Co-Chairman.

Others on the committee set up at a senior staff meeting Monday are the Assistant Minister of Transportation, the Directors of Foreign Trade; Domestic Trade, Price Analysis and Marketing; Standards, Land Transportation, and the Information Division.

The Committee is charged with the responsibility of making studies and investigating into all aspects of the importation and delivery of consumers items into the country reasonably with minimum cost to the public.

Minister Jones, emphasizing the gravity of the price situation and the concern of the PRC Government to ensure that adequate supplies are available at reasonable costs to the average man on the street, said that it is for the welfare of the majority of the low income earners that the Ministry was undertaking this exercise intended to stabilize prices for consumer items in the country.

The Minister pointed out that in order to work effectively in the stabilization of consumer items, his Ministry, which is often blamed for price increases should at all times be consulted in future when there is need for adjustment to be made in Excise, Surcharge or other taxes that have direct effect on the consumer.

Touching on consumer-businessman relationship, Captain Jones noted the deterioration in their dealings. Because of this reason, he announced the reconstitution of the Consumers Grievance Committee to form an integral part of the Ministry whose responsibility it will be to handle complaints brought to its attention by the consuming public against the business community.

This Committee, headed by Deputy Commerce Minister Captain John G. Rancy, includes the Assistant Minister responsible for Commerce, Industry and Transportation. Other members are the Directors of Land Transport; Civil Aviation, Price Analysis and Marketing; and the Domestic Trade Division as well as the Commissioner of Insurance.

The reconstitution of this Committee is seen as a positive step by which Commerce Minister Jones, since his encumbency in less than a week is taking a step which is aimed at tackling some of the pressing issues affecting the consuming public.

TEN MAN COMMITTEE TO ASSESS ECONOMY

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 24 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

A 10-man committee to review the national economy and advise the People's Redemption Council on an appropriate course of action, has been established by the Head of State, C-I-C- Samuel K. Doe.

The committee is chaired by the Minister of Planning and Economic Affairs, Dr. Byron Tarr.

Other members of the committee include Finance Minister Major George Dunye, National Investment Commission Chairman Major Dew Mayson, Deputy Minister of State for Economic Affairs Captain Veronica Deagor, President of the Liberian Bank for Development and Investment David Vinton, and Mr. Randolph Thompson of the Citibank.

Other members are West African Agricultural Corporation President Charles D. Sherman, Lamco Administrative Manager Lami Kawah, National Bank Deputy Governor William Diggs, and Assistant Finance Minister for Revenue Henrietta Koening.

According to a release from the Executive Mansion issued Wednesday, the committee will examine the significant rise in the price of certain commodities, such as beer and stout, and the loss of "our competitive positions" as a transhipment point by the Freeport of Monrovia, and the strain imposed on all Liberians and those residing in the Liberian borders by the current tax structure.

Among others, the committee will consider the reconstruction tax, and the abolition of the hut tax.

The release said during its deliberations, the committee will also take into consideration, existing financial arrangements between the Government of Liberia and the International Monetary Fund.

According to the mandate from the Head of State, the committee should also review the new Four-Year Economic Development Plan, with the view of ascertaining its relevance to the overall situation in the country.

The Head of State stressed the urgency of the assignment, indicating that this exercise is designed to bring economic relief to the Liberian People and those residing in our borders, the release said.

LAMCO LOSS--Due to declining demand for steel on the world markets, the Lamco Joint Venture Operating Company in Yekepa, is expected to sustain a total loss of about $16m. by the end of 1981. Lamco President Mr. Arne Dahlstroem said during the first half of 1981, Lamco made a loss of $7.6 m. He said the $16m. loss Lamco expected to sustain this year was based on a projection of the company's current financial standing, coupled with the slump in world trade for steel. Meanwhile, the government has assured Lamco that it will do everything to keep the company in operation. There are to date about four thousand employees at Lamco of which more than 90 per cent are Liberians. Mr. Dahlstroem said deferred payments of dividends by Lamco to its shareholders and partners would amount to some $45 m. also by the end of 1981. Justice Minister Major Chea Cheapoo, who is a Liberian Board member of Lamco, recently expressed concern over what he called an increase in the production of iron ore at Lamco, "especially when the company claims not to be making profits." He said the government had wondered over the last two years "why a company would continuously increase production when it claims not to be generating much from sales." "We (the government) have noticed mysteries at Lamco concerning the mining and sale of iron ore," he said. Major Cheapoo said, "The same group of foreign (partners) who joined Liberia in the early '60's to open Mount Nimba are the same people digging the ore, selling it, and selling it to themselves." TRECIMO PROMISE TO PROVIDE WATER COMES TRUE

[Article by Paul Fauvet]

[Excerpts] A peasant woman stepped forward with a large pitcher in her hands and offered it to Marcelino dos Santos, FRELIMO Party Secretary for Economic Policy, "Comrade Secretary", she said, "this is the pitcher I used to put on my head every day to carry water from miles away. Now that the water is coming to my village, I don't need it any more".

This symbolic offer took place in the village of Ntoli in Mozambique's northeastern province of Cabo Delgado.

Ntoli situated on the Mueda plateau: Marcelino dos Santos had travelled there for the official inauguration of the plateau's new water supply system.

Access to water has been the single most important political issue on the Mueda plateau for the past 20 years.

One of the promises FRELIMO made to the peasants of the plateau was that after independence water would flow to their villages.

That promise has now been partially fulfilled.

The water system inaugurated in August (but which had, in fact, been operating on a "test-run" basis since June) supplies 10 villages whose total population is about 30 000.

For these villagers--especially for the women--their whole life style has been radically altered.

The daily search for water used to be the dominant fact in their existence.

Now an aluminium water tank stands gleaming in the centre of each village.

Nearby is a stand with four taps from which the villagers draw their water.

The water for the new system comes from the Mutamba River below the eastern edge of the plateau, and is pumped to a high point on the plateau about 700 metres above sea level.

From there it flows to the 10 villages by gravity.

The system provides enough water for about 20 litres a person a day (under colonialism the peasants were lucky if they got five litres each day).

The total length of piping involved in the Mutamba system is 48 kilometres.

The Mutamba system forms part of the "emergency phase" for the Mueda plateau water supply.

Also included in this phase are the upgrading and rehabilitation of Chomba and Muatide systems--systems built under colonialism, but to poor designs.

New pumps are being fitted, and in whole sections of these systems the old piping is being removed, and larger diameter pipes are being installed.

But, as part of the "emergency phase", a new system for Mueda town is being built, which will pump fresh water up directly from springs below the plateau. The water is perfectly clean, and will need no expensive filters.

Much of the finance and expertise for these water supply systems has come from UNICEF. So far UNICEF has put US$1,5 million into the emergency phase on the Mueda plateau.

It has supplied all the pumps, specialised equipment and technical inputs.

The Mozambican government has supplied the finance for local materials (such as cement), transport costs within the country, and the salaries of the Mozambican workers employed on the scheme.

But more money will be needed if every family on the Mueda plateau is to have a guaranteed supply of water within easy reach.

For when the emergency phase is completed (probably by the end of 1982), about 84 000 people will be supplied--rather more than half the total population.

To reach all 60 villages on the plateau (with a total population of around 160 000) three totally new systems will be needed (based at Matambalala, Cilindi and N'gangolo).

This is referred to as the "extension phase", and it will require at least another US$5 million (based on projected 1983 prices).--ZIANA-AIM

NATIONAL PARTY COULD ENTER ONE-MAN-ONE-VOTE ELECTION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

THE NATIONAL Party would possibly enter into a one-man-one-vote election in SWA but it remains opposed to a one-man-one-vote system of government for the Territory.

Mr Kosie Pretorius, leader of the NP, emphasised the distinction between a universal system of voting and a universal system of government, as viewed by the NP in SWA, during an interview with the Advertiser last week.

Recalling a decision taken at the last NP congress in August, Mr Pretorius said that "participation in any possible election under UN resolution 435 will be considered when the stage is reached and all the facts are considered."

Referring to the separate Cape Town talks last weekend which both Mr Pretorius and Mr Dirk Mudge held with SA Government representatives, Mr Pretorius said that he had basically been informed about the latest developments in the Western Five's initiative.

Mr Pretorius was then asked how he viewed the current speculation that the latest AG Proclamation AG 21 of this year which made provision for an expanded Ministers' Council might be used as a sugar-coated pill to induce the National Party to be co-opted on the interim Cabinet and therefore to become jointly responsible for all decisions taken affecting the Territory's future.

"Such an interpretation is not without its merits", he replied, but went on to stress two conditions which the NP would make in the event of it being invited to nominate a member or more to the Ministers' Council, which is composed exclusively of the Republican Party at present.

These conditions were that the possible NP member on the Ministers' Council would have to be regarded as representing the Territory's Whites on the Council, and that the NP would not trade any of its political principles for co-option on the Ministers' Council.

Mr Pretorius made it clear, however that at this stage no offer had been extended from the Ministers' Council to the NP members of the National Assembly, and any conditions which might be attached to such a possible offer were also not known.

Asked whether he was optimistic about the latest initiate that had emerged at Zürich recently, Mr Pretorius said he did not know enough about what it all entailed to pass comment.

He went on to say however that "if this initiative fails then it is final proof that the strategy is wrong, namely one in which an internationally-acceptable solution is to be forced on SWA in an election which I doubt would in any case be free and fair."

He added further that "I believe the time is ripe that the leaders of the various population groups in the country should first reach consensus on a nationally-acceptable solution which could then lead to an internationally-acceptable solution."

Mr Pretorius stated that the existing constitutional machinery in SWA should be used by all the internal parties in their search for a nationally acceptable solution, and that the existing constitutional machinery was available to Swapo also.

Turning to the question of minority rights in such a future constitution, he agreed that it was an important matter to be included, but regretted the fact that only the Whites had received mention in this respect.

SWAPO OFFICIAL QUESTIONS MILITARY CALL-UP

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] He was speaking to newsmen shortly after addressing about 150 people in the Black township neighbouring Okahandja, a farming town north of Windhoek.

Mr Shikongo had been taking part in a rally organised by the People's Action Committee, an organisation opposed to SWA's multiracial military call-up.

He said it was untrue that Swapo's military forces had been wiped out during the recent South African Defence Force operations in southern Angola.

"Swapo exists to fight to bring the country to independence, so it will continue to fight if negotiations fail and there is no election.

"It is my hope that elections will be held soon, the circumstances have never been better."

Mr Shikongo had told the gathering earlier that he was not a communist, but "oppression and suppression in Namibia are chasing me towards communism."

The Secretary General of the Namibia Independence Party, and a founder member of the Peoples' Action Committee, Mrs Ottilie Abrahams, told the rally: "Namibians are not prepared to take part in a war being waged to protect South Africa's apartheid policies.

"Whether you agree with Swapo's war or not, you cannot get away from the fact that it is Swapo's freedom fighters who are fighting to free this country.

"How can we be asked as mothers to give up our sons to fight those who are fighting for us?"

Mrs Abrahams said meetings should be held throughout the Territory to call for the repeal of the law which provided for multiracial military service in SWA.

Namibians were tired of waiting for independence, and immediate elections should be held under United Nations supervision, Mrs Abrahams added. – Sapa

NATIONAL PARTY URGED TO ADOPT NEW APPROACH

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Sep 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

Whither the National Party of SWA?

The question has become particularly relevant with the disappearance from the scene of former arch-leaders Mr A H du Plessis and Mr Eben van Zijl.

Many would probably argue that the party is on its last legs and that its role as such has become futile.

We disagree.

It is a necessary element of our democratic system.

It is also necessary to maintain the confidence of many Whites in SWA.

It can help to quell through reason the resurgence of White racism that is beginning to be felt in both SWA and SA.

And besides all that, there are a number of enormous challenges that are still open to the NP.

These include:

- Throwing in the party's lot with the real future of SWA; not threatening White exoduses across the Orange river;
- Coming to a relaxed and workable arrangement with all the country's population groups; not remaining accused of being racist in character;
- And helping to lead the entire nation to considerably greater heights; not casting the utmost suspicion and cynicism on everything that others do.

True, by adopting such an approach, the NP could lose considerable support to the HNP.

On the other hand, by adopting that approach, the NP will put the country's interests before the party's interests and put accommodation of the inevitable before confrontation and disaster, not least to the detriment of the Whites.

Overall, then, the NP is being asked to pay a high price to ensure a progressive and prosperous place in the sun for the conservative White in SWA.

But a necessary one.

EAST GERMANY LIFTS VEIL ON SWAPO AID

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by Aida Parker]

[Text]

EAST Germany's Marxist Government is becoming evermore bold in its disclosures of its Afrika Korps "arms-and-bread" support for Swapo.

Recently the East German news agency, ADN, disclosed that an aircraft of the national airline had landed in Berlin-Schonefeld with "90 Swapo patriots" and "30 revolutionary ANC supporters". They had been taken to the German Democratic Republic, said ADN, for three-year military training.

On its outward flight to Luanda, it was stated, the aircraft had carried "100 Swapo fighters" who had completed their training in the GDR and were being sent to reinforce Mr Sam Nujoma's forces as "presents of solidarity."

Earlier, ADN announced the arrival of 120 Swapo personnel in the GDR, these arriving both for military and medical training in the care of their wounded. Simultaneously, the office of President Erich Honecker stated that the GDR had increased its financial aid to Swapo.

CONTROL

With commendable frankness, East Berlin's "Nationalzeitung" suggested that this aid was not entirely without ulterior motive.

Elaborating, the paper said: "A success for Swapo, which will mean independence for Namibia, would be a hard blow for the profits of the multinational monopolies. It is well worthwhile to take control of it.

"Namibia is rich in gold, silver, platinum, diamonds, copper, manganese and tungsten, coal, steel and especially uranium.

"It is also of strategic importance."

In an appeal just launched on behalf of "30 000 Swapo refugees in Southern Angola", the publication "Neues Deutschland," mouthpiece of the GDR Communist Party, expressed its "total solidarity with the Namibian people in their fight against the South African racists."

BRIGADE

At the same time East Germany is sending yet another "Youth brigade" to Angola.

Members of the brigade — it will be the fifth in Angola — come from the paramilitary Society for Sport and Technology.

This innocent-sounding title masks its function as an officer training corps for the East German army.

Neues Deutschland said the brigade would work closely with specialists from Russia, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Cuba.

The French Press has also been taking a look at GDR support of Southern African "liberation movements." Under the heading "Swapo — A Privileged Ally of East Germany," Mr Jean-Paul Picaper of Le Figaro wrote last week:

"Like the USSR, the GDR is partly lifting the veil covering its relations with various states and "liberation movements" in the Third World."

ARMS DEPOTS

"First step in this direction was taken by Secretary-General Honecker in 1979, admitting East Berlin's contribution to the Ethiopian revolution, followed by Defence Minister Hoffman drawing attention to the East German arms depots established at the Ethiopian military base of Tatek.

"South Africa's military operation in southern Angola has served further to lift this veil."

Mr Picaper says that Swapo today has intensive "fraternal", "Brotherhood-in-Arms" relations with the Communist Parties of the USSR, GDR, Cuba and also the CP in West Germany, "but East Berlin is the pivot of the whole structure."

He adds: "Trade unions, communist youth organisations, journalistic associations of the GDR all train members of Swapo. It is known that an additional 600 Swapo members are studying in Cuba.

"The GDR does not only prepare them for armed struggle, but for all kinds of administrative and other occupations."

BATTALION

"Swapo personnel are also trained locally in Southern Angola, where a battalion of the East German army has its headquarters. It will be recalled that in February, 1978, an East German officer was killed by the South Africans, while last year more than 20 East German soldiers were killed when their aircraft was shot down by Unita forces.

"A month or so back a member of the Swapo hierarchy, Peter Mueshihange, thanked his "true friends," East Germany and the USSR, praising them as "the forces of liberation" and declaring that Marxism is "the only really liberating doctrine, a permanent source of happiness to mankind."

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 23 Sep 81 p 2

[Text]

A LOOSE alliance of rightwing groups has been formed to fight for continued White supremacy in SWA.

This was announced at the HNP congress in Pretoria by the General Secretary of the Party, Mr Louis Stofberg.

He said that Dr Connie Mulder of the National Conservative Party (NCP) and Mr Eugene TerreBlanche of the Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging (AWB), had responded to the HNP's call for unity on the SWA issue.

The call had been issued last Thursday by the Party's leader, Mr Jaap Marais, who told the congress that the first priority of the Right was "to save the Whites in SWA."

Mr Stofberg said that they would suffer the same fate as the Whites of Zimbabwe if SWA fell into the hands of either Swapo or Mr Dirk Mudge and his "mixed gang."

The day before yesterday, Dr Mulder and Mr TerreBlanche sent telegrams Mr Marais, pledging their support for the cause of White unity in SWA.

However, Mr Stofberg emphasised that there was no question of a formal coalition. A strategy to consolidate and mobilise Whites in the Territory would be planned as soon as possible.

On Thursday, Mr Marais had stressed that the HNP was only interested in an alliance with other groups if the party's policy and principles were not compromised.

But he pledged to take the lead in uniting the Right in SWA. This was in response to ultra-conservative moves which led to the formation of the "Action — Save White South Africa" group last week. The organisers, who included Dr Mulder and Mr TerreBlanche had hoped to draw in the HNP, but their overtures were rejected.

In an obvious reference to the NP's SWA policy, Mr Stofberg warned that anyone who caused a "disaster" in the Territory would be brought to book.

He said that the HNP regarded SWA as part of the Republic. If the HNP gained power, it would re-unite SWA with South Africa, even if the Territory had become independent in the meantime.

At the weekend, the leader of the HNP in SWA, Mr Sarel Becker, said that the NP had a calculated scheme to drive conservative Afrikaners out of the Territory by forcing integration.

By ridding itself of the SWA problem, he said, the Government would only be drawing the guerrilla war right on to South Africa's borders.

POLITICAL SCIENTIST URGES GREATER NAMIBIANIZATION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 23 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by Andre du Pisani]

[Text] Andre Du Pisani, Senior Lecturer in Political Science at Unisa and an avid observer of SWA affairs, gives a rundown in this article of the political process in our country as he sees it at present.

The writer has been criss-crossing the Territory for the past fortnight and returned to Pretoria on Friday. He wrote this article just prior to leaving. The observations make interesting reading.

THE PURPOSE of this exploratory article is to share some ideas and impressions gained by a recent research visit to SWA.

No effort will be made to develop those ideas and impressions but merely to state them and to leave it to the reader to draw his/her own conclusions.

SEGMENTARY POLITICS

Most observers of the local politico-economic scene agree that SWA is undergoing a process of change and reconstructioin. However, there seems to be little agreement among the various political forces and factions on either the rate or the mechanisms of change. To say nothing of the medium and long-term objectives associated with such processes of transition.

This seems hardly surprising given the German and South African legacies of colonial rule. The latter in particular not only practised the politics of ethnic fragmentation — an example replicated to a considerable extent by the DTA — but also that of incorporation.

The legacy of all this has been a highly segmented political system which lacks in integrative symbols, leadership and localised institutions such as an indigenous bureaucracy. The segmentary nature of the politics of SWA also implies that the politico-social fabric of society is affected by change at different rates and levels of intensity.

Political change tends to produce new particulars, such as a small urbanised bourgeoisie, a pseudo political elite quite removed from the aspirations and interests of their constituents, special patron-client relationships in the bureaucracy or the mobilization of particular groups on ethnic grounds. Any close analysis of the local scene will reveal a combination of these particularisms.

INSTITUTIONS BUT NO INSTITUTIONALISATION

A further observation is that change has predominantly — at least up till now — been associated with a process of institution building. Most of the institutional trimmings are there — a National Assembly, a Council of Ministers' and various ethnic representative authorities — yet are these institutions institutionalized? To put it differently: do the people of this land regard these institutions as legitimate?

After all, authority can only be defined as legitimate if other members of the political system acknowledge the right and accordingly feel obliged to acquiesce or obey the authority exercised by a particular party or coalition of parties on their behalf.

In the case of the DTA it can be argued that its dependence on Pretoria — a process no doubt actively encouraged by Pretoria — and on a largely externally run bureaucracy, undercut the party's ability to generate both local leadership and to develop its own legitimate systems of authority.

The DTA leadership will have to calculate the political costs both internally and externally of their dependence on Pretoria very carefully and realistically.

SYMBOLIC USES OF POLITICS

As an observer of the SWA scene one is constantly struck by the absence of national symbols. The symbols that are operative are either exclusive (Republic Day, the flag) or nativistic (Witbooi festival, Mbanderu Day etc). The DTA hardly projects the symbols of independence and decolonization. Some would even argue that it is incapable of doing so.

Whatever one's particular point of view of Swapo, this movement has been arguably far more successful in projecting the symbols of independence and decolonization – significantly also from South African control.

One Nama spokesman put it graphically when he told me. "What we are experiencing is Odendaal with a human face." To him and many others the DTA signifies status quo politics. It is not projecting the symbols of independence and decolonisation. It is perceived to be a captive of Pretoria.

The politics and economy of the country will have to be increasingly Namibianized with an emphasis on nation buildings as distinct from one of mere institution-building. This process also seems to require and acceleration of education, social welfare and administrative training.

IDEOLOGY RECONSIDERED

Ideology is often used (in much the same way as ethnicity) to explain all the complexities of SWA politics. Without denying the relevance of these factors, it needs to be pointed out, that the alleged irreconcilability between say "socialism" and "capitalism" or between "democracy" and "marxism" has but limited meaning to the people of this country.

To them their political support will go to whatever party that in their perception can materially improve their chances to control their own destiny. In this respect the prevailing anti-South African attitude that characterises the politics of various parties should not be underestimated.

These are but some of the impressions that might be of interest, even concern to the people of this disputed land.

BRIEFS

AMERICAN FACT-FINDING MISSION—Two Americans are presently in Windhoek on a brief fact-finding mission after visiting Swakopmund and Walvis Bay at the weekend. Mr Dennis Keogh, who is Councellor for Political Affairs at the US Embassy in Pretoria told The Advertiser this morning that his visit to SWA this week is only "remotely connected" to the current Zurich talks. He described his visit to the Territory as a regular exercise forming part of his work at the Embassy. "I came to SA 14 months ago and this is my fifth or sixth visit to SWA," he said. Mr Keogh is accompanied on his visit by Miss T Bryant, a Research Officer attached to the American State Department in Washington. Both leave Windhoek for Pretoria today. PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE SPOKESMAN NOTES ILO RURAL PROGRAMS' FOREIGN AID

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE ILO pilot labour intensive rural public work programmes launched in 1979 in Dodoma, Arusha, Rukwa and Ruvuma regions, have already attracted external financial assistance of 75.5m/-, a spokesman of the Prime Minister's Office told Shihata yesterday.

He said the biggest donation of 41.03m/- was from the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA) and is being used to improve rural roads, afforestation, rural housing and other projects in Ruvuma Region.

The Netherlands Government has made a contribution of 27.898m/- followed by a contribution of 6.908m/- from the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG).

Other donors are the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

The Netherlands funds are being used for flood control at Mto-wa-Mbu in Arusha Region (12.218m/-), small scale irrigation scheme in Dodoma Region (3.35m/-) and for rural water supply in Rukwa Region (12.33m/-), the official said.

The FRG, OPEC and UNDP funds, he said, are being used to improve roads in rural areas of Rukwa Region.

The amount so far contributed is part of an estimated sum of 205m/- from external donors out of a total estimated sum of over 290m/- needed for the implementation of the pilot project in the four regions, the official said.

He also said that fellowships have been offered to 80 local personnel engaged in the programme to study in India and Bangladesh.

In addition, four seminars for local staff involved in the projects at district and village levels has been conducted and a region seminar would be conducted in November this year, he said.

The project, initiated at different periods since 1979 are progressing well under supervision of ten economists and engineers from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

STATE WITHDRAWS EMIGRATION TREATMENT ADMISSIBLE TO CITIZENS

Bank of Tanzania Circulars

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE government has withdrawn, with immediate effect, emigration treatment admissible to Tanzanians and foreign nations normally resident in the country.

A circular issued by the Bank of Tanzania on August 31 and which was made available in Dar es Salaam this week, said foreign exchange facilities would, therefore, not be granted to such persons for settlement abroad.

It added, however, that Tanzanians and foreign nationals resident in the country who were unable to maintan themselves and their dependants for valid reasons would be granted the exchange facilities on merit.

The treatment to be given to aged people or those with physical infirmity joining close relatives settled abroad would be won by genuine applicants with adequate documentary evidence, the circular said.

"Such emigration would be considered by the bank of Tanzania purely on compassionate grounds, on submission of an application in the prescribed form, duly supported by adequate documentary evidence", the circular emphasised.

Another circular issued by the Bank said Tanzanians and foreign nationals living in the country would have to channel their bookings for passage abroad through the bank beginning October 1 this year.

The requirement, it said, would cover travellers whose tickets had been paid for and travel expenses met by non-resident sponsors. Foreign diplomatic staff and officials of UN organisations and their affiliates including their families would be exempted, the circular said.

Prior approval of the bank would be required even if the sponsors abroad paid the passage money and travel expenses in foreign exchange, the circular emphasised.

It said the bank would need to satisfy itself that the proposed foreign travel would not directly or otherwise involve compensatory payment or result in delay or nullification of payment receivable in foreign exchange by the person resident in the country.

The circular explained that in cases where applicants were proceeding abroad for studies or gainful employment, the bank would approve their passage bookings after payment of fare by the sponsors.

Individuals travelling abroad under hospitality of private sponsors would be considered on merit of each case, the circular said.

It explained that expatriates in government departments, parastatal organisations or private concerns in the country who are paid salaries in local currency would be bound by the exchange control measure, even if the journey in question is paid for abroad in foreign exchange.

Expatriates would, however, have to merely apply to the bank through a relevant airline, shipping company or travel agent, giving the essential particulars and documents, the circular said.

"Airlines, shipping companies and travel agents should ensure that no travel ticket is issued to Tanzanian nationals or foreign nationals normally resident in the country unless the applicants have secured approval of the bank", the circular emphasised.

Context of Bank's Decisions

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE Government has been announcing from time to time measures aimed at conserving, and rationalising the expenditure of foreign exchange for maximum national benefit.

Even at the time when the national economy was in a better shape, the Government was guided by the wisdom of allocating foreign exchange to areas yielding optimal returns in economic and social sectors.

Such an approach to the allocation of foreign exchange of necessity involved sacrifices and belt-tightening by the few for the benefit of the whole society.

It is thus not surprising that the Government has now introduced even more stringent conditions to govern foreign exchange allocations with regard to some cases.

It is common knowledge that Tanzania is currently going through its most difficult economic period since Independence, with external and natural factors combining to provide the stiffest challenge to the Nation.

The country, already one of the poorest in the world, has found itself victim to a soaring energy import bill, now consuming over half of the total foreign exchange earnings, and escalating prices of imported capital goods.

Faced with this situation, the Government has been forced to introduce energy conservation measures in an effort to bring down the huge energy import bill.

These measures affect both public and private enterprises and individuals.

Increasing costs of importing fuel and capital goods, in turn, caused the government to re-arrange its import priorities because the country's importing capacity has been seriously eroded.

Such periodical adjustments and readjustments do, of necessity, require more and more sacrifices from each one of us interested in the well-being of the country.

This is the context in which the latest decisions announced by the Bank of Tanzania on the withdrawal of emigration treatment and on new travel booking system for a specific category of travellers must be seen.

The measures are not designed to cause undue hardships. For genuine cases will be treated with compassion and understanding. Rather, they are calculated as a check against abuse.

TRC GENERAL MANAGER DETAILS RAILROADS' NEEDS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Text] The Tanzania Railway Corporation (TRC) needs 6,040 billion/- to improve services over the next 15 years.

TRC General Manager Tom Mmari told the Daily News in Dar es Salaam yesterday that five billion shillings of the amount would be a foreign component at 1980 prices.

One of the priority areas would be reconditioning of the central 2,600 kilometre line, 33 per cent of which is over 65 years old, he said.

Ndugu Mmari said 96m/- worth of spare parts are needed, and 56m/- would be spent on the Morogoro diesel maintenance depot.

Other expenditure relates to track rehabilitation (1,120m/-), new railway college (96m/-) and training (160m/-).

He further reported that technical assistance and yard improvement would account for 80m/- and eight million/- respectively.

Others are housing (256m/-), basic telecommunication network 112m/-), wagon control network (16m/-), wagons (2,240m/-), mechanization of maintenance (24m/-), sleepers reconditioning plant 16m/- and briges 264m/-).

More projects are Luiche bridge area (Kigoma Region) (16m/-), highway vehicles and maintenance (16m/-) breakdown equipment (eight million/-) and new Morogoro stores (eight million/-).

Carriages would cost 600m/-; while 32m/- would be spent at TRC headquarters. The telephone system PABX (long distance) would cost 16m/- while electric signals and locomotives would cost 16m/- and 736m/- respectively. Some eight million/- would be spent on interlocking signals.

Others are Dar es Salaam wagon repairs (eight million/-), carriage examination facilities (eight million/-), Dar es Salaam Diesel facilities (40m/-), Tabora carriage shop (40m/-) crossing loops (16m/-), new Tabora stores (eight million/-), permanent way shop (16m/-) and teleprinter network (eight million/-).

Ndugu Mmari has meanwhile announced that the Austrian Government had given TRC a grant of about 19 million/- for a track laying machine.

He said the corporation needed about 12 quarries for ballasts worth about 240m/-. The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) would provide one plant worth 20m/- through a grant, he said.

The general manager said the European Economic Community (ECC) could provide two small quarry machines worth 30 million/-. Negotiations to that effect are underway, he added.

He also announced that Kuwait had offered 176 million/- for spare parts, tools and other equipment.

SPDT PETROLEUM EXPLORATION AGREEMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 18 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE Tanzania Government and the newly formed oil company, Shell Petroleum Development Tanzania (SPDT) Ltd have signed a four-year agreement providing SPDT some 72,000 sq kms for petroleum exploration in the country.

The agreement signed in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Minister for Water and Energy, Ndugu Al Noor Kassum and the SPDT Director in the country, Francois Gills van Hoogstraten, is the first to be drawn under the provisions of the Petroleum (Exploration and Production) Act of 1980.

Under the agreement, Shell will explore for oil and gas over some 72,000 square kilometres of land south of Dar es Salaam. The area covered runs diagonally from Kisarawe to Songea in southern Tanzania. It however excludes the eastern coastal strip which is currently being prospected for oil by the Agip Africa Ltd.

The agreement to cover four years but subject to renewal, provides for two years to be spent on exploratory work and the remaining period to be utilised on extension work. Reconnaissance work starts immediately.

The Ministry said that full responsibility for the risk of capital involved in the exploration activities will rest with Shell adding that such cost would only be subject to recovery in the event of discovering oil worth of commercial exploitation.

The agreement specifies that petroleum found in the exploration area will be shared between Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation (TPDC) and SPDT under the production sharing agreement which besides providing Tanzania with the majority share will also make provision for an additional profits tax to be paid to the government.

DODOMA'S EIGHT GROWTH ZONES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

A number of industries are coming up in the eight growth zones around Dodoma and would greatly reduce an otherwise major influx of people into the country's new capital, an official of the Capital Development Authority (CDA) said in Dar es Salaam on Tuesday.

CDA's senior regional planner, Ndugu T.M. Makalla told the ongoing conference on plan implementation and human settlements administration in Tanzania at the Ardhi Institute in Dar es Salaam specialist studies on the district immediately around Dodoma had also been made and the final report would be submitted by next February.

Speaking on the implementation of the Dodoma City Master Plan, Ndugu Makalla said the studies on Dodoma District served as pilot projects for similar work further afield and "eventually throughout the impact area when the required funds are available".

Ndugu Makalla explained that master plans would be prepared for the eight growth centres — Singida, Manyoni, Kondoa, Babati, Kiteto, Mpwapwa, Kilosa and Iringa. The plans for Iringa and Kilosa had been completed, he disclosed, adding that those for Singida and Babati were being prepared.

He listed the industries in the growth areas as a cotton ginnery and shoe manufacturing plant constructed and operating in Singida; a sisal carpet factory built at Kilosa in Morogoro region with the assistance of the Republic of Ireland; a planned extension of the fruit and vegetable canning plans at Iringa; a wood working factory at Manyoni; milling facilities at Kiteto and Babati, and a highway service area at Babati.

TANESCO MANAGER NOTES COMPANY'S MAIN PROBLEM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Sep 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt]

LACK of adequate and prompt information from institutions or individuals on their future expansion programmes is the main problem that hampers smooth distribution of electricity to consumers, the Distribution Manager of the Tanzania Electric Supply Company (TANESCO) Ndugu V.H. Poonja, said yesterday.

Speaking at the week-long conference on plan implementation and human settlements administration in Tanzania, Ndugu Poonja said it was essential for TANESCO to keep abreast with new development of industries, housing or any other undertaking that would require more power for its operation in order to ensure a smooth flow of high quality and satisfactory amount of power to its consumers.

"TANESCO therefore continually keeps review of this by ascertaining the existing loads and conditions, investigating future loads and finally deciding the most efficient and economic design to satisfy all requirements", he told participants at the Ardhi Institute where the conference is taking place.

Ndugu Poonja explained that the problem of non-notification over increased power consumption was particularly serious with domestic consumers.

"A domestic consumer may decide to add one or more air conditioners or cookers in his house without taking into account the fact that the electric service line to his house may not have been constructed to match that increased load demand", he explained.

He said this resulted in voltage drops, and the consumer experienced dim lighting or fuse failure and subsequently started blaming TANESCO for poor quality of electricity supply.

CAUSE OF SOAP SHORTAGE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 18 Sep 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Minister of Trade, Ndugu Alit Mchumo, has called for patience from the public in the face of soap shortage caused by lack of raw materials.

Addressing a rally in Mtoni area Temeke District, on Wednesday, the Minister, who is also MP for the district, assured the people that normal supply of toiler and laundry soap would resume after the arrival of caustic soda and other raw materials within a few weeks.

Many soap manufacturing industries have cut or stopped production because of the raw materials shortage.

On the sugar shortage, Ndugu Mchumo said the national total production of 90,000 tonnes a year was far from meeting the national annual requirements of 200,000 tonnes.

He pointed out that this was a serious deficiency which caused serious impace on the local market. However, the Minister said Dar es Salaam residents should count themselves lucky for other Tanzanians living up-country sometimes went without sugar for months.

Ndugu Mchumo also announced at the rally that the ministry had appointed a committee to study the operations of the Dar es Salaam Textile Company (DARTEX) to explore means of better textile distribution in the region. The committee would report to the minister in a month's time.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS CONSULTANTS' PROPOSALS TO SCRAP AFC

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 27 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Government has rejected recommendations by consultants to scrap the Agriculture Finance Company when the proposed Agriculture Development Bank is established.

Minister of State for Agriculture and Water Development Mr Noah Dilamonu said in an interview that the AFC would continue to play an important role in meeting the needs of small and medium-sized farmers to enable them to carry out their operations.

This is the first official indication that the Government has not accepted all recommendations by consultants from the United States brought in to advise on the setting up of the Agricultural Development Bank.

Informed sources within the Rural Development Corporation said the consultants had, in the report which they prepared for the Government, noted that the Agricultural Finance Company and the Cattle Finance Company had been operating poorly because political influence interfered with the granting of loans.

As a result of this the two organisations were "owed millions of Kwacha" by various individuals including top Party and Government leaders.

Mr Dilamonu said the proposed bank would be given a free hand to operate as a viable commercial undertaking without undue political interference.

The bank will soon take off the ground and a short list of its senior executives had already been drawn up. President Kaunda is expected to announce the appointments.

The consultants are understood to have advised that the bank would collapse if political interference from senior Party and Government officials was allowed — as had been the case with the AFC and the Cattle Finance Company.

Once the bank becomes operational, only individuals and groups proved to be good farmers would be lent money. The idea behind the setting up of the bank is to transform peasants into commercial farmers to boost agricultural output.

The bank was created by an Act of Parliament in 1975 with an initial capital of K75 million.

MINISTER SAYS FREE PRESS DOES NOT EXIST

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Sep 81 p 5

[Text]

A FREE Press does not exist anywhere in the world, said Minister of State for Information and Broadcasting Services Mr John Banda.

Closing a six-week basic journalism course for Government mass media staff, Mr Banda said there was no free Press as the Press was controlled by its owners.

Mr Banda said the concept of a free Press was an imagination of journalists. The journalists who do not understand this will end up without jobs.

"Don't bite the hand that feeds you in the name of a free Press. You may end up without a job. In short, there is no such a thing as free Press, it is an illusion, a creation of journalists," Mr Banda said.

The minister said it was wrong for Western countries to claim that they had a free Press and that the Press in the East was muzzled.

Mr Banda noted that Press freedom was a controversial question that had been discussed widely in Zambia and elsewhere in the world.

Mr Banda stressed that while journalists might have their own views, such views should be subordinate to those of the Party and its Government since the State was their employer.

The minister called on journalists to understand the aims of the Party and become partners, in the effort to establish a humanist society through socialist policies.

For Zambia to be able to realise her humanist ideals and translate them into realities, it is vital that all those responsible for manning various political, economic and social institutions be well vested in the philosophy of Humanism.

The minister told the 25 participants drawn from Zambia Information and Broadcasting Services and Zambia News Agency that their success depended on their efforts to implement what they learnt.

The course which started last month was sponsored by the Association of Journalists of the German Democratic Republic and the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting.

Manpower

Mr Banda thanked the German association for rendering an invaluable service to Zambia's manpower development programme for journalists.

He assured the Germans that the Party and its Government was working towards the establishment of a humanistic society through socialist principles.

"We are committed only to socialist policies whose ultimate goals are to create an harmonious and a democratic humanist state," he said. — Times Reporter/

ZULU: SOME GOVERNMENTS TRAINING ZAMBIANS TO OVERTHROW REGIME

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

SECRETARY of State for Defence and Security Zulu yesterday said some foreign governments and international organisations were training Zambians abroad to overthrow the Government.

He did not name the governments or organisations, but Mr Zulu told a meeting of Party officials in Ndola's Broadway Cinema hall that the nation must be more vigilant than ever before.

"Their main targets are Zambian businessmen, intellectuals, politicians and other people in influential positions. The art of subverting authority is so complicated that only constant alertness can save a nation."

People must be on the lookout for rumour-mongers, Party and Government critics because these were among Zambians being used by foreign powers and international organisations to discredit the Party and its Government so that the masses could rise against the leadership.

Mr Zulu, who is on a ten-day tour of the Copperbelt Province to discuss the present crime wave and general security situation with provincial and district security committees, said foreign powers and organisations were capable of influencing the running of the Party and its Government by bribing ministers and Party officials.

The Party and its Government had no quarrel with those who wanted to change the status quo peacefully, but opposed the use of violence to achieve this objective.

"Those who use dirty tricks to change the leadership will be frustrated and we shall make sure they don't succeed. There are proper channels one has to follow if he wants to be a leader."

Some of these people were disgruntled dissidents who had been dismissed from the Party and its Government because of their inefficiency and were now working against legitimate authority.

MCC SAYS ZAMBIA-MALAWI BORDER DISPUTE 'SENSATIONALIZED'

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 26 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE BORDER differences between Zambia and Malawi are being sensationalised by people who are jealous of the political stability in the Eastern Province.

Mr Joshua Mumpanshya, Member of the Central Committee for the province, said in Lusaka yesterday that some people were adversely cultivating small personal differences among individuals across the border to the detriment of relations between the two countries.

He refuted reports that Malawian Young Pioneers and Special Branch officers had entered Zambia last month and drawn up a new border in Lundazi district.

It was reported that the Young Pioneers had claimed five Zambian villages, namely, Khulamayembe, Gunya, Gomani, Chipakala and Mbang'ombe, all in the northern part of Lundazi district.

Mr Mumpanshya said he had been surprised to read the alleged Young Pioneers' activities in the Press because his office had not received any complaints from the people in the disputed area.

However, full investigations were instituted and it was found that no Pioneers or any other Malawian officials had drawn up a border nor claimed any Zambian land, he said.

Asked where the reports had originated from, the MCC said he was aware that some people had been jealous of the political tranquillity which has existed in the province for a long time.

He said these people were aware of the artificiality of the border between the two sister countries and often, relatives living in villages on either side of the border had personal differences.

"Our boundaries are so artificial that we have relatives living on either side of the border. Personal differences between such people are being cultivated to the detriment of the good relations between our two countries," Mr Mumpanshya said.

Mr Mumpanshya said, in fact, the border relations between Zambia and Malawi were presently "superb."

He explained that there was no way the headmen who were reported to have been interviewed by the Young Pioneers could have failed to report the matter to his office because the Party in the province was well organised.

The MCC warned against sensitionalising small and insignificant differences because the border issue was sensitive and touched on the security of the nation.

As head of the province, he had a task to ensure good relations between Zambia and Malawi so that when Zambians visit the neighbouring country, they are not harrassed because of some irresponsible reports.

Mr Mumpanshya stated that the maintenance of good relations depended on how the two countries handled the border issue and unfounded reports would not help this.

BULAWAYO NOTES DROP IN UNIP MEMBERSHIP, RISE IN CRIME

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

PARTY membership in Lusaka Province has dropped drastically over the past three years, Member of the Central Committee Mr Fines Bulawayo reported to the provincial conference in Kafue yesterday.

In 1978 membership stood at 27,087, falling to 27,016 in 1979 and 20,646 this year.

He also reported that police were failing to investigate 80 per cent of reported crimes while crop production had risen by marginal levels.

Despite these facts, Mr Bulawayo told the 300 delegates from the province's three districts that the Party was becoming "quite popular."

Compared with other official reports the membership, crime and agriculture productivity in the area showed grave decline.

An official analysis of "section council registers, membership and section election returns" produced by Freedom House last year shows that the province should have 76,547 Party members.

The analysis was prepared for the UNIP grassroots elections which had been spaced over two years.

In his report yesterday, Mr Bulawayo said the membership was now 20,646.

This confirms that it is still a major decline from the 1978/79 provincial report presented to the National Council which reflected a membership of 27,087 at the end of 1978 and 27,016 in 1979.

He conceded in the report that the membership was dropping, but explained to the Times of Zambia later that when individual district reports were made public today they might "reflect a better picture" from latest grassroots information.

So far 48,088 membership cards are unsold for the Party main body, 25,385 cannot be sold by the Youth League and the Women's League still has 11,331 cards lying in their offices.

A careful perusal of Mr Bulawayo's report indicates a threatening situation.

Between January and August 19,338 crimes were reported to police. Out of this there have been only 609 arrests, 185 convictions and 42 acquittals.

But 2,304 of the crimes remain undetected and 16,807 pending — investigations still remain inconclusive. This represents 80 per cent of reported crimes.

The high crime rate means that 2,148 offences are being committed every month in the province, bringing the daily average to 70.

Mr Bulawayo told delegates: "In order to reduce crime in the province special squads for night patrols have been introduced and there is hope that the situation will improve."

Most of the crimes which remain inconclusively investigated are murder, aggravated robbery, abduction, arson and house-breaking and of 21 reported escapees from lawful custody only two were captured in the last nine months.

SUGAR COMPANY CHAIRMAN REVIEWS FIRM'S PROGRESS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

THE Zambia Sugar Company made a K1 million profit during the financial year ended March 31, 1981.

During the same period the company for the first time entered the export market.

The overall performance of the company in financial terms was similar to last year when the profit was K1,058,000 compared with K1,093,000 this year.

Chairman of the company Mr Dixie Zulu, who is Indeco managing director, says in his report that the profit is an inadequate return on the K70 million invested in the company.

But he says in the past years operations have demonstrated a steady upward trend in production and sales volume. This has resulted in absorbing inflationary trends on the higher tonnage throughout.

Mr Zulu adds that regrettably, cash flow during this period has not been adequate enough to maintain the momentum of earlier years in terms of investment.

"Therefore there is relatively little scope in 1981 and 1982 to significantly increase production from existing planted area and so more fully utilise the available industrial capacity".

During the period under review the company ground 1,000,000 tonnes of cane and sold 100,000 tonnes of sugar.

"I am therefore pleased to confirm that sales for the year totalled 105,358 tonnes although favourable yield figures meant that only 919,717 tonnes of cane had to be ground to produce a total of 110,601 tonnes of raw sugar."

Prospects for the 1981 crop are mixed in terms of the company's technical performance, although he is hopeful that recent progress will continue.

As a company which is agro-based, it is to some extent vulnerable to weather patterns which can lead to poorer cane yields and qualities towards the end of the 1981 crop as a consequence of the long wet season and low level of sunshine hours recorded between November 1980 and April 1981.

A further constraint is likely to arise from foreign exchange scarcities which might limit overseas purchases of spare parts and other materials for the 1981/82 off crop season.

"Nevertheless we should at least equal last year's production, and in profit terms produce in excess of K2.5 million," he says.

The director's report contained in the same annual report says the company has gone into the export market.

Modest tonnages were sold in small lots to Burundi and Zaire while molasses was exported to Zimbabwe.

PRICING SYSTEM AFFECTING SUGAR COMPANY'S PROFITABILITY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

THE Zambia Sugar Company is worried about the pricing system which is affecting its profitability levels.

And it is dissatisfied with the rate of cane supplies, saying that although there had been progress on the outgrowers scheme, the impact would not be felt until the 1983 crop.

This is contained in the company's annual report for the year ended March 31, 1981 released in Lusaka at the weekend.

Although the year under review was satisfactory, the continuing problems of sugar pricing remained unsolved and therefore profitability remained low.

The concomitant cash/flow constrains precluded the company from continuing its field development on available land and from making other cost-saving investments.

"As predicted last year, cane supplies are causing concern and although progress on the outgrowers is being made, there will be little impact until 1983."

It says progress was made in crops other than sugar. Maize was grown and the soya/wheat rotation was extended onto a small area of the replant cane land to give a break between successive sugar crops.

New activities undertaken during the year included the growing of sugar beans for internal consumption and experimental pilot plot of rice on land previously ravaged by floods from Kafue river.

ARMY ENGINEERS CEASE LANDMINE CLEARANCE IN TWO DISTRICTS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 26 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

ARMY engineers have abandoned clearing landmines in Livingstone and Kalomo districts because of lack of fuel and transport, according to a report to the Southern Province Council.

The report, prepared by Southern Province permanent secretary, Mr Ian Sikazwe, says the Army had completed clearing landmines in Gwembe district, but the exercise was now at a standstill.

To clear Kalomo district of landmines the Army had estimated that at least five troop carriers would be needed and Army headquarters had been requested to obtain the vehicles from civil authorities because the Army had none.

The report says that engineers had estimated that they would complete the whole exercise of clearing more than 1,000 kilometres in the two districts within three months.

But it was emphasised that with the coming of the rainy season the operation could be deferred to next year if the required logistics backing was lacking.

The report also says that although the mines had been cleared in Gwembe, many of the roads were not open to traffic because of damaged bridges and roads.

According to the report, Army engineers have found it difficult to repair the roads because only two graders are available and civilian operators are reluctant to work in the area.

Gwembe district governor, Mr Phillemon Chipeso, said this week that the district council has already submitted estimates to the Government for the reconstruction of roads and bridges damaged in the liberation war.

Mr Chipeso and member of the Central Committee, Mr Maxwell Beyani have complained that the district is least developed in the country because of its troubled history.

NEW AUSTRALIAN COOPERATION AGREEMENTS TO BE WORKED OUT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Zambia and Australia today agreed to work out a new cooperation agreement that will increase trade between the two countries and cement further bilateral relations.

The decision to intensify economic ties was reached during talks between President Kaunda and Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser at government house as Dr Kaunda continued his five-day state visit to Australia.

The two governments pledged to examine on-going projects in Zambia with a view to increasing joint cooperation.

Briefing ZANA at the end of the talks, special assistant for Press Mr Milimo Punabantu said Australia would look into new areas in which it could help Zambia.

He said the two leaders charged their ministries of agriculture to find new areas of cooperation.

Australia would help Zambia with more maize storage silos and expert personnel and would analyse the soil along Tazara to find its suitability for crop production.

Pledged

In another agreement Australia has pledged its readiness to help in training Zambia's agricultural personnel.

The pledge was made by south Australian state minister for agriculture Mr Ted Chapman when Dr Kaunda visited the wine and wheat producing Barossa valley, 76 km north-east of here.

The President flew back to Adelaide this morning in a royal Australian air force plane.

He visited vineyards and the Roseworthy agricultural college, an agricultural and research institution specialising in wheat variety research which has offered to train Zambians in wheat production,

The President said he appreciated the readiness of the Australian government to assist Zambia develop her agricultural industry through its vast experience.

"Zambia wants to go into full scale wheat production and will need help from Australia which has similar conditions as Zambia.

"Zambia will require training facilities as well as experts to guide agricultural staff in crop production."

NGWEZI RIVER BRIDGE OPENED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 7

[Excerpt]

Mr Liso said this when he opened a K230,000 bridge across the Ngwezi river, about 40 kilometres west of Zimba, constructed by the roads department.

Referring to the bridge, Mr Liso said what the colonial government had failed to achieve in 70 years the Zambian Government had done it in only 17 years.

The bridge links Kalomo to Chief Nyawa, one of the most productive agricultural areas.

As Mr Liso was addressing thousands of people witnessing the official opening of the bridge, several heavy duty trucks were ferrying maize from rural depots in Chief Nyawa's area to the line of rail.

Earlier Chief Nyawa thanked the Government for building the bridge, saying in the past farmers were discouraged from producing more because of lack of market.

With the opening of the bridge his people would produce more.

Witnessed

Speaking at the same function, Chief Musokotwane, whose area has now been linked with chiefs Mukuni and Nyawa, said it was only ten months ago when he witnessed the drowning of five people who were trying to cross the flooded Ngwezi river in search of food.

"If there had been a bridge by then that tragedy would have not occurred. That is why we are thanking the Party and its Government for this bridge which I personally look upon as a milestone."

He appealed to the authorities to rid Kalomo of tsetse fly which had killed more than 8,000 heads of cattle in the past few months.

Villagers celebrated the occasion with the slaughter of two cattle and a pig on the bridge.

Local brews flowed freely as guests, who included Southern Province political secretary Mr Franklin Malawo, permanent secretary Mr Ian Sikazwe, several governors and MPs were entertained to traditional dances.

ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS' DEPORTATION--The deportation of illegal immigrants in the country is continuing, acting permanent secretary in the Ministry of Home Affairs Mr Evans Silimukulwa has said. He declined to disclose the number of aliens affected by the move after Prime Minister Mundia's directive last month that illegal immigrants must be deported immediately they were spotted. Speaking through his secretary, Mr Silimukulwa said the deportation exercise "is a continuous process". [Text] [Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 27 Sep 81 p 1]

CTU'S CLOSED-DOOR MEETINGS--The Zambia Congress of Trade Unions yesterday held a closed-door council meeting in the Mineworkers Union of Zambia's Katilungu House. Delegates were tight-lipped about its outcome. On Friday the ZCTU held an executive meeting at which the condition of the detained labour leaders who were visited by the congress officials a few weeks ago was reviewed. It is believed the same subject was discussed by the council yesterday. [Text] [Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 27 Sep 81 p 1]

DOUBLING OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION--Agricultural production has doubled since last year, Prime Minister Mundia said on arrival in Kasama at the weekend when he addressed thousands of people at the forest plantation. Mr Mundia who had come from Mbala said the story of Agriculture in all places he had visited had been that of success. He was impressed with Kasama which had doubled its production from 28,000 to 56,000 bags in the 1980/81 season. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 1]

SOUTHERN PROVINCE 'MEAT BELT'--The Party and its Government is determined to make Southern Province the "meatbelt" by the end of this decade, provincial Member of the Central Committee Mr Mungoni Liso said at the weekend. He said by 1990 the province should produce enough meat for local consumption and export. This was why all measures were being undertaken to control livestock diseases in the region. Mr Liso said this when he opened a K230,000 bridge across the Ngwezi river, about 40 kilometres west of Zimba, constructed by the roads department. The Party and its Government was aware that the province was not only productive in crops, but in livestock, especially cattle and pigs. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Sep 81 p 7]

COMMITTEE REPORTS ON SAHELIAN SOLUTIONS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 pp 2102-2103

[Text] WHILE academic debate rages around the course that should be followed in the Sahel to relieve those economies of their unremitting economic burdens, donors and governments are discussing some practical measures that have to be taken rapidly. The next few months will see a spate of meetings which will debate some of the more novel ideas presented recently. Food aid, always a thorny topic, is being raised again. CILSS, (The Permanent Interstate Committee to Combat Drought in the Sahel), the regional organisation representing the eight Sahelian states, is gradually coming to grips with its own internal machinery which has often seen the organisation jerk uneasily into action and then lapse into periods of inactivity. Discussions with potential Arab donors are beginning to bear fruit.

All these are points in a vast array of issues that constitute the "Sahelian problem". Still, some ten months since CILSS and the Club du Sahel, the OECD coordinating body, held their last major summit in Kuwait, there have been some developments, that may not yet be conclusive but which merit attention.

At the Kuwait conference in November 1980 (West Africa March 16 and 23) one of the most innovative and controversial discussed was that of recurrent costs of completed foreign funded projects. The report suggested that the Sahelian governments simply lack the budgetary capacity to maintain many of the facilities. Further more, projections show that budgetary deficits will remain as bad as they are now and that governments will be forced to divert badly needed finance from new and important economic or social projects to the upkeep of facilities that are currently being allowed to run down. The report recommended an audacious prescription.

Three of the most important elements of that prescription have now been accepted for further study — a pleasant surprise to the apologists of the report. In mid-January 1982, an important meeting will take place in Ouagadogou, under the aegis of CILSS and the Club de Sahel, on recurrent costs, and several major reports have been commissioned for that meeting.

One concerns what in French is called the "droit d'usage" (the right of use). This applies to the eligibility of any individual to make use of the facilities created by projects and the conditions or costs of that use. The report presented at Kuwait had gone so far as to suggest that many facilities had mainly profited those who could have easily afforded to contribute towards them. A second report will examine more closely the role of public enterprises in the Sahel. To what extent this will extend to an analysis of the entire state sector in the Sahelian economies is not yet clear. However, it is clear that there is a concerted push to persuade the governments to streamline, and in some cases drastically curb the currently excessive state sectors. They are seen as having become political bodies that are unprofitable, wasteful of urgently needed qualified manpower and even a source of opportunity for corruption. It is worth noting that already a number of governments — and not just in the Sahel — have already been taking steps to shed the excess weight of their state sectors; Mali has committed itself (though not for the first time), Senegal is doing so in a less formalised manner. Whether the attendent boost to the private sector will eventually prove to be the correct social antidote is a moot point, though it is surprising that the radical suggestions being made in the Sahel have yet to receive a critical echo in the academic community.

A third report will deal with employment policies. Naturally, this is closely intertwined with the previous one on public enterprises. The World Bank is preparing a study on the applicability of its new strategy of structural adjustment, which has already been impressed upon the governments of Senegal, Mali, and to a lesser extent the Ivory Coast. The French Caisse Centrale de Co-operation Economique is putting together a study on taxes in the Sahel and the IMF, taking up another element of the recurrent costs report presented at Kuwait, is examining the means by which the fiscal base of Sahelian budget revenue can be expended and improved.

It is a measure of the effect the initial report had that many of the leading organisations and CILSS governments should have endorsed the report by calling for further studies. The African Development Bank has also joined in by commissioning a study of the recurrent costs of its projects.

Food aid has perhaps suffered from a surfeit of reports. Yet it is a source of astonishment that some fundamental differences still exist, not so much as to the merits of food aid, but rather to its place on a broader economic scale. The stories of diversion of food aid for corrupt purposes by governments officials are legion and they still make the news, even in the world of the media which is somewhat jaded by the subject after flogging it for several years during the great drought of the early seventies. The basic problem is that recipient governments see in food aid a source of revenue and a palliative for their inadequate policies, while the donors, notably the US, have a surplus of cereals which they are only too keen to dump. So the critics of food aid — and they grow in numbers among the donors — are caught. Agreement, for example will have to be reached over the FAO's $210m. security stock programme. No money has been disbursed, but there are a number of agencies which feel strongly that the programme will merely serve to compound the basic weakness of the Sahelian economies; namely that until a proper cereals policy (suitable prices, better infrastructure, improved facilities for seed and other inputs) to improve production in established, stocks of food will achieve little more than emergency food aid. The only difference being that the supply will be closer at hand.

Aid from Arab sources is now becoming more plentiful and is beginning to change somewhat in nature. BADEA, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa has produced a plan for Arab investors in the Sahel. Initially there had been some suggestion that the Plan conflicted somewhat with the World Bank's new basic needs strategy in that it called for Arab aid to be directed towards the urban communities. It is already becoming evident that Arab aid is being a little less selective. It was not that long ago that the vast proportion of such aid went into the iron mines in Mauritania, for example. A further $210m. has been offered by the Islamic Development Bank. $100m. is for development purposes and the remainder is to go to emergency aid.

Meanwhile, it became clear that contributions to aid in the Sahel stagnated during 1980. It is put at about $1,700m., and thus at current prices represents a definite slow down in the flow of aid. However, there are two points which explain the decline as perhaps temporary and which offer hope for increases in the coming year. 1980 was the last year of the previous EDF (European Development Fund) programme. Few states were prepared to commit during the year therefore until it was clear what the new EDF sought for the ACP countries. It is now thought that as disbursements to the fifth EDF begin, there will be a rise in assistance to the Sahel. The other feature of optimism is that, as already mentioned, the Arabs are beginning to take a more discerning interest in the Sahel; they have also proved to be well disposed to the region, not least because of the overwhelming religious affinity.

The last time an article appeared in these columns about CILSS, it was suggested that the organisation was still having trouble making its mark — not least among the governments of the member states. With that weakness, it was difficult to imagine a properly co-ordinated regional plan for the security of the Sahelian economies. This year's budget has scarcely received a contribution, and some are still outstanding from 1980. However, it is noticeable that in the last nine months, there has been a reshuffle, with the Secretary-General acquiring a deputy to take on some of the routine matters that seemed to have been neglected. There has been an internal reshuffle in the organisation which has also contributed to improving efficiency and more foreign specialists have arrived at the headquarters which is helping fill some large gaps in the staff of the CILSS.

BCEAO GOVERNOR DISCUSSES ECONOMIC PROSPECTS

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 16 Sep 81 pp 1, 5

Fadiga told the press that during his visit to the chief of state, he had reviewed the situation of the Union. He also said that he had gone to Lome for the official opening of the BIAO-Togo [International Bank for West Africa] and the meeting of the board of directors of the WADB [West African Development Bank.

Fadiga explained that at the present time, he is visiting all chiefs of state in the Union in order to join with them in discussing the financial situation of the BCEAO.

With President Eyadema, he said, he had discussed the Union's prospects: "The economic situation of our nations is so difficult that we must use great imagination every day, which is what we try to do, because when new problems arise, we must find solutions for them, for it is the life of our nations, the lives of individuals, that is at stake."

Fadiga also said that with the rainfall all of our nations are having, it would appear that from the standpoint of food, at least, problems will practically be resolved.

"At any rate, if our hopes materialize — I mean our harvests — we could already have a little breathing room, insofar as grain imports, grain deficits, will no longer be so important as they were last year. There will be a grain surplus and therefore, a savings on foreign exchange and means of payment so that investments can be made."

Fadiga said that he and President Eyadema had spoken of the difficult context within which our countries' foreign trade takes place.

"There is currently a strong tendency to try to make us practice a policy of rates that does not seem totally adapted to the situation of our countries or our enterprises, especially the small and medium-size enterprise, much less the situation of our foreign trade, insofar as all of our export products may be burdened and lose their ability to compete, even though everyone knows how much difficulty we have had selling these products."

Fadiga said that President Eyadema manifested his agreement, saying that he did in fact understand the position of the bank's officials and thought that it was the best solution because we cannot sit back and watch the destruction of the production apparatus of our nations.

WADB COMMITTEE DISCUSSES 1981-1985 PROJECTIONS, APPROVES BUDGET

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 18 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] On Wednesday, 16 September 1981, the board of directors of the West African Development Bank (WADB) met in regular session for the 23d time at the bank's main office in Lome, presided over by Pierre-Claver Damiba, president of the WADB. The meeting was also attended by the governor of the Central Bank of the West African States (BCEAO), Abdoulaye Fadiga, and representatives of the member states.

According to the bulletin released to the press, the board examined and approved the Bank's updated financial projections for the next 5 years (1981-1985) and agreed on the establishment of an Exchange Risk Cover Fund within the Bank.

It also gave its approval to a proposed contract for participation of the European Investment Bank (BEI) in the capital of the WADB for the amount of 500 million CFA francs and the granting, by the BEI, of a line of credit for 1.5 billion CFA francs to the bank.

The Bank approved its budget for the 1981-1982 fiscal year, a proposed loan to finance a dairy project in Niamey, Niger, for 590 million CFA francs, a proposed loan to finance the Modern Fowl Production Program in Niger for 900 million CFA francs, and a proposed loan in order to grant a line of credit to the Ivorian Bank for Industrial Development (BIDI) in the Ivory Coast for 1 billion CFA francs.

These financing arrangements bring the total amount of the WADB's commitments to UMOA [West African Monetary Union (UMOA) nations to 24.2 billion CFA francs.

The board of directors also reviewed dossiers concerning studies financed by the Bank from 1976 to 1981 and prospects of cooperating with the UNDP, the Swiss Confederation and the World Bank.

FRANCE, NIGERIA SHOW SIGNS OF RAPPROCHEMENT

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 p 2087

[Text] FRANCE'S INVOLVEMENT in Africa is such that it was inevitable that President Mitterrand's government would soon be forced to clarify its African policies. Events during August and the beginning of this month reveal decisiveness in some areas, restraint in others, with the effect that some significant diplomatic shifts are emerging.

When the socialist government came to power it was quite clear about certain matters concerning African policy. Commitments would be honoured; the military interventions of the Giscardian era were regarded with obvious distaste; some of the personal relationships established at the level of Head of State were regarded as unpalatable and the government committed itself not only to spreading its economic assistance to Africa geographically but improving it both in quality and quantity.

From the outset, President Mitterrand's reluctance to attend the Franco-African summit in Zaire this year meant that it was moved to Paris. President Mobutu has responded by saying that next year's must be held in his country otherwise diplomatic relations between the two countries would worsen, and anyway there is doubt about his attending this year's meeting in Paris. President Dacko's removal in the Central Africa Republic was not unwelcome to Paris. A low profile was kept over the Senegalese intervention in The Gambia. There has been surprisingly little suggestion that France had a hand in the developments in Senegal and Central Africa, apart from the likelihood that it knew in advance of what was happening and gave no hint of disapproval.

Developments surrounding Chad and Angola, however, have been the catalysts of far more important shifts. The most striking of these are the apparent rapprochement with Nigeria and the distance that is emerging between Paris and Washington over how to deal with Africa.

Apart from the emergence of common ground with Nigeria over how to cope with the Libyan presence in Chad (see page 2099) the French seem to have achieved a general breakthrough in the traditionally suspicious Nigerian attitudes towards France. The new French government has gone some way in persuading Nigerian authorities that it also finds the presence of over 1,000 French troops in the Central African Republic embarrassing, but that their removal would produce a vacuum and ensuing instability which would be unwelcome to both Paris and Lagos.

If this apparent shift in Nigerian attitudes is consolidated it will be a change of a psychological nature with tremendous diplomatic significance in Africa. One of the first signs of this concerns Chad. The general agreement over Libyans in Chad — they are both opposed to the Libyan presence — is fundamentally different to the Egyptian, Sudanese and American approach to Col. Gaddafi. The latter group, and notably the United States, sees Chad and its latest problems as no more than an arena to be exploited for the eventual removal of Gaddafi. The Nigerian and French approach is more concerned with exploiting the Libyan weaknesses in Chad in order to arrive at some political solution for Chad. By hinting at diplomatic sympathy for Goukhouni they are letting him know that the consolidation of his power and the eventual withdrawal of the Libyans could be achieved by his co-operating with France and Nigeria.

The difference in the French and American positions over the means by which the Chadian conflict should be resolved and their differing priorities are symptomatic of the more general differences between the two countries.

President Mitterrand recently expressed some obvious disapproval of US policy in Africa. He suggested that the only interest of the US in the Third World was in the seeking out of points of strategic interest at the military level and he cited the example of the "rapprochement between the US and South Africa without being too concerned with what happens in the rest of Africa." He further criticised the American lack of concern for economic problems. M. Miterrand has been very measured in public statements since he came to the presidency; these observations cannot be considered the residue of campaign rhetoric.

Over the South African invasion of Angola, the French voted for a Security Council resolution condemning the incursion; Britain abstained and the US vetoed it. The French regard the withdrawal of the South African forces as an essential precondition for any form of negotiation over the future of Namibia. Effectively, the diverging attitudes have placed a very serious strain on the Western contact group which is trying to negotiate Namibian independence with South Africa on the basis of the United Nations Resolution 435. Among the western states, it has been France in the last few weeks that has been most explicit in its refusal to acknowledge South Africa as a conceivable tool for the American mission against communism and its agents. The test for France will be to stick to her convictions — for which she will garner immeasurable good will among African states — in the hope that the US will also adopt a more flexible approach.

OFFICIAL PREDICTS OIL PRODUCTION WILL RISE

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 p 2137

[Text] France's Elf-Aquitaine company is reported to have struck oil with its first well in a new area off the coast of Northern Angola. The oil find, on an offshore concession south of the Zaire river, is farther south than any previous discovery off Angola.

The find by Elf-Aquitaine, working in conjunction with the Angolan State oil concern Sonangol, gives rise to high hopes for other offshore exploration programmes being undertaken lower down the coast.

Elf is urgently seeking drilling rigs to start additional tests to establish whether the field is commercially viable. The French company apparently hopes to sink up to three appraisal wells and to carry out further seismic tests during a two-week period.

It is up to the Angolan authorities to make the first official announcement of any commercial discovery. If the additional tests are positive, an official announcement may be made by the end of October, but it could take up to a year to establish the rate of productivity, the extent of recoverable reserves and the quality of the field.

Elf has a 50 per cent share in the concession, followed by Mobil with 25 per cent, the Italian oil company Agip with 15 per cent and Yugoslav companies Ina-Naftaplin and Nafta-Gas.

The sources said Elf struck oil deposits in the Palanca field at the northern end of a 4,000 square kilometres (1,540 square miles) concession. The well was drilled 50 kms (30 miles) to the south of any previously discovered oil deposit in mid-August.

The Luanda government depends on oil exports for the bulk of its foreign exchange earnings. It now sells its 130,000 barrels per day (bpd) production at $32.25 per barrel. The main Angolan producing area is the enclave of Cabinda separated from the rest of the country by a narrow strip of Zaire territory.

Angola's Oil Minister, Jorge Morais, has predicted that Angolan production will go up to over 15m. tonnes a year (300,000bpd) by 1985 and that its output capacity by that time will rise to 20m. tonnes a year (400,000 bpd).

OFFICIAL ARRIVES TO INVESTIGATE S. AFRICAN CRIMES

AB021100 Luanda ANGOP in Portuguese 0935 GMT 2 Oct 81

[Text] Luanda, 1 Oct (ANGOP)--In a show of solidarity with the Angolan people and the MPLA-Labor Party against the South African invasions and to gather information on the odious nature of the apartheid crimes, Paulette Pierson, secretary general of the international committee of inquiry on the crimes committed by the racists in Southern Africa, arrived in Luanda early Thursday afternoon.

At the Luanda international airport, Paulette Pierson said that the main purpose of her visit was to prepare for the arrival of an important delegation of the committee of inquiry which is going to collect data on the crimes committed by the racist South African regime and denounce specifically its actions taken against the civilian population.

At the end of their mission, a document on the events will be adopted for an information campaign in UN circles, Western governments and the EEC to reveal the criminal and destructive nature of the aggression.

Paulette Pierson added that all complicity in this aggression will be exposed so that the measures taken can prevent South Africa from having the possibility of receiving material and diplomatic support from the United States. She is accompanied on her trip to Angola by a member of the Zimbabwe committee, Prof Reg Austin, international director in London. [title as received]

CORRESPONDENT REPORTS 'TENSION REMAINS HIGH'

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 pp 2089-90

[Text] Little hard information was emerging from Sierra Leone about the confrontation by the government and the Labour Congress. Rumours spoke of preparations for a treason trial, a planned demonstration by schoolchildren and of oil supplies running out. This message was received from a correspondent in Freetown.

AT LEAST five people are reported dead in shooting incidents in Freetown on Wednesday, September 2, the second day of the strike called by the Sierra Leone Labour Congress.

Reports say that following an attack on the premises of the independent bi-weekly, The Tablet, on Tuesday night, during which the printing machines were damaged beyond repair, crowds gathered in front of the press on Wednesday morning to see what had happened. Police used tear gas to disperse the crowd and several shots were fired in the air. Throughout Wednesday, gangs of unidentified youths drove around Freetown in new and unlicensed Nissan vans shooting into the air and throwing tear gas indiscriminately. The gangs are reported to have met with fierce resistance in some parts of the east end of the city where young boys put up road blocks to stop them from penetrating into the area, while others pelted them with stones. Several cars were badly damaged during the violence.

Five people are believed to have died during the shooting spree which continued until the early hours of Thursday, September 3, throughout the city. The unlicensed vans were later seen parked outside the APC headquarters building at Siaka Stevens Street.

Reports also say that several shops were looted by gangs on the Wednesday. These include the Kissy Road branch of Bata Shoe Company in the east end of Freetown.

In spite of releases from the government and the Sierra Leone Employers Federation warning workers that they will not be paid if they do not go back to work, up till the end of the week (Saturday, September 5) most business houses in the city centre were still closed. So also were the mines, banks, post office, ferry service, the docks, and the industries.

In a separate strike, which started as a go-slow two weeks ago, the workers at Sierra Leone Airways have been demanding higher wages and better conditions of service as well as the dismissal of their General Manager, Mr. Denis Long. The workers have pledged that they will not go back to work until Mr. Long is dismissed. Since Sierra Leone Airways handles most of the facilities at the airport, their strike has considerably affected flights. Some airlines cancelled flights to Freetown during the latter part of the week.

Meanwhile, over 50 people including Trade Union leaders, youths and a journalist, Mr. I. B. Kargbo who works for The Tablet have been detained. The Tablet editor, Pios Foray and other staff of the newspaper are reported to have gone underground. (Other reports said Mr. Foray had been arrested.)

announced at 2 a.m., September 1, by President Siaka Stevens (as reported last week in West Africa). Several leaders of the Congress, including the secretary general, Mr. J. B. Kabia, were reported to have been picked up immediately after the broadcast at the Labour Congress building and driven to Pademba Road prison.

The weekend preceeding September 1 had seen the retirement of the Commissioner of Police, Mr. Sam Taylor, and the appointment of his deputy, Mr. J. A. Grant. No reason was given for the police chief's retirement orders, but police sources say it may not be unconnected with the passive attitude of the police force, under Mr. Taylor, to the whole issue, in particular the mass meeting held by Congress on August 14, almost in front of the Central Police Station, even though that meeting had officially been banned.

Declaring the State of Emergency, President Stevens told the nation that:

"Whereas section 45 of the Public Order Act, 1965, provides that it shall be lawful for the President on the advice of the First Vice-President whenever it appears to the President that any action has been, or is being taken, or is threatened by any person or body of persons, which is calculated to endanger public safety or public order, by proclamation, to declare a state of emergency in any area for a period not exceeding three months as may be stated in the proclamation:

"And whereas it appears to the President that action calculated to endanger public safety and order has been, is being taken, and is threatened by certain persons or body of persons:

"Now therefore, I, Siaka Stevens, President of the Republic of Sierra Leone Supreme Head of State, Grand Commander of the Order of the Republic, Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, Fountain Head of Unity, Honour, Freedom and Justice, do hereby by this proclamation declare a state of emergency in the republic for a period of three months as from the 1st September, 1981."

The President also read a comprehensive statement on the latest development in government's attempts to get Congress to call off the strike. Part of the statement reads:

"Over the last two days, a special committee headed by the Hon. S. I. Koroma, First Vice-President, held several meetings with representatives of the Congress up to 5 p.m. on Monday, August 31, when government and representatives of the Sierra Leone Labour Congress, some religious leaders and tribal heads met in my office and agreed that a committee should be set up comprising representatives of the Sierra Leone Labour Congress, the Sierra Leone Employers' Federation and the government, to look into all the matters raised in the memoranda which had been submitted by the Congress as well as any other matters affecting workers interest, and to report to government as early as possible and in any case, within the limit of three months, from the date of commencement of the meetings which had been set up for 8th September.

"This was agreed upon by both sides, and the document initialled to that effect. It was also agreed that the government side as well as the Congress side should immediately issue a release to that effect. The Congress thereupon gave an undertaking that they were going to call off the strike and issue a statement within an hour. After waiting for seven hours Congress did not turn up.

"As the deadline for the strike notice is now imminent (12 midnight, September 1), government is constrained to the interest of public order and safety to take a firm stand on the issue. Government therefore appeals to all citizens to assist in maintaining law and order and also repeats its warning that anyone who interferes with citizens going about their lawful business will suffer the full penalties of the law. Government would also like to assure all workers that they will receive the full protection of the law in the performance of their duties."

Throughout Tuesday, September 1, all commercial houses, including the banks, airline offices and post office, in the capital remained closed. The ferry service was disrupted, public as well as private vehicles were noticeably very few on the roads, several offices were closed and the majority of workers, including civil servants, stayed at home.

Truckloads of personnel drove around town to ensure that no one was breaking the law, while special security division personnel made their presence evident with long rifles in front of several public buildings and essential services throughout the city. The Labour Congress building was completely sealed off by security men.

Later in the day, government issued a statement calling on civil servants and public corporation staff to return to work and continue their normal duties. The statement said that all those who failed to report for duty as from September 2 would forfeit their salaries or wages in respect of days they did not work. If they persisted in failing to report for duty, stern disciplinary measures will be taken against them.

The statement further advised heads of departments and public corporations to keep a strict duty roster, and in the case of civil servants report to the Establishment Secretary the officers who fail to report for duty. The Sierra Leone Employers' Federation also issued a similar statement in which it was resolved that employers will not provide salaries, wages, etc. for employees who go on strike for the period involved.

On Tuesday night, a gang of thugs who styled themselves APC Youths attacked Congress Building, broke into the Co-operative Store at the basement and took away drinks, provisions and other commodities. The offices of the Congress leaders were ransacked and several documents were removed.

The youths later drove around town in trucks announcing that they had seized the building and by Wednesday morning, the Sierra Leone Labour Congress signboard in front of the building had been removed and in its place was a new signboard on which was boldly inscribed "APC Youth League Headquarters". The building was built in 1976 using AFL-CIO money.

By Wednesday, September 2, most civil servants had returned to work. But workers in several other places including the mines, docks, electricity, and some commercial concerns continued to strike.

The city remains tense, and an uneasy calm continues to hang over the country.

AFTERMATH OF COUP ATTEMPT REPORTED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 p 2154

[Text]

Senegalese man to integrate troops

A Senegalese army officer, Major Amadou Nourou Silla, has been appointed to coordinate the integration of Gambian and Senegalese security forces.

Major Silla has been made Assistant Secretary in the Senegambian Secretariat, in charge of defence and security. He is also military adviser to Present Sir Dawda Jawara.

This secretariat post was provided for in the 1965 mutual defence pact signed by the two countries under which President Jawara called in Senegalese troops to put down the rebellion at the end of July in which about 500 people died.

Many members of The Gambia's only security force, the paramilitary field force, were said to have sided with the rebels and President Jawara said after the uprising was crushed that there would be drastic changes in The Gambian forces and that they would be merged with Senegal's.

The Presidents of the two countries said last month that they planned to form a confederation of Senegambia. President Jawara has recently toured the country, to explain the project and to appeal to the population to turn in any rebels still at large.

The Gambia has asked nearby Guinea-Bissau to extradite the leader of the attempted coup, 28-year-old socialist revolutionary Kukoi Samba Sanyang, and nine other alleged rebels detained there.

118 field force rebels cashiered

One hundred and eighteen members of The Gambia's field force have been detained for their alleged part in the rebellion in July and 22 have been cashiered, the force's new commander, Major Ndaw Njie, has announced.

Major Njie, formerly President Sir Dawda Jawara's aide-de-camp, said that of the 358 men in the field force before the attempted putsch, 179 were still in service.

In the fighting, 16 has been killed, 10 of them insurgents, the other six loyalists. Eleven more were at large and were being looked for, and there was no news of 22 others, the major said. He added that most of the weapons stolen from the Bakau camp armoury had been found.

Foreign judges sent for

The Justice Minister, Mr. Muhamadu Lamine Saho, has said that judges from other countries would be invited to conduct the trials of those arrested in connection with the rebellion. The Gambia does not have enough judges of its own, Mr. Saho said, and in addition the use of foreign judges would solve the problem of impartiality.

He said that 607 people had been arrested, including not only political detainees but people held for crimes committed during the coup, including robbery and rape.

The number actually to be charged was not yet certain, though 87 had been before a review tribunal, whose recommendations would be considered by President Sir Dawda Jawara. He would decide whether to free them or sent them for trial, the Minister said.

WFP send food and supplies

Emergency food aid — sorghum and rice for 70,000 people for three months, worth $863,000 — is being sent by the World Food Programme (WFP) to The Gambia for free distribution among victims of the recent rebellion.

A WFP spokesman said the Programme has already bought and shipped to The Gambia 200 tons of sorghum from neighbouring Senegal. The Programme is also buying 500 metric tons of rice in The Gambia itself for immediate distribution. It is expected that a further 500 tons of rice will shortly be obtained either in Senegal or in The Gambia.

The Chief of the FAO Office of Special Relief Operations (OSRO) and an officer of the WFP flew from Rome to Banjul to discuss and review the emergency needs of the food and agricultural sector.

WFP also announced that it was sending 3,000 tons of sorghum to The Gambia as emergency food aid to drought-affected farmers. The grant, worth $734,000 is for 84,000 farmers over a period of three months. WFP has arranged to divert a ship en route to Africa to Dakar. The ship is expected to discharge 1,030 tons of sorghum for dispatch to the affected areas in The Gambia.

'BRAIN DRAIN' PLAYS HAVOC WITH COUNTRY'S FUTURE

[Text] EDUCATION has always played a pivotal role in the cultural, economic, social and political development of Ghana. The missionary societies that started it all in the 19th century; the visionary colonial administrators like the late Sir Gordon Guggisberg and Sir Alan Burns who actively promoted and expanded it: and the various Ghanaian administrations who massively funded it after independence have all contributed their quota towards the building of one of the best educational systems in tropical Africa.

Ghanaians have therefore come to regard education, properly directed, as a major form of investment and they grumble loudly when they suspect that they are not reaping the fruits of this heavy investment in education.

For the past three decades Ghanaian governments have spent approximately 30 per cent of the annual budget each year on education. This fiscal year, 1981-82, for instance, over one billion cedis have been allocated to the Ministry of Education.

Despite this high investment a large number of children will be unable to find places in the existing schools at all levels — primary, middle, secondary and technical schools and teacher training colleges and the universities.

Some figures illustrate this frustration. In 1973-74 academic year enrolment at the various levels of the educational system totalled 1,599,789 of which 1,014,964 were in primary schools; 440,065 in middle; 72,036 in secondary; 12,800 in technical; 14,299 in teacher training colleges and 5,625 in the three universities.

This year some 114,969 pupils registered by 3,963 schools took part in the Middle School Leaving Certificate examination conducted by the West African Examinations Council. Last March 135,557 candidates wrote the Common Entrance examination. This means that altogether some 250,526 pupils are deemed to have qualified for entry into second cycle educational institutions in the country.

It is not possible, however, for all those pupils to find places in the existing schools because of the 135,557 candidates who wrote the Common Entrance examination only 24,016 passed; out of this figure only 22,473 can be admitted in the Assisted Secondary Schools and Technical Institutes. The unfortunate 543 pupils will have to enter private institutions or become dropouts.

The limited places in the public school system in the second cycle institutions described above is just one of the several bottlenecks affecting the quality of education in Ghana today. Other problems are poor facilities such as lack of teaching aids, textbooks and especially science equipment in laboratories at all levels, particularly in the universities.

Secondary school education in particular suffers from poor and inadequate facilities, particularly for science teaching and inequalities in the distribution of these facilities among the schools on Regional basis. Schools in urban areas get preferential treatment and those in the hinterland are left out in the cold.

University education is also plagued by the high cost of training of students; the predominance of the arts and social science students, lack of equipment in the science faculties and the rigidity in the selection of subjects at the undergraduate level.

Professor Kwoku G. Folson, Pro-Vice Chancellor of the University of Ghana, Legon explains:

"The Chemistry building on this campus has been left standing for the past ten years for lack of funds. We have no equipment in our science laboratories. Equipment, chemicals and textbooks are all not available. The unavailability of these things, equipment, chemicals and textbooks constitutes job dissatisfaction among the faculty members on campus.

"Three years ago this university was granted only ₵3.1m. import licence. This year all the three universities got only ₵2.3m. Our share of this total is ₵1.2m. This is all we have to meet our import requirements, including those to be used by the Nougochi Medical Research Centre. The lecturers are resigning out of frustration because they have no job satisfaction."

Veteran educationalists are bitterly complaining about the poor quality of teaching at all levels in the educational system. The poor quality is due to the exodus of a large number of trained teachers to neighbouring West African countries, particularly Nigeria and Liberia.

Poor exam performances

Since June this year recruitment officers from Sokoto, Imo and Ondo States in the Federal Republic of Nigeria have set up shop near the residence of the Nigerian High Commissioner on Rangoon Road in Accra and have been recruiting Ghanaian professionals at the rate of 500 a week. These professionals include, engineers, architects, doctors, surveyors, town planners and especially teachers.

A lecturer at the University of Ghana, Legon, comments sadly on the exodus and the quality of teaching today in Ghana. He says:

"The disastrous effect of mass exodus on standards may not be felt immediately by the government but these cannot be ignored. In ten or 20 years from now the calibre of our manpower would be very low indeed.

At the primary and middle school level the exodus of teachers has resulted in the poor percentage passes recorded during the Common Entrance examinations. Last academic year, 1979-80 for instance out of the 131,135 candidates who sat the examination only 26,078 passed. This was 19.3 per cent pass rate. The performance was worse this academic year when only 24,016 passed out of 135,557, representing only a 17.7 per cent pass rate.

Mr. Alex Dadey, president of the Conference of Heads of Assisted Secondary Schools, and Headmaster of the Okuapeman Secondary School, does not think standards are falling. He comments:

"Contrary to the critics' view on Ghana's educational system, Ghana still has the best secondary school network in West Africa and perhaps the whole of tropical Africa."

On the exodus of teachers from the Universities Professor K. G. Folson has this to say:

"The extent and seriousness of the problem is illustrated by the fact that at Cape Coast University this academic year a full one-third of the lecturers are on some form of leave, study course or sabbaticals. These lecturers take their leave and towards the end of the leave period which is not supposed to be more than two years, ask for extension.

"Here at Legon the seriousness of the exodus is also a problem. For example in the Computer Science Department we were left with only one lecturer at the end of last academic year. We have an establishment of seven: a professor and six lecturers. It was only providence which saved us when a Ghanaian holder of a doctorate degree arrived from Paris in the nick of time to save us a great deal of embarrassment in this Department. Now we have two lecturers."

In the Economics Department, the University of Ghana is facing an acute shortage of lecturers. There is an establishment for 19 lecturers including a professor to head the Department. Today, there are only four lecturers in this department, one senior lecturer, three lecturers and two assistant lecturers.

"The lecturers have literally been killing themselves to keep the graduate faculty going because it is through this process that we can recruit lecturers locally. For this reason we have cut down on the number of undergraduate students admitted each year so that we can concentrate on graduate work," said Professor Folson.

He explained that the University of Ghana, Legon, has stopped recruiting lecturers and professors from outside the country "because our salaries are so low that we cannot get outside lecturers."

"We recruit outsiders only if their own governments can supplement the salaries we pay them here to make ends meet. In the past the British Government had been most generous in this respect. But the picture has changed. The Arab countries have also been helpful on a limited scale.

Professor Folson further explained that only lecturers in Islamic Studies or Arabic are now recruited from outside Ghana and that the salaries of such lecturers are supplemented or subsidised by their home countries.

"Even the recruitment of lecturers from Ghana is very difficult because we ourselves cannot house them. Some lecturers have lived in temporary accommodation for over two years because we have not enough houses for our academic staff." he said.

A Senior Lecturer at the University of Ghana, Legon claimed that by September this year as many as 100 lecturers would have gone to "Agege" (Nigeria) or elsewhere because of frustration.

"Budget is going to increase difficulties"

Professor Folson explains that the third reason for the frequent and extensive resignations from the universities is that the lecturers see no light at the end of the tunnel. "I must add that the 1981-82 budget is going to make things more difficult for our lecturers and everybody else because it is designed to fuel inflation," he said.

The Pro-Vice-Chancellor explained that during the last two meetings of the Academic Board as many as 70 lecturers have submitted applications on either resignations, sabbaticals, study leave or leave of absence from the university. "This will mean a net loss of between 40 and 50 lecturers during the next academic year." he said.

Other problems militating against the smooth administration of educational institutions in Ghana include the racketeering in the supply and distribution of textbooks and other educational materials.

Textbooks are theoretically supplied free of charge at the lower levels of the system. In second cycle institutions students pay only token fees but the books are never available because they are diverted to private book sellers who inflate the prices to astronomical degrees thus helping to pauperise parents.

To ensure that the books do get into the hands of pupils and students in future the Ministry of Education has recently announced the creation of a new division in the Education Service to be headed by a director to provide all supplies for the schools.

Mr. F. K. Buah, Minister of Education, who announced the measure warned the teachers that "the present administration will not spare any person who misapplies public funds, neither will it condone any officer's fraudulent deals involving public funds."

The other problem in the educational field is that there appears to be no solid policy and no central policy — making body despite the huge bureaucracy. This impression is based on the fact that too many officials, have been making too many pronouncements on education in recent months.

The Limann administration, for instance, suspended the Junior Secondary School programme fashioned during the Acheampong military regime. This scheme was designed to convert all Middle Schools into Junior Secondary Schools at a cost of ₵91,520,000 in five years (1975-80) in order to cut the elementary school period from ten to six years. The promised reappraisal of the scheme has not taken place. And yet some of the schools have been converted and are confused about what to do.

Plans to solve problems

But the problems are not altogether insoluble. To combat the exodus of teachers to Nigeria for instance the government has allocated the sum of ₵7.1m. this fiscal year to train pupil teachers to replace those who have gone to Nigeria or elsewhere.

There are also plans to convert some of the boarding second cycle institutions into day-schools to cut down on the feeding of students. Government has been paying huge sums of money in form of subsidies to feed students in these second cycle boarding institutions. It is expected that the gradual phasing out of the boarding schools will cut down the size of the educational budget. The scheme has been criticised by some retired school masters as an ill-conceived policy.

One serious effect of the exodus of lecturers from the universities is that the academic boards have cut down on elective courses and are teaching only the core subjects.

"The long-term effect of this system will be that our graduates will become narrow in their various fields of specialisation. In the long run, if we don't change it will lead to the lowering standards," said Prof. Felson.

Another effect of the shortage of lecturers at the universities is that research is at very low level.

"At the moment research is at minimal. Those who are left in the universities are over-stretched. They themselves are so harassed in the search for everyday material things that they have no leisure to do research, much less to write. But what is unique about a university is the research that is carried on there. Without research, there is not much difference between secondary schools and a university because teaching is done in those institutions also," said Prof. Folson.

Prof. Folson lamented that since the death of Mr. Casely O. Mate there has been no chairman for the National Council of Higher Education, the agency responsible for higher education in the country. As a result the universities are left as orphans to fend for themselves.

"It is clear from the funds allocated to the universities that the present administration does not consider higher education as one of their top priorities. Our Vice-Chancellor has been in almost daily contact with the government but all their promises have so far yielded nothing," lamented Prof. Folson.

REASONS FOR FAILED ECONOMIC MANAGEMENT REVIEWED

[Text] "DEFICIT financing by government, which is the main source of inflationary pressures in the economy, seems to have gone out of control again, as under Acheampong. (It) began to get out of hand in the 1974-75 fiscal year when the government deficit, at ₵356.7m., was more than double the previous year's. But it was in the 1977-78 fiscal year that the deficit made a quantum jump from ₵861m. to ₵1,810.2m. It was, however, kept under ₵2,000m. until last financial year when, in response to deliberate government stimulation, it made another quantum jump from ₵1,600m. to ₵4,700m. In this year's budget, instead of government trying to control inflation, it has rather budgeted for an estimated deficit of ₵4,200m. On past experience this is likely in the final out-turn of the budget to be in the region of ₵6,500m. Questioned about this, the (Economic Planning) Minister's memorable reply was that no government has ever balanced its budget!

"The external value of the cedi tells the same story. The cedi is supposed to exchange for the dollar at the rate of ₵2.75 to $1, although in a typical exhibition of 'kalabuleism' the government sells $1 at ₵5.50 whilst buying it for ₵2.75. But this time by the time this government came into power $1 was worth ₵15 on the free market. Today, after nearly two years of PNP administration $1 is worth no less than ₵35 on the free market. Naturally, no one is these circumstances exchanges foreign currency for the cedi at the banks. A few foreigners who have tried it have been looked upon as fools by bank clerks.

Consequently, the government is losing its control over the economy. Individuals change on the black market to bring in such things as video sets, luxury cars, fabulous ladies' shoes and dresses, sound systems and so on, and sell them at fantastic prices, whilst at the same time the government keeps telling us that there is shortage of foreign exchange. Yet when one reads the current budget one scarcely notices any concern with this problem. Instead of working out positive policies to deal with the problem the government keeps informing us that because the IMF demands devaluation as a condition of help it is not going to devalue. What it is going to do remains a closed secret. Negative criticism of the IMF has been substituted for positive policy to deal with a real problem."

The above brief discussion of one aspect of the economic situation and PNP Government approach was provided by Mr. Kweku Folson, a well-known political scientist at the University of Ghana, and also a member of the Popular Front Party. He made those remarks during a press conference he called to announce his candidacy for the nomination of three PFP members in the leadership race of the five minority party group.

On the subject of Ghana and the IMF, it has been said recently that Ghana is close to agreement with the IMF and that the latter is now prepared to agree more lenient conditions in return for a ₵300m. one-year standby credit and about ₵100m. from the compansatory finance facility. The remaining disagreement is, it is said, the IMF demand for: an increase in the cocoa producer price of as much as 300 per cent; an end to government subsidies on fuel imports; a drastic reduction of government expenditure including the civil service in particular; and the multiple exchange rate system with a schedule for closing the gap between the official and black market exchange rates. It has also been suggested that the IMF might offer a further $1,000m. spread over a three-year stabilisation programme, which would generate supplementary loans from bilateral donors.

The government's resistance to increasing the cocoa producer price has been constant and curious. It is said that the whole cocoa operation was in deficit last year for the first time. The self-congratulations of the interim management committee of the Cocoa Marketing Board notwithstanding, the basic "bottlenecks" of inadequately-distributed inputs, inadequate storage and evacuation facilities, persist. Around these are the failure at policy level.

Spraying, replanting and rehabilitation of farms, as well as reconstitution of a depleted (and rather aged) labour force has been approached in the last few years more with pious vows than dogged determination. Disincentives to the farmers have been many and the slow switch to food crop farming began soon after 1975 when local prices of local foodstuffs began their quick ascent. At the same time, the CFA value of Ghana cocoa became obvious as smugglers began paying farmers much more than the official producer price and, even better, took the cocoa away; in Brong-Ahafo particularly, unofficial exports became institutionalised, joining the gold, diamond, and to a lesser extent, timber exports.

President Limann rejected the kind of producer price increase various people have proposed for the last three years at least: up to ₵600 per 30kg. from the current ₵120. He said it would cost the government some ₵1,000m., which appeared then to be the only substantive objection. Obviously, the producer price is by no means the key to the whole cocoa question. The policy failures and bottlenecks mentioned above are part of a package which the Limann government has yet to deliver in the form of a definite programme of economic management. Cocoa would seem extremely important from the point of view of foreign earnings. But the subsequent large consumption of these earnings by food and raw material import requirements immediately recommends serious work on agriculture. From the level of the producers, higher producer prices (and labour wages) are easily justified when linked to good roads, well-supplied markets, lower consumer prices, and lower food imports.

Lifting fuel import subsidies joins the argument for reducing the number of civil servants: cutting government expenditure. Immediate drawbacks for the former would be the first measure would give an immediate and significant upward push to prices. But in any case, what use is it to spend roughly 40 per cent of export earnings on crude oil alone when, after extracting petrol, kerosene and gas oil from it, the rich residue is sold off (in sometimes dubious ways) but always to other people's profit without Ghana even getting bitument for the roads out it?

Civil service retrenchment, especially in the public corporations is recommended both for cutting down recurrent expenditure and for ending the disguised "social security" system that some people say operates in Ghana: paying many people for being unemployed in offices. Of course, these redundancies would swell the ranks of restive urban unemployed and aggravate discontent at the ever-more conspicuous consumption of a minority. Neither would redundancies guarantee efficiency, and more prudent spending. There has been, as usual, little talk of just how to employ people, how to restructure government activity into more productive patterns. How can recurrent expenditure of this sort avoid being a great burden when bureaucracy is a form of government? and exploited underemployment where exploitation of a selectively employed workforce a form of economy?

READER LISTS REASONS FOR POOR COCOA PERFORMANCE

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 p 2135

[Text] SIR: I would like to elaborate on the warnings issued by the acting manager of the Suhum Cocoa Project (Eastern Region of Ghana), Mr. J. P. Arhin, about some Ghanaian cocoa farmers' intentions of cutting down the cocoa trees on their farms to "exploit" other avenues (West Africa, August 3).

The situation looks more serious than Mr. Arhin emphasised. It is mere platitude to say that Ghana's economic strength still largely depends on cocoa disregarding the fact that "rated capacity" has been hard to achieve for the past few years. A close study of the situation may even reveal that other cocoa farmers in the other districts might have similar intentions of supplanting their cocoa by other cash crops; because these farmers have similar problems.

The government shouldn't take it slightly for such an action by our farmers could lead to grave results. However, I do understand that there are reasons why the farmers have decided to cut down the cocoa trees because cocoa farming is no longer lucrative. Over the past years, these farmers have found it difficult to procure such basic needs as cutlasses, fertilisers and spraying powders. Even at certain cocoa producing areas, farmers are not given "ready" cash for their dried cocoa beans. The responsible secretary receivers often fail to explain convincingly why, while they have the effrontery to divert this money meant for the payment for other purposes, to their own advantage. Farmers have had no formal way to protest.

At certain areas too, the farmers are often told there are not sufficient bags for their dried beans. In this case, the beans are kept in the villages for longer than necessary while the poor farmers starve on. Money borrowing among these poor farmers has as a result, become an integral part of their farming. Any serious farmer is bound to feel discouraged.

No wonder the farmers have decided to switch to producing more maize, cassava, tomatoes etc. — productions which are relatively easier and where sales are much quicker. However, the collapse of the cocoa industry is not going to aid an already ailing economy.

FORMER AFRC MEMBER COMMENTS ON AFRC IDEOLOGY

[Text] SIR: Without the slightest intention of washing our linen in public, I am forced to enter into the ongoing debate on the significance of the June 4 uprising and the AFRC in order to counter the attempt of some misguided members of the AFRC to misrepresent the AFRC revolutionary objectives. In so doing I will refrain from unnecessary revelation of confidential information concerning the uprising and other important matters arising from it, since these are the subject of a commission of inquiry in Ghana. I will therefore be pre-empting the duties of the commission and prejudging the issue of AFRC matters if I were to come out now to say in detail exactly who did what, when, how and why. At the appropriate time, I am sure, the facts will emerge very clearly for people to determine for themselves the forces of reaction and the forces of progress within the AFRC.

Meanwhile, however, what cannot be postponed for later comment is the fact that AFRC was not by any means a homogeneous entity. It was divided into two diametrically opposed ideological factions, and the nature of the ideological conflict was whether the June 4 uprising was to lead logically into a socialist transformation of society or whether it was to limit itself to the reform of the capitalist system. Those who favoured socialism grouped under the leadership of Major Boake Djan while the capitalist reformers were led by Flt-Lt. Jerry Rawlings. This fundamental division within the AFRC has been underscored by the recent letter by ex-Lance Corporal Atiemo, an AFRC member, published in the last week's issue of this journal, in which he stated, among other things, that Major Boakye Djan wanted to "stage a 'socialist' coup" but that this was strongly opposed and frustrated by Flt.-Lt. Jerry Rawlings's faction to which ex-Lance Corporal Atiemo himself belonged.

That Flt.-Lt. Rawlings was the chieftain of the anti-socialist camp of the AFRC need not surprise anyone. His own utterances during and after the AFRC period bear sufficient evidence to his anti-socialist stance. He is on record for having said that he is not socialist, and in an interview with West Africa dated July 9, 1979, concerning the house-cleaning exercise, Flt.-Lt. Rawlings stated that what was wrong with Ghana was not the prevailing socio-economic political system but personalities. In his view the politico-economic problem would be solved if the "right people" were put in the "right places" without the necessity of probing the viability of the prevailing system, let alone uprooting it. His concern was with personalities not with the systems. But Major Boakye Djan was of the strong view that the Ghanaian problem of perpetual dependence, class and tribal divisions, exploitation and man's inhumanity to man, were the inevitable concomitant of the economic system which he identified as capitalist. The logic of the system based on private property is to allow only a few to use social property to accumulate private wealth and consign the disinherited multitudes into a life of abject poverty, disease, insecurity, illiteracy and general hopelessness. This is the system which prevailed at independence and which our late President Nkrumah sought to transform in order to establish a fairer and juster society in which our material and spiritual resources would be pooled together for the betterment of all Ghanaians and not just the privileged few.

Flt.-Lt. Rawlings had no proper understanding of the system he was fighting to reform. His false radical posture leads people into believing that he is revolutionary and therefore socialist. But in reality he is a reactionary masquerading as a revolutionary, as ex-Lance Corporal Atiemo's letter amply testifies. People should realise that it is not enough to think oneself sincerely concerned with the plight of the poor; it is also important that one's thinking is based on a sufficient and correct analysis of their problems and act in a manner that leads to lasting solutions. But in the case of Flt.-Lt. Rawlings he appears to embrace the cause of the poor when in fact he is on an ego trip and has no idea what a revolution means, let alone make one. This is the reason why his first attempt at a coup on May 15, 1979, failed. It was the June 4 intervention which saved him from execution by his enemies.

Now we all know that the replacement of the socialist ideal of Nkrumah by capitalism has led to an agony of unprecedented proportions in the history of our young nation. The system is making life a misery for the people, impoverishing many and sending others to their early graves, causing despair and needless pain to those for whom independence represents a gigantic conspiracy on an international scale to defraud the humble peasants and the toiling workers of Ghana. The June 4 uprising was a direct consequence of the political misguidance and economic mismanagement of our dear country. Some of us who took part in the uprising never wanted to have anything to do with the rotten system. We wanted to overthrow it and change it and not just keep it and reform it as ex-Lance Corporal Atiemo and his faction wanted to do.

To us socialist revolutionaries it was anathema to keep a system that had manifestly failed our toiling people, subverted their aspirations, brutalised and improverished them. We wanted a radical restructuring of our institutional arrangements, a social revolution which would drastically reduce, if not completely do away with, the dehumanisation of man by man, a revolution which would create the condition for the free, unfettered development of everybody in society, restore the dignity of labour and make Ghana a free, vibrant and a happy place to live in. This is what we wanted but which the anti-socialist capitalist reformers bitterly opposed and aborted.

The counter-revolutionary role of the anti-socialist, capitalist reformers must not be forgotten by the revolutionary people of Ghana. No one who played a counter-revolutionary role must be allowed to pass himself off as the People's Hero but must be judged for what he is — a counter-revolutionary, no matter what radical mask he wears. This is very important for a realistic realignment of forces in the ongoing struggle for social change.

On this note, I would like to conclude by thanking ex-Lance Corporal Atiemo, the self-appointed spokesman of the other ranks, for making it more publicly explicit on which side of the struggle his camp stands. And I am sure that no progressive other rank member of the AFRC would wish to associate himself with the backward ideas of ex-Lance Corporal Atiemo. But we, the socialist revolutionaries of the AFRC, stand firmly by Major Boakye Djan and believe that he is sincerely concerned with the collective interest of the AFRC and the common interest of the people of Ghana. He is the only one, since the hand-over, who has fought consistently to defend the AFRC as a collective instead of leaving it to be discredited and decimated by those forces who seek to turn the tide of history.

GOVERNMENT DENIAL--A statement issued last night from the office of the president says the attention of the government has been drawn to a news item carried by the Ghana Broadcasting Corporation [GBC] and a report on the front page of yesterday's edition of the daily graphic to the effect that Mr Joe Reindorf, minister of local government and cooperatives, and Dr Ekwo-Daniels, minister of education, have resigned from the cabinet following the recent cabinet reshuffle. According to the news items, the two ministers, in their letters of resignation which were addressed to President Limann at the castle on Thursday, stated that they had decided to resign on personal grounds. The government is utterly surprised at this news item, since the president had not received any such letters from the two ministers. The statement said contact with the two ministers in the course of the day has shown that no such letters had been written. This news item has therefore caused a great deal of embarrassment to the president as well as the two ministers concerned. Government views with particular concern the additional news item carried on the radio to the effect that the president had accepted the resignation of the two ministers. This attributed to the president an action he had neither taken nor was in a position to take. The statement said the government views with a grave concern the whole episode and has therefore requested the press commission to investigate the matter and take appropriate action. BSL'S FOREIGN MANAGEMENT DENIED--Mr. J. C. Bene, the German managing director of the Black Star Line (BSL), has denied that the Marine Transport Consultants International (MTCI) of West Germany is managing BSL. He said four MTCI employees had rather been released as direct employees of BSL. He told an Accra press conference that he and three others in senior managerial positions were under a two-year contract with BSL, and that MTCI was only providing "back-up" service for BSL on the basis of direct cost. BSL was paying for the services of the four West Germans. He said the back-up services included the release of advisers to sit in on negotiations such as for insurance. On personnel displaced by the ship sales, Mr. Bene said the 1,236 workforce afloat and ashore would be reduced to 650. He was confident that BSL could be economically viable by the first quarter of next year. [Excerpts] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 p 2145]

ANALYSIS OF CHARACTER, POPULARITY OF PRESIDENT VIEIRA

Dakar AFRICA in French No 133, Aug-Sep 81 pp 43-46

[Article by Nadine Nyangoma: "Portrait of a Militant"]

[Excerpts] It is when he is with his people, in the midst of the nation to which he has devoted over 20 years of his militant life, that all the personality of Nino Vieira is revealed. Foreign visitors had always viewed him as reserved, deliberately taciturn, so that the discovery of this aspect of his personality came as a great surprise to many observers, who had been undecided about what their opinion should be of the man who first served as minister of defense and then as prime minister under Luiz Cabral.

Portuguese soldiers retained such a terrorized memory of this victorious warrior that some believed as firmly as the Guineans did in the legend depicting him as being invulnerable to bullets.

After the recovery of 14 November, when the people went out into the streets to acclaim him, week after week the regions sent trucks loaded with peasants, now national heroes, to danse and sing the praise of Nino. It was to be the entire country which would affirm its political choices in the capital. The improvised speeches in the city square were not without humor and the people of the little town of Farim presented him with a giant broom made by its women: "Here, Nino, so you can go clean out the ministries," one elder told him.

Popular With Peasants

In the overflowing wave of joy, the whole strict system of censorship set up by former Minister of Information Mario de Andrade fell apart, as did the minister. On the radio and in the streets, song banned for years are now heard again. A musical and cultural explosion took place: speeches, lectures, artistic exhibitions came forth and took over the microphones and the tide has not stopped. The people's creative imagination that Nino has constantly encouraged and to which he has always been extremely sensitive culminated in the February Shrovetide festival, when thousands of masks made by the country's children and teenagers paraded through the streets. The fallen president was represented by a mask painted with a reassuring smile, tirelessly greeting the crowd.

But Bissau, the capital inherited in the final moments from the fleeing Portuguese colonialism, is far from being the real country. Consequently, it will not be until Nino Vieira invites delegations and journalists to accompany him on his regional tours, until the time of the great reunions, that one will finally be able to measure the popularity of the man in whom the people never ceased to have hope, even though his exclusion from government began to give rise to a certain demoralization, alternating with outbursts of anger, in the rural areas.

Nino is the man of action who first of all restored the country's faith in itself, by beating in the field the greatest generals of the colonial power, thereby deflating all the magical fear created by five centuries of Portuguese domination. For the people then, Nino possesses the supernatural energy that broke the colonial magic. For the people as well, Nino saved the work of the struggle through two of its greatest crises. The first crisis took place when, following the assassination of Amilcar Cabral on 20 January 1973, the party could have been lost in the tangle of accusations and implications surrounding the assassination of the highest leader and in the resulting demoralization.

The second crisis was that of the process of disengagement regarding the fundamental promises of the struggle, particularly priority to be granted to agriculture and the food survival of the people, a process that led to the constitutional coup d'etat of 11 November, which was rapidly quelled by the quick countercoup waged by Nino on 14 November.

One may well wonder why Nino, already pressed by the rank and file and particularly the Armed Forces, restless in the face of the new institutional and economic evolution, did not take power when he was still minister of defense and president of the People's Assembly, preferring to go to Cuba. Only the automobile accident of Chico Te brought him back to the country and the post of prime minister, where he remained until Luiz Cabral's constitutional coup d'etat, when he took power.

Work of the PAIGC

Actually, Nino is not a man attracted by power. Rather, he is dominated by a fixed idea, that of completion of the task of the PAIGC. And yet, in recent years, that task was definitely threatened. If Nino demonstrated so much patience, it was because in his eyes, the work involved aspects much more complex than they first appeared. While it is true that the task is also a social and economic program, it is a desire for institutionalization and a search for stability as well. It was therefore not until the constitutional coup of 11 November, when, following a year of discussions and arrests concerning the new constitution, there was proof that the institutions were blocked, that a very part of the security apparatus: the People's Assembly, was infiltrated, that the other part: the Armed Forces, took Nino to power.

Today Nino is president of the Revolutionary Council, which constitutes a provisional government while awaiting the meeting of the Fourth Congress of the party from 8 to 14 November.

In the meantime, Nino constantly travels throughout the country, determined to make the people aware and decentralize, in order to prevent a splinter group from taking control of the undertaking. That is why the most extraordinary moments on the political scene in Guinea-Bissau are those of the "talks with the people," in which Nino patiently explains, using the simplest possible language, the mechanisms and problems of the economy, relations with other countries, the consequences of a given decision, and in which the people in turn describe their problems, reject a given proposal or even a given official. Nor is it rare to see Nino change a decision because, following a talk with the people, an adjustment was necessary. And yet, Nino does not try, through demagogy, to use the impulses of the rank and file, but rather, tirelessly counsels respect for the rules and laws of the organization that was in the tradition of the liberated zones.

In Guinea-Bissau today, no political personality can contest that of Nino, which does not mean that he is the only one or that there is no possibility of replacing him.

But in the eyes of the people, he is the man who fought the hardest in the field for his country and his authority does not depend on any manipulation of power or wealth. He has therefore not been corrupted and manifests great indifference to material goods, which astonishes his entourage and is interpreted by the petty to be a lack of foresight. For the old regime, he was therefore a political card to be dominated, just as for the ambitious to come, he will inevitably be a card they will try to master and eventually to cut off from the masses by adulation.

And yet, Nino has other political assets in hand, particularly a rich and free dialog with the masses, the loyalty of the Armed Forces, which should enable him to avoid isolation, encirclement by possessive courtisans, and falling into political errors that brought about the downfall of such popular and sincere leaders as Kwame Nkrumah, for example.

HARAMBEE PROCESS COMES UNDER SCRUTINY

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 25 Sep 81 pp 1-3

[Article by Marie-Therese Delboulbes: "God Helps the Local Helpers"]

[Text]

NAIROBI, September 23 - One of Kenya's best-known institutions, the harambee meetings - a local version of the proverb "God helps those who help themselves" - has recently come under close public scrutiny.

The meetings, normally held each weekend in different villages and towns throughout the country, are fund-raising events organised for the benefit of local projects which could not usually expect subsidies from the Central Government.

The traditional setting is a wooden dais, bedecked in the national colours, on which the local notables - a Cabinet Minister on the bigger occasions - are seated to encourage the wananchi (citizens) to untie their purse-strings and donate to community projects.

The project can vary : it might be a church, an extension for a local school, a dispensary, or even extra money to provide an overseas scholarship for a local student.

The system was begun by the late President Jomo Kenyatta soon after independence and has become an institution. But critics are beginning to ask where all the money comes from, and, more to the point, where it all goes.

Enormous stakes

Sometimes the stakes involved are enormous. During his first year as President, following the death of Kenyatta in 1978, Daniel Arap Moi managed to collect 60 million shillings (7.5 million dollars) at harambee meetings he attended, according to the Kenyan Weekly Review.

During one weekend in September a combined total of 1,788,130 shillings (225,000 dollars) was pulled in at 23 Harambee meetings. Individual totals varied from 3,000 shillings for orphans in one village to more than 400,000 shillings for the construction of a local dispensary. In the latter case, the meeting was chaired by a Minister who himself contributed 136,601 shillings on behalf of the President and five other Cabinet Ministers.

Nationwide coverage

But the big attraction harambee meetings, organised by top political leaders, can attract four million shillings or more in a single afternoon. The cheques and cash donations are handed to the organiser, who announces by loudspeaker who has given how much. State radio and television news programmes broadcast the details nationwide.

Yet in a new development, some junior Members of Parliament have started asking how certain people manage to donate considerable sums of money to worthy causes at such frequent intervals.

Home and Constitutional Affairs Minister Charles Njonjo has responded indignantly that the money was contributed by "friends", while Local Government Minister Stanley Oloitiptip said that if he contacted some of his friends by telephone before a harambee meeting they would pledge money without any discussion, because they had confidence in him. On that same weekend in September, Mr. Oloitiptip and his friends donated 181,500 shillings.

Official pressure...

The friends in question, generally businessmen, stay in the background.

While most of the contributions from villagers are made on a voluntary basis, there have been cases of local officials putting on a bit of pressure to increase the contents of local coffers.

Last year the Daily Nation reported several cases in Mombasa where local people had been forced to pay extra in order to obtain a passport, renew a licence or get the water connected.

There is no suggestion that any blackmail or bribery is involved in local harambee meetings, but the newspaper has reported : "At times, local leaders have imposed draconian measures to ensure everyone contributes the agreed minimum. This led to the poor members of society selling their most prized possessions - goats, sheep, cattle - to raise the stipulated amounts".

Poverty line...

The nation noted : "The least contributors expect is that their contributions will be well accounted for. Some leaders have accounted for harambee cash commendably. But there are others who see in such funds an easy way to cross the poverty line".

Recently, controversies have arisen over two harambee meetings. One was the result of a fund-raising session last year at a harambee organised on behalf of local MP Philip Leakey, for the benefit of 21 local schools. Press reports at the time said that four million shillings was raised, but nobody seems sure of the exact figure involved. What is certain, however, is that the21 schools, all of which contributed themselves, are still asking where the money went.

Direct benefit

There have been suggestions that the embryo scandal could be part of an attack on Mr. Leakey, the country's only white Member of Parliament, who is currently abroad.

At another district near Nairobi, a high official has called for an enquiry into the reported disappearance of 220,000 shillings collected at a harambee meeting last year.

But not all haramboe meetings get into the headlines. Each weekend small-scale local meetings throughout Kenya pull in funds which do directly benefit the local inhabitants. These gatherings take place in a genuine spirit of self-help and meet more than economic needs, for they also provide a forum for officials to explain Government policy or review local affairs. And they also provide an opportunity for early electioneering. (A.F.P.)

The center's general administrator, (Alsenin Saggery) told Liberian news agency today that indications from spot checks yesterday and today as well as [words indistinct] complaints from the head nurses and supervisors of nurses show that the nurses have resumed duty and everything is now normal. The nurses and the paramedical personnel at the John F. Kennedy Medical Center went on strike yesterday to back their demands for better salaries, working conditions and transportation to and from work as well as free uniforms. Head of state Doe, who visited the center yesterday, informed the nurses that an executive committee has been set up to look into the grievances and problems of nurses and pledged personally to solve their transportation problems. COMMUNIQUE ON MOUSSA TRAORE VISIT TO BRAZIL

[Final communique issued in Brasilia on 7 October 1981 at the end of Malian President Moussa Traore's visit to Brazil]

[Text] At the invitation of the Brazilian Government, his excellency Gen Moussa Traore, secretary general of the Democratic Union of Malian People [UDMP] and president of the Republic of Mali, paid an official visit to Brazil on 6 and 7 October 1981. He was accompanied by their excellencies Joao Pereira Silva, minister of rural development of the Republic of Cape Verde and minister charged with coordination of the interstate committee to fight drought in the Sahel [CILSS]; Alioune Blondin Beye, minister of foreign affairs and international cooperation; N'fagnanama, minister of agriculture; Maki Koreissi Aguibou Tall, Malian ambassador to Brazil, and a high-powered delegation.

The president of the Republic of Mali was received by his excellency Antonio Aureliano Chaves Mendosa, vice president and acting president of the Republic of Brazil. They held talks in an atmosphere of confidence and mutual respect on bilateral relations and common international issues. Gen Moussa Traore was also received by their excellencies Deputy Nelson Marcheza, president of the Chamber of Deputies; Senator Jarbas Passarinho, president of the Federal Senate and by Franscico Manuel Xavier de Alburquerque, president of the Supreme Federal Court.

The minister of foreign affairs and international cooperation of Mali and the minister of external relations of Brazil held talks on regional and international topics and on ways to strengthen bilateral relations and ties of friendship between the two countries.

On this occasion, the two ministers signed an agreement on behalf of their respective governments, to set up a Mali-Brazil joint commission for economic cooperation and an agreement on cultural, scientific and technical cooperation. These agreements will contribute to the strengthening of bilateral relations. The minister of foreign affairs and international cooperation also held talks with Ernane Galveas, minister of finance, on the economic and financial aspects of the bilateral cooperation. The minister of agriculture and the minister charged with the coordination of the CILSS paid visits to their excellencies Angelo Amaury Stabile, minister of agriculture and Mario David Andreazza, minister for interior with whom they discussed matters concerning agriculture and the development of arid zones.

During their talks the two presidents expressed their concern over international tensions and the increasing gap between nations. They stressed the importance of the progress on the North-South dialog and they expressed their confidence in the results that could be obtained from the forthcoming Cancun meeting. They condemned the racist regime of South Africa for its persistent violation of the UN Charter and they expressed their support for the self-determination of the people of Namibia, in accordance with UN Resolution 435. They expressed their satisfaction at the progress made in the negotiations concerning the solution to the issue of the Western Sahara in light of UN Resolution 1514 and thanks to the efforts undertaken by the OAU. The two presidents also expressed their satisfaction with the new prospects for the development of the relations between Brazil and Mali and stressed their desire and their determination to strengthen these relations in the economic, cultural, scientific and technical fields, in the interest of the two governments and for the benefit of the two peoples.

The two presidents discussed extensively the dramatic situation to which the Sahel people have been subjected for more than a decade now as they have been hit severely by this endemic drought. The two presidents examined the most appropriate ways to solve this serious issue. The vice president, acting as the interim president of the Federative Republic of Brazil, conveyed to the president of Mali the solidarity of the Brazilian Government and people with the people of the Sahel region in their constant struggle for development and in fighting obstacles created by drought. The Brazilian Government reiterated its availability to support them in this struggle and within the limits of its means and with the framework of the UN programs for the development of the region. At the end of his visit, the president of the Republic of Mali expressed his gratitude for the warm welcome and the cordial hospitality given him and his delegation during his stay in Brazil.

CEREMONIES MARK ANNIVERSARY OF LIBYAN REVOLUTION

Libya Assured of Support

Mesnil Phoenix LA VOIX DE L'ISLAM in French Sep 81 pp 1, 6

[Editorial]

[Text] This special edition marks the 12th anniversary of the glorious El Fateh Revolution, the revolution of man, the revolution of Islam. Guided by its Islamic and humanitarian vocation, our newspaper has always been in the avant-garde of the accomplishments of that glorious revolution. Moreover, in order to better serve these just and humanitarian causes, we are in the process of arming ourselves more strongly. In the future, we shall have a good team and the work of Insha-Allah will be more effective.

On this occasion of the 12th anniversary of the glorious El Fateh Revolution, we wish to warn our readers against any Machiavellian campaigns of the imperialists aimed at discrediting the great guide of the revolution in the sublime battle he is waging to promote Islam and the unity of the Umah [community] throughout the world. Let us emphasize here the important role of the Islam Call Society in that direction.

On this day of the 12th anniversary, we want to assure the Libyan people and the guide of the Libyan revolution of our whole-hearted support, extending to them our best wishes and warm congratulations on the occasion of the 12th anniversary of the El Fateh Revolution.

[Speech by A. R. Peeroo on 12th anniversary of the El Fateh Revolution; place not given]

[Text] I should like to take this opportunity of the celebration of the 12th anniversary of the glorious El Fateh Revolution to present my best wishes and warm congratulations to the brother Libyan people. On this 1 September 1981, the Libyan people are celebrating the 12th anniversary of the glorious El Fateh Revolution.

At the same time, it is celebrating 12 years of progress, freedom, unity, complete independence, joy, sovereignty and success.

Our Libyan brothers and sisters must be proud because they are the only ones in the world to make up a master people. Thanks to their free will, they have established a Jamahiriya based on complete power of the people and whose sources of inspiration are only the Koran, the "only true constitution of Muslims."

While at this very moment, the masses everywhere else in the world are duped by fallacious slogans that try to justify the existence of usurper and oppressor governments exercising power in their own interest, one voice is raised to invite the masses to fight and struggle to root out injustice, looting, oppression, domination, capitalism, imperialism, facism, racism, Zionism, dictatorships and the policy of lies: That voice is the voice of a son of the desert, the voice of a savior, the voice of a faithful believer, the voice of a conscience, the voice of Mu'ammar Qadhdhafi, the man who was behind the Libyan revolution, whose philosophies and ideas have inspired many other revolutions.

On this anniversary day, I also wish to congratulate someone who has done a great deal to bring together the two brother peoples, which the Mauritians and Libyans are: brother Ibrahim al-Jaddy.

Long live brother Mu'ammar Qadhdhafi. Long live the Libyan people. Long live the Al Fateh Revolution.

Al-Fateh Abadan.

Better Relations, Cooperation Hailed

Mesnil Phoenix LA VOIX DE L'ISLAM in French Sep 81 p 1

[Speech by Brother Ibrahim al-Jaddy, on the occasion of the 12th anniversary of the glorious 1 September revolution; place not given]

[Excerpt] Since the opening of a Libyan office in Mauritius, there have been many exchanges and much cooperation because above all, our two peoples believe in each other. They have mutual feelings for one another and cultivate a feeling of belonging. I believe that there can be no doubt about it: Sharing a common fate, we are determined to be in the Movement of Nonaligned Nations, to which we should like to give its rightful place. We work for the same ideals, for which it is worthwhile fighting: justice, peace and security. This worthy fight is not, as one might expect, without its problems from our traditional enemies, who want to divide us in order better to dominate us, as they have always done in the past.

Finally, I should like to assure the friendly Mauritian people of the total willingness of the Libyan Arab people to develop the relations that are mutually advantageous to our two countries.

Therefore, on these days, when the Mauritian people celebrate with us the great day of freedom and dignity, which 1 September is, I formulate my wishes of success, prosperity and happiness for that brother people. Al-Fateh forever!

SOVIETS SEEK TO INCREASE TRADE RELATIONS

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 28 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] The Soviet Union has offered its services for the construction of a flour mill in Mauritius. Such a proposal was made to the Mauritian Government yesterday by the Soviet Embassy trade adviser, Yuri Stephanchuk, in the presence of Ambassador S. F. Pankov. The proposal appears to be very attractive, especially since the cost of construction of such an enterprise will be 50 percent lower than the $20-million figure (about 160 million rupees) recently estimated by a firm of specialists. The government, which is now studying the flour mill proposal, will consider the Soviet offer. It is the second time that the USSR has proposed construction of a flour mill, the first time in 1979.

This proposal was reiterated at the time of the opening of negotiations between the officials of the Soviet Embassy and those of the Mauritian Government concerning the sale of Mauritian tea to the Soviet Union (see information below). D. Basant Rai, minister of industry and commerce, who headed the negotiations, said that the Soviet proposal will be transmitted to Mauritian authorities.

Stephanchuk stated that the Soviets have build 17 flour mills in India, whence their interest in completing such a project in Mauritius. However, the financial question remains. Within this context, Stephanchuk was unable to be specific. He hinted at the possibility of Soviet financing, but he thought better of it later, stating that negotiations would have to take place between the two parties if the Soviet offer were accepted. He also proposed the sending of a Mauritian delegation to the USSR within the framework of the project.

Stephanchuk subsequently indicated numerous possibilities of cooperation between the USSR and Mauritius, particularly in the field of fishing and development of the Merchant Marine on a regional basis. Regarding fishing, joint Russian-Mauritian projects were considered. With respect to development of that particular sector, the Soviet Union proposed the sale, with facilities of payment, of very modern fishing boats. The USSR is even willing to train Mauritians in industrial fishing, Stephanchuk added.

The question of exporting jeans made in Mauritian was also brought up by the commercial adviser. Soviet firms have received numerous samples, he said, and they are now being looked at in Moscow.

RUSSIAN SCIENTISTS TO VISIT—A number of eminent Russian scientists will be in Mauritius from 8 to 14 September, within the framework of a botany research visit. The scientists will come on a Soviet naval research vessel, the "Academician Bernardski," which will make a 4-day stop in Port-Louis. At the time of their visit to Mauritius, the Soviet scientists will undertake studies of certain species of plants from various regions of the country. It is highly likely that some of them will give talks on aspects of this science. It should be noted that for a number of months, several units from foreign navies have stopped off in Mauritius. An oceanographic research boat from the National Institute of India was in Port-Louis, with eminent Indian scientists specializing in marine technology on board. It should be emphasized that at the time of a conference at the University of Mauritius, the director of the Institute brought up the existence of a large quantity of mineral resources in Mauritius' territorial waters, including manganese nodules. In this connection, he reported that the total volume of the different ores in the Indian Ocean is some 15 million tons. [Text] [Port Louis THE NATION in French 31 Aug 81 p 1] 11,464

SOVIETS PLEASED WITH RELATIONS—The new ambassador of the Soviet Union to Mauritius, N. Pankov, presented his credentials to the governor general, Sir Dayendranath Burrenchobay, yesterday and paid a courtesy visit to the prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam. At a ceremony at the Reduit, Pankov stated that he was undertaking the noble mission of representing the Soviet Union in Mauritius and took advantage of the opportunity to express his best wishes to the Mauritian Government and people. He recalled that keeping the peace was the main objective of the USSR's foreign policy and emphasized that his country's Parliament had adopted a resolution asking the nations of the entire world to work on behalf of disarmament and demilitarization. Evoking relations between Mauritius and the USSR, the new ambassador reaffirmed that his country "has always been building and will continue to build its relations with Mauritius, as well as with other countries, according to Lenin's principles of friendship, equality, respect of sovereignty, noninterference in internal affairs and mutually beneficial cooperation." Pankov said that his country is following the efforts of the people and government of Mauritius with great interest and positive feelings, efforts aimed at consolidating their national independence, developing national cooperation and ensuring peace in the Indian Ocean. "We are satisfied to note that in 13 years, friendly relations have developed between Mauritius and the USSR," Pankov concluded. [Text] [Port Louis THE NATION in French 19 Aug 81 p 1] 11,464

SOVIET GRANTS SCHOLARSHIPS--This year, the government of the Soviet Union is granting 60 scholarships to Mauritian students as part of a cultural agreement signed between the two countries. To date, 18 Mauritians, appointed by public organizations, have already left for the USSR to continue their studies in various fields, including fishing, civil engineering, agriculture and medicine. Other scholarship recipients will leave after the government has completed a list being drawn up by the Ministry of Education. The Soviet Embassy in Floreal is awaiting an answer on the subject before informing the Soviet Government of the final arrival of the Mauritians. TEA FOR USSR--The government expects to market 1,000 tons of tea on the Soviet market during the 1981-1982 fiscal year. Within this framework, it will make an official request to the Soviet Union so that the amount of tea to go to that country will be doubled, going from 500 tons last year to 1,000 tons next year. The proposal will be made today to the Soviet delegation, headed by trade adviser Y. Stephanchuk and Dayanandlall Basant Rai, acting minister of agriculture, during the negotiations that will begin today. If the Mauritian proposal should be accepted, Mauritius will be able to considerably relieve the situation of its tea production sale. The government has assured itself of a profitable market in the Soviet Union since 1979, exporting 300 tons. This amount was to be increased to 500 tons last year. FRENCH GENERAL'S TOUR--Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, president and founder of the RPT [Rally of the Togolese People] and president of the republic, met at the President's Palace yesterday morning with Gen Jean Gillard, head of the military cooperation mission. General Gillard told the press that his visit to the chief of state fit into the context of a tour of a number of African countries aimed at reviewing different cooperation problems. "Since 1 August, I have been appointed as head of the military cooperation mission and in that capacity, I handle a number of countries in which the French Ministry of Cooperation is interested." Gillard then explained that he had come to Togo first in order to review the different problems connected with French-Togolese cooperation. Finally, Gillard expressed satisfaction over the fact that President Eyadema received him in Pya after the 1974 maneuvers. [Excerpts] [Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 17 Sep 81 pp 1, 12] 11,454

KOREAN SHIPMENT--At the Autonomous Port of Lome yesterday, Ayite Gachin Mivedor, member of the Political Bureau and permanent director of the RPT, received building materials to be used to complete construction of the Party School, given by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Recalling the importance of the trip which Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, president and founder of the RPT and president of the republic, made to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in September 1974, Mivedor emphasized that exchanges between the parties, the two governments and our two peoples have helped consolidate these bonds of friendship. "The arrival of two Korean ships is a prelude to the great voyage which Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema could perhaps make to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea," he said, "in order to further consolidate bonds of cooperation between the two countries." POLITICAL, ECONOMIC SITUATION DISCUSSED

Mobutu's Extended Respite

Paris LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE in French Sep 81 p 16

[Text] Open rebellions, latent guerrilla movements, more or less recent accusations by political opponents: one warning after another over the years directed to President Mobutu, who, since his installation in office in 1965, has succeeded somehow in preserving his country's territorial unity. Another of the president's merits pertains to his rather exceptional ability to ensure the perpetuity of the regime, in spite of the complete failure of his administration.

These limited performances depend on fiction, however. Because without the massive military and financial support of the Western powers, the regime would have collapsed long ago. Chaos was narrowly prevented twice in Shaba--in 1977 and 1978--by foreign intervention. Many times, in recent years, international financial circles have flown to help an unstable economy, not only by providing it with the necessary credits, but also primarily by taking over directly management of vital institutions, like the Central Bank, by means of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Its strategic location in the heart of the African continent and its immense mineral wealth won for Zaire this special attention that has never ceased to find expression since it became independent in 1960 and the war that resulted.

At the end of June this year, another respite was granted to President Mobutu owing to a loan of over $1 billion from the IMF, which knows how to be more parsimonious under other circumstances. Following closely behind, the leading Western money lenders granted a readjustment of the foreign debt amounting to $4.4 billion.

Nevertheless, a few days later, the bishops' conference had a pastoral letter read, right in the Kinshasa cathedral, denouncing "the shameless exploitation, the plunder organized to the benefit of foreigners and their intermediaries, while the main body of the people are sunk in poverty, in situations that are, at times, brought about artificially." The former prime minister, Nguza Karl I Bond, who is thinking of running for president in 1984, speaks, on his part, of his Brussels exile as "dishonesty with regard to the people."

Who then, in the Zairian establishment and among its foreign allies, is laboring most under delusions? President Mobutu, who frequently invokes in his defense the corruption and incompetency of his officials, or the international financiers, who are especially concerned about restoring an economic stability that can revive confidence in business circles? Actually, in the absence of important structural changes that would cast doubt on the present system of exploitation of the national resources, what prominent political person would have a sufficiently strong stature and national influence today to guarantee a change in continuity? This uncertainty is also contributing to confort the regime, while the country's deterioration is worsening.

Regime's Survival Basis

Paris LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE in French Sep 81 pp 16-17

[Article by Paul Serlon: "Motivating Forces of a System Centered on Survival"]

[Text] How long? This question is asked regularly in connection with Zaire, which is still sinking deeper "silently," so to speak, in stagnation (see the table at the end of this article). The plot (?) by young officers within the Army (1976), the two Shaba wars (1977 and 1978), the country's financial and economic bankruptcy, the discreet but constant exodus of a number of Zairians to "friendly" Western countries, culminating with the recent resignation of the First State Commissioner, Nguza Karl I Bond, were unable to get the better of a regime that appears to be capable of surviving every vicissitude.

The secret of this longevity seems to depend not so much on a regime of terror and repression as on a system of government operating by means of patronage and based on periodic plundering of the country's resources.

First of all, patronage. Mobutu the dictator? Mobutu the man alone? Mobutu, one of the richest men in the world? Simple, if not simplistic, images are carried in the Western press to characterize the top of a pyramid built on mechanisms of patrimonial redistribution. The various steps on that pyramid do not necessary coincide with institutions laid down over a moving, fluid reality. The Popular Movement of the Revolution (MPR), the only Zairian party), ministerial services, civil services are only labels concealing much more subtle hierarchies.

At the head of this patrimonial structure, a presidential clique consisting of liege men, often brought together by belonging to one and the same region historically treated unfavorably by colonization, north of the Equator. Within this group are found, jumbled together, uncle Litho, son Werna, plan commissioner Bokana, General Bolisi, the untouchable head of military security, loyal Seti, of civil security, and so on. A certain number of great international "adventurers" who play a more or less permanent role as "advisers" to the president (the American Tempelsman, the Frenchman De la Tribouille, and so on) are connected with this clique.

One step below, a large number of businessmen, civil servants and courtiers who owe their privileges to their ethnic and regional membership or to "imperial fiat." Finally, at the bottom of the power pyramid, a rather considerable mass of elites forming the "recruiting reserve" of government authority--civil servants, intellectuals, people's commissioners, and so on--and who may be pushed overnight into high responsibilities or be dismissed, beaten, tortured, imprisoned just as suddenly. This is the stratum in which signs are observed of discontent, of inclinations toward revolt, as is evidenced by the affair of the 13 Kasai deputies, representing regional groups politically (but not necessarily economically) in the minority with regard to the dominant ethnic group of the presidential clique.

This kind of system, to which the moral label of corruption is applied, sinks its roots deeply within the civilian society. At the highest as well as at the lowest level, "everything is sold and everything is bought," as President Mobutu himself observed. The barons of the regime, gently fustigated by the president ("Steal, but steal intelligently," he told them publicly), are on top of the ladder. At the very bottom, are the little executants whose task is to keep the pyramid in balance: an underpaid soldiery living off the citizens, the thousands of little national security informers who swarm in African cities.

Plunder Economy

A modern civil service system was able to be established in the heart of the absolutist, patrimonial state of France of the Bourbons (against the barons), which only developed shortly after the French Revolution. In Zaire, the centralizing state depends on myth and ideology. In the balance sheet that they draw up of 20 years of political independence, F. Bezy, J.-Ph. Peemans and J.-M. Wautelet fell precisely in the trap of this state that plays at being one. Reasoning like neo-Marxist economists, they find it very hard to justify the strengthening of this state after 1965 with the help of very restricted criteria: resumption of control of the mineral resources, quantitative increase of public investment, establishment of new relations with foreign capital, and so on[1].

The absence of a state and the way in which patronage operates make the "Zairian system" a survival system and not a system of consistent, coordinated class exploitation, a system in which the emergence and development of a "national bourgeoisie" have no place. Because patronage can develop only by means of a systematic plundering of resources bringing in immediate profits. This plundering economy does not consist only in diversion and squandering of public funds by the leadership class, a diversion amounting to billions. It is also caused by a number of industrial investment projects carried out in the framework of a so-called "import-substitution" policy since the beginning of the 1970's and burdening debt service for years to come, as is shown by a projection of service of that debt up to 1987:

Second half 1980:	$283.3 million
1981:	$759.3 million
1982:	$766.4 million
1983:	$703.1 million
1984:	$739.2 million
1985:	$658.1 million
1986:	$586.7 million
1987 and beyond:	$2,149.1 million

This enormous burden is going to force the country to run constantly after new readjustments, respacing of payments and refinancing of a debt amounting at present to over $5 billion.

[1] F. Bezy, J.Ph. Peemans and J.-M. Wautelet, "Accumulation et sous-developpement au Zaire" (Accumulation and Underdevelopment in Zaire), Louvain-la-Neuve: Louvain University Presses, 1981.

Mention can be made, among a number of disastrous industrial projects--they are operating at only 10 to 30 percent of their capacity--construction of the longest high-tension electric transmission line in the world (cost: $1 billion to date), which has no known user along the entire line; establishment of a steel plant producing sectional steel, concrete reinforcement rods and wire at prices four times higher than the price of the same imported products; installation of a satellite telecommunication system unparalleled in any developed country; construction of an ultramodern radio and television city, kept in a state of operation by many millions; construction, in Kisangani, of a luxurious international airport, unutilized for that purpose, by a Belgian company threatened with failure in Belgium at that time.

The list of industrial aberrations committed since 1970 has not been exhausted and Zaire holds, in that field, the sad record of "miscarried" investments per square kilometer. In this connection, the West's responsibility is directly involved, both by means of research departments, engineering companies and multinational firms offering a priori a virtuous front of purety and competence, and by means of great international adventurers, all good friends of the president and business associates of the members of the Zairian leadership stratum.

But the most extraordinary point is that, in spite of a catastrophic indebtedness, representing a record percentage of 30 percent of exports of goods and services, the country's economic future is still being mortgaged by new projects in defiance of good sense and that "independent" consultants and engineering offices are preparing with an imperturbable good faith and with the help of statistical projections that no longer have any significance in an officially bankrupt economy. Two large-scale projects are especially being prepared. They will increase the national debt by some additional hundreds of millions of dollars. On the one hand, construction of a aluminum electrolysis plant (cost: $1 billion, including interest) by the ALUSUISSE Group, which will be granted, through a mixed company (ALUZAIRE), one of the lowest electricity supply rates in the world, total, unlimited exemption of export duties on the aluminum produced and a 10-year veto right on any other aluminum project desired to be established in Zaire. On the other hand, construction of a deep-water port at Banana (cost: $900 million for the 1981-1995 period), which will involve the demise, in the more or less long term, of the present port of Matadi for whose restoration millions of dollars are still being invested, nevertheless, and where the same tonnage is handled as in 1953.

Achievement of these two projects is to be associated with the recent decision by President Mobuto and his associates to establish an industrial free zone in the Bas Zaire region. In short, it is nothing less than a question of setting up an enclave in which foreign companies, using electricity--unutilized up to now--from the powerplants of the Inga-II hydroelectric complex, will benefit not only from an electricity rate lower than the cost of its production, but also from a total exemption of import and export duties. These companies will be under a special administration directly under the office of the president of the Republic. Thus a strategy of turning Zaire into an enclave was carried out. It was already stated 2 years ago with the famous OTRAG[2] affair and it is reminiscent of the policy of setting up trading posts at the beginning of colonial imperialism.

Of course, the patrimonial regime presently installed has no desire to negotiate industrial contracts that would involve an attempt to come out of underdevelopment and to become free of the protection of big capital. Nevertheless, that kind of plundering, that kind of squandering of resources have limitations, both from the material and the human point of view, not only for Zaire, but also for the West. In fact, independently of any moral judgment on "corruption," the indebtedness resulting from the "grandiose" achievements of that kind of country that is far from being a special case is included in the framework of the present instability of the international banking system, whose crisis has been becoming more plausible every year. Moreover, contrary to the ideological talk of the "politicians," this kind of costly investments has only little impact with regard to a recovery of employment in the European countries affected by the crisis, precisely because highly capitalistic investments, if not investments at truly usurious interest rates, are involved. Worse yet, they mortgage for a more or less long term a capitalism that needs markets, but that does not engage in a market economy with its strategy of squandering.

Complicity of Banking Circles

International financial and economic institutions, ranging from the European Development Fund (EDF), recently criticized for its management errors, to the IMF, blamed for too much nearsightedness and a blind adherence to the principles of liberal economy, have taken the risk of coordinating Zaire's recolonization and still grant it supplements. The latest measure is the extension of credit facilities to Zaire by the World Bank (over $1 billion), formally granted within the framework of the recovery plan, but that, actually, is tied to the forthcoming respacing of debt payments. In exchange, Zaire has granted management of a certain number of key posts to foreign experts (customs, Central Bank, transportation, finance department, and so on), in addition to a series of devaluations that have made the deterioration of the people's living standard still worse.

These institutions risk, however, having considerable difficulties in suppressing the dual pressure exerted by investors ready for any easy stroke of luck and by the Zairian regime guaranteeing them. Caught in the trap of a political and economic pseudoneutrality, they can, in any case, only limit the damage. They can oblige the state to pay back its debts and they can force it to observe an "acceptable" financial orthodoxy.

Undoubtedly, history never repreats itself entirely. It will be recalled, however, that the end of the United Nations intervention in the Congo, which had created a semblance of formal political stability, coincides with the start of the large popular uprisings in 1963-1964.

Opposition Without Political Strategy

Paris LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE in French Sep 81 pp 16-17

[Article by Jean-Claude Willame: "Divisions and Weaknesses of an Opposition Without Political Strategy"]

[Text] After 6 years of accelerated deterioration of the economic and social situation, the small amount of social-political protest in Zaire can be amazing. And, nevertheless, there is no lack of reasons. During the last 10 years, most of the wage earners have seen their buying power reduced by around 85 percent. It no longer amounts, on the average, to more than 5 percent of its 1960 level. In a study on everyday living in Kisangani[1], Jules Lammens estimates that an unskilled worker who would use all his wages for food could offer his 6-person family (present average) only 55 grams of bread per person per day, or 125 grams of chikwangue, or 60 grams of rice. These figures show the gap between wage income and the minimum living wage.

Therefore, we have to note the sharp rise in mortality and morbidity, the partial or total turnabout in rural areas, multiplication of "compensatory" activities: work by women and children, prostitution, theft, extension of family farming.

Now, the exceptional seriousness of the crisis plays a part, aside from any natural catastrophe or political troubles. The country has an unequalled mining, agricultural and energy potential and an infrastructure superior to the infrastructure of most of the other Black African countries.

The responsibilities of the leadership class are evident: systematic diversion of public funds to personal purposes, large-scale fraudulent exports, aberrant economic contracts with multinational companies concluded depending on the amount of the bribes, and so on. They are so well known that self-criticism has become an absolutely periodic exercise for the top-level officials of the regime (only the president and his family are not liable to it). But all the talk on the "Zairian malady" has done nothing.

Does the cliche about a resigned people, often served up to describe the present situation, agree with reality? Is protest probably the prerogative of the officers participating the 1975 and 1978 putsch, of the Congolese National Liberation Front (FLNC), of the group of East Kasai members of Parliament or else of some prominent person in the opposition ready to try to wear the leopard cap?

Controlled News

It is true that the brutal deterioration of living conditions, so far, has not given rise to social-political protest movement similar, in their intensity or scope, to the struggle for decolonization (1956-1960) or, especially, to the insurrections in the first years of independence. Is it necessary, for all that, to infer from this a kind of collective lack of will power ill-concealed by a few resounding statements by opponents in exile or by a few open letters from Zairian members of Parliament and bishops? But mere knowledge of events pertaining to social or political protest is burdened by the strict control maintained by the regime over the news media. Thus, the violent combats that brought the elite battalions of the Zairian Armed Forces in conflict with the guerrilla fighters of the People's Revolution Party (PRP), from 1970 to 1979, in the regions around Lake Tanganyika, were completely passed over in silence. Strikes, street demonstrations, upsetting of monuments to the glory of the Popular Movement of the Revolution (MPR) (the single party) or of its head, never are reported, even in the regional press. To such a degree, that a messianic-type movement, the Nzambi Mpungu[2], which had given rise to a certain amount of effervescence in Kwilu, in 1977, before it was subjected, in January 1978, to the most extreme kind of repression by the Fourth Paratrooper Battalion (around 2,000 villagers masscred), was never mentioned by the Zairian press. Until a news campaign by the Zaire Committee[3] alerted international public opinion and prompted President Mobutu to interpret the disturbances as ... an infiltration by the FLNC in Kwilu.

If this burden on news is taken into account, it must be realized that, in comparison with 1960-1965, armed opposition to the Mobutu regime has remained either very limited (areas controlled by the PRP) or very sporadic (the two FLNC offensives in Shaba).

The state of relative calm of rural areas is due, in part, to a lack of work in the rank-and-file of the opposition organizations. Nevertheless, a series of economic and sociological factors are added to this.

Problems of marketing agricultural products and deterioration of the exchange rates have most often given rise to reaction of falling back on self-subsisence. The rural exodus--that the acute crisis in the cities is tending to slow down at present--cut off from the rural regions a considerable part of their most dynamic strata, especially young persons, while the decline of inudstrial and export crops caused a decrease in the number of agricultural wage earners, in absolute figures.

The practice introduced by the Mobutu regime consisting in appointing to the principal posts administrators from other provinces has not attenuated the distribution of privileges in accordance with regional or ethnic criteria. (The top-level official in a province surrounds himself with a following mostly native to his region). But that forestalls that explosive potential created by frequent rivalries between representatives of neighboring ethnic groups, without ceasing, for all that, to conceal class conflicts by ethnic-regional antagonisms.

Finally, erosion of the power of the traditional chiefs has deprived rural regions of leaders that might take over the peasant grievance movement. To say nothing of the deterrent effect exercised by the omnipresence of troops, little inclined to discussion in case of disagreements. From 1960 to 1964, although excluded from the central government, political parties laying claim to Lumumbaism were able to maintain and even strengthen their organizations in the provinces in the east and in Kwilu. This factor was a determinant when it was a question of mobilizing and then of staffing the peasant insurrectional movement. The crushing of insurrections and then the consolidation of the centralized, monolithic structure of the MPR put an end to the organizations of the former Lumumbaist parties, disclosing their inability to adapt themselves to clandestinity and the fragility of their foundation on the people.

In the absence of a political philosophy and action framework, the resistance and will to change of the rural regions tend to find expression by means of a religious symbolism. Although they are prohibited by the regime, religious sects are increasing in number and are propagating. For example, the several thousand members of Nzambi Mpungu believed that, through the grace of their prophet, Kasongo, they enjoyed a magical invulnerability enabling them to attack businessmen and local administration without danger. Established in the very region in which Pierre Mulele had taught, in 1963, the principles of people's war, this tragic experience shows the relative removal of part of the rural world from the sphere of politics. It should be noted, however, that young persons, who were the spearhead of the Mulelist insurrections, joined the Kasongo sect hardly at all.

The authorized churches, primarily the Catholic Church, are playing an increasing role as the situation deteriorates in the interior of the country. Of the three former "pillars" of the Belgian colony (with the companies and administration), the Catholic Church is undoubtedly the only one still functioning with some degree of effectiveness. In addition to its traditional catechetical and social functions, the Catholic Church became a large-scale economic agent in keeping with the size of the domains granted to it by Leopold II. Today, in many places, it is still the sole guarantor of maintenance of a minimum of educational and health infrastructure and of rural activities incorporated in the monetary system. Owing to the discredit affecting the competitive ideology of "Mobutism," this state of affairs gives the Catholic Church an unusual capability of "having weight" in the field of politics. Added to that is the renovation of its basic structures. Deacons, a kind of intermediaries between the priests and the mass of the faithful, enjoying broad autonomy, have become leaders of basic communities. Thus, the institution of the Church is perceived as the sole setting for a relatively free discussion of social and political problems and as a place in which a minimum of solidarity takes concrete form at a time when the problem of survival is raised with unprecedented acuteness.

The Catholic hierarchy, which is aware of the fact that it had to mark off its distances more definitely with regard to the regime, in order to retain its credit among the mass of the faithful, had already addressed a forceful letter to President Mobutu, in 1978. The behavior of the leadership class and of the political structures were criticized in it bluntly (only the president was not personally questioned), but priority was given to the effort to improve the moral standard, to "change the way of thinking," to structural changes. The course of change advocated by the majority of the religious hierarchy is still individual conversion, in order to establish a solidarity between the governing authorities and the people governed. The Zairian Catholic Church is obviously quite remote from the radicalism of the upholders of a combatant church in Latin America. Without doubt, its colonial past is still too close. Therefore, the assumption can be put forward that, if the present regime were to collapse, the political role of the Catholic Church would consist in being quite more a stabilization force than a change force.

Grievances in the Cities

On the other hand, in the cities, the grievance movement has been undergoing, in general, a real development since 1975. Although strikes are forbidden, they have become a preferential tool. Committees of labor union delegates, elected in the rank-and-file, are habitually their initiators, in total opposition to the labor union leadership whose task consists in preventing the emergence of any grievance. The organizers of strikes, capable of immobilizing the country's leading services and enterprises (KDL [Kinshasa-Dilolo-Lubumbashi Railway Company] and GECAMINES [General Quarries and Mines Company] in 1976, banks and other services in Kinshasa in 1978, ONATRA [National Transportation Office] in 1979, and, especially, in the sector of education), put forth economic grievances: wage level and regularity, working conditions. Nevertheless, since 1980, on occasion of strikes by teachers in Kinshasa and the strike of the campus of UNAZA (National University of Zaire), the tone of the tracts and lists of grievances has been taking on a political aspect: criticism of the power structures, of the privileges of the oligarchy.

The new lower middle class (employees in the private or public sector, teachers) has shown undeniable dynamism in this connection. Without doubt this is due to a brutal deterioration of their real income and to an increasingly difficult access to the sphere of privileges. Devaluation of a diploma as a vehicle for social advancement strikes this class directly and makes it more sensitive to the iniquity of the actual selection methods (ethnic and regional criteria).

The question raised at present is one of knowing to what extent protest by workers and employees can expand by providing itself with an autonomous organization needed for pursuing longer term objectives.

With the noteworthy exception of the PRP, strictly political protest began an upsurge starting in 1975. A turning-point year that witnessed added to domestic difficulties--failure of "Zairianization-radicalization," trial of senior officers involved in the "unsuccessful coup set up"--defeat of the Zairian elite units that had intervened in Angola to rescue the Angolan National Liberation Front (FNLA). The Zairian State, a victim of its own economic policy and of the worldwide recession, was suddenly incapable of honoring service on its foreign debt.

The downward phase of the Mobutu regime thus began brutally. It was to be marked by a serious of political "blows" that bring out both the extreme shrinking of the social foundations of the regime and an astonishing capability to delaying the moment of its collapse. This paradox raises the question of the changes caused within the leadership by the process of "concentration-centralization" of political authority.

This process had two major consequences on the formation of the leadership class. On the one hand, it brought with it a real internal stratification on the basis of new criteria of selection and of "codes of conduct." On the other hand, it maintained, and even strengthen, the mechanisms for blocking any process of formation of an economic middle class. The stratum of the "cultured persons"[4] that was not very extensive, owing to the Belgian colonial education system, which gave priority to large-scale primary and lower secondary education, crowded in massively on the political and administrative structures when the country became independent. The great increase in the number of civil servants and the multiplication of provincial political bodies hardly promoted differentiation within a class that might be identified as a "political-administrative lower middle class."

The phenomenon of stratification of the leadership class has already been examined by J. Rymenam[5]. The president, who holds the essential political and judiciary powers, is the keystone of the MPR institutional system. This position gives him preferential access to the state's economic and financial prescriptions and decisions. President Mobutu, who simultaneously uses his institutional power to ensure a rapid rotation of political personnel and his access to the state's resources to initiate and maintain by corruption a system of a series of allegiances, has succeeded in managing "his" political class with remarkable effectiveness. But the undeniable talents of the gneral-president have succeeded at most in delaying the political expression of dissension within the political-administrative middle class, especially among the middle class of civil servants and the presidential "clique."

Nevertheless, several new factors have contributed to an intensification of this dissension:

[1.] The economic crisis and the strict supervision exercised by international experts over the state's financial instruments have definitely reduced the volume of funds for the purpose of maintaining political patronage. The "prejudice" thus caused becomes more pronounced in going down the political hierarchy.

[2.] The series of devaluations of the national currency (80-percent loss in value between 1978 and 1981) and demonetarization operation (end of December 1979)[6] affected the middle class of civil servants (university professors, middle-level managerial personnel, people's commissioners) who benefit only from a very limited access to foreign exchange. Differently from the upper levels of the state middle class who reserve for themselvesa the essential part of export-import licenses and who enjoy an almost guaranteed impunity for any contraband operation.

[3.] The policy of "democratization," started in July 1977 under pressure by Zaire's Western allies, enabled the people's commissioners (deputies) and some members of the political bureau, who came out of the new election method[7], to feel that they were invested with a legitimacy that did not deOend exclusively on the president's good will.

By means of the systematic application of certain freshly acquired rights--like the right to question the ministers or to establish parliamentary investigating committees--part of Parliament, grouping around 84 people's commissioners, proposed to affirm their autonomy with regard to the president's authority. This group of members of Parliament, interpreting directly the aspirations of the nonprivileged part of the middle class, became progressively a kind of enterprising counterauthority.

This resulted in a takeover of the Legislative Council[8], first by presidential censorship of parliamentary questioning (February 1980) and then by setting up, by means of a constitutional revision, a "Central Committee' of the MPR, with an excessively large membership, appointed entirely by the president and higher up in the chain of authority than Parliament.

Neutralization of the protest faction in Parliament was, nevertheless, to take a more dramatic turn at the time of the "Saint Sylvester plot" affair (December 1980). Thirteen people's commissioners who had signed an open letter, seized by Zairian Security even before its dissemination, were stripped of their parliamentary mandate and of their civil rights. Thus, an opposition's endeavor in legality came to an end. By means of this document, described as "subversive" by President Mobutu, the legalistic opposition noted the exacerbation of the conflict placing the strata participating directly in the state's authority in opposition to the strata kept away from it for discriminatory reasons.

"Umbrella or parachute, Citizen President-Founder, you 'alone' have the power to appoint, revoke, promote the members of the Zairian leadership class and, because of this, you should logically endorse the acts of your proteges whom you have indeed recognized as the plunderers and exploiters of our people. ... The social stratification to which these abusive practices, resulting for a personalized authority, have led to the creation, within our people, of tendencies involving extremely explosive divisions for the country's future. Because you are the author, agree, Citizen President-Founder, to assume the responsibility for this.[9]

"... As far as we know, there is no country in the world in which the concentration of economic and political authority is as scandalous!

"Therefore, has your regime replaced the 350 Belgian families (and not individuals) with a family of 50 persons?"[10]

Contrary to reports circulating shortly after the "Saint Sylvester plot" affair, the measures involving loss of rights did not punish solely the "Kasai Group," which had won fame in 1979 by denouncing the Katekelay massacres, but also deputies from Kwilu, Shaba and Kivu.

The increasing protest movement, felt by the regime as a threat coming from its own institutions--Army, university, labor union, Parliament--strengthened the criterion of family, ethnic and regional affinities with regard to selection of the holders of key posts in the state's structure. This reaction can only intensify still more the resentment of intellectuals or of representatives of the "blacklisted" regions (especially the two Kasais, Shaba and Kwilu). This is what is noted by Nguza Karl I Bond, former prime minister who went over to the opposition recently, in his "30 June (1981) Appeal":

"Zaire's present unity is becoming constantly more precarious. It is based on the force of bayonets. National cohesion, which was once the regime's attainment, is becoming frayed little by little."[11]

Forums Abroad

Regardless of the possible consequences of the aggravation of the conflicts between the various strata of the state's middle class, it must be concluded that the "legalistic" parliamentary opposition demonstrated the limits of its effectiveness. In the monarchical system defined by the Zairian Constitution, the president is the arbiter of legality in the last resort. Every criticism, regardless of whether it comes from the university, the Army, Parliament, falls, sooner or later, under the close scrutiny of the president.

Two facts radically reduce the effectiveness of any "legalistic" opposition: the impossibility of becoming an independent organization capable of mobilizing its potential basis among the people and the lack of a real economic base. In Zaire, business proceeds from politics. The leading businessmen are the leading political authorities, or they belong to their family. There is no real national middle class, but only a "middleman" middle class.

Moreover, only exile offers an opposition candidate a sought-for forum for his statements and conditions favoring establishment of an organization. But the weakness of establishment and a lack of intermediaries within the country inevitably orient activities toward the political authorities and pressure groups of the receiving country, as is evidenced by three recent initiatives: establishment of the ephemeral OLC (Congo Liberation Organization, 1978) by Mbeka Makosso, former ambassador of Zaire to Iran; the setting up, in 1980, of the CLC (Congo Liberation Council), under the impetus of Mungul Diaka, former minister of higher education, and the "30 June Appeal" of Nguza Karl I Bond, 2 months after his spectacular resignation from his duties as prime minister.

The lack of a real strategy for takingover the power expresses both the inability to consolidate political action abroad on a popular basis and priority given to a hypothetical Western initiative of destabilization of the present regime. How can Nguza's pious wishes, taking the place of strategy, be interpreted otherwise? "Our gendarmes," he believes in his "Appeal," "and our military sharing in our troubles, must refuse to fire on our poor unarmed, hungry students. They should disassociate themselves from the dirty work."[12]

In the long list of opposition organizations, the People's Revolution Party and the FLNC are the only ones that conducted the essential part of their operations on Zairian territory.

The Congolese National Liberation Front was the perpetrator of two offensives in Shaba (1977 and 1978) that would undoubtedly have put an end to the Mobutu regime, if it had not been for the double intervention of foreign troops (Moroccan in 1977 and Belgian and French in 1978). The FLNC, established primarily among Shaba exiles in Angola, was strengthened in its dependence on the Angolan State by a militaristic strategy. The FLNC, which counted on achieving a rapid victory over the Zairian Armed Forces, owing to its superior cohesion and motivation, had given little importance to the establishment of a political base in the country.

With regard to the People's Revolution Party (PRP), it is, in many respects, an exception in the composite world of Congolese opposition. Established in 1967, it still controls the forest and mountain areas in North Shaba and South Kivu,[13] inhabited by several tens of thousands of partisans. As heir to the 1963-1965 insurrections, both because of its leaders (for the most part former Simbas) and because of its geographic establishment, in the regions of the most bitter resistance to reconquest in 1965, the PRP pointed out seven main mistakes by the CNL [National Liberation Committee] from which it drew a lesson for determining the principal lines of its own strategy.

While "the insurrections had neglected to make the inhabitants of liberated areas politically aware, the PRP, on the other hand, will see a priority objective in this and will set up a 'People's Ideological Orientation Institute'." The PRP was to replace the race toward large towns, prevailing in 1964, with a primarily rural guerrilla warfare. The PRP was to replace the use of magic as a neams for keeping discipline and self-confidence, generalized within the APL[14], with a formtion characterized by long-range armed struggle methods and strict discipline.

The struggle conducted by the PRP under conditions of extreme isolation, frequently subjected to attacks by the elite troops of the Zairian Army, is exemplary in many respects. Nevertheless, a strategy based on priority to the liberation of certain areas by the rural guerrilla force proved to be limited. The enormous disproportion of the respective fire powers reduced the liberated territories to the most inaccessible and often the least inhabited regions: mountain masses in the east, forests in Maniema. Only a very limited part of the rural dwellers could be mobilized in this way.

Moreover, the strata of city dwellers displaying dynamism, were not involved in this struggle. A strategic readjustment was then specified by the PRP in the conference of leadership personnel (March 1979), which decided to "adopt political struggle as the main form of combat in the present phase, with the armed struggle becoming the secondary form."

The question remains to know whether this decision has had any effects and whether the PRP will succeed in coming out of that "enclave" that would enable it to expand its bases and to offer a framework of expression and organization to the increasing social discontent.

PLANNED SAUDI PETROLEUM PURCHASE

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 29 Sep 81 p 7

[Excerpt] ZAMBIA IS to buy 20,000 tonnes of oil from Saudi Arabia, permanent secretary in the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications Mr Essau Nebwe said yesterday.

Mr Nebwe said in Lusaka that oil deal was clinched during a Zambian delegation visit to that country last month which Mr Nebwe led. But he could not however say how much the oil would cost but it is believed the amount is quite substantial.

Mr Nebwe said the price of the oil would depend on the ruling price at the time of the delivery of the commodity to Zambia.

Others in Mr Nebwe's delegation included permanent secretary for Finance Mr Fred Kazunga, officials from Zambia Energy Corporation and ZIMCO.

Last year, Zambia's oil import bill stood at K180 million and the figure is expected to be higher this year.

And early this year, a consortium of seven international banks raised a loan of about K145 million to enable Zambia finance its oil import bill

SOVIET AMBASSADOR 'KGB MAN'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] LONDON, Wednesday. THE new Soviet ambassador in Lusaka Mr Vladmir Cherednik was first identified as a KGB career officer in 1967 when he came under security surveillance in Nairobi, according to a report here on Monday.

It claimed that Soviet policy in Southern Africa was currently being orchestrated by three recently appointed and strategically located ambassadors.

On leaving Kenya, Mr Cherednik held a top post at the foreign ministry in Moscow as deputy chief of the department of international economic organisation.

Believe

"Some observers believe that part of his brief is to seek to destabilise South Africa and Zaire through economic pressure as well as guerrilla insurgency". Robert Moss, the Daily Telegraph Soviet security specialist, claimed in a long article on the intelligence war.

He claimed that the new Soviet ambassador in Maputo Mr Valentin Bdovine had been a career officer in the KGB since at least 1959 and was an expert in "paramilitary operations with a notably aggressive temperament. His former postings include Chad and Laos".

Mr Moss added: "His arrival in Mozambique is expected to signal more KGB involvement in guerrilla campaigns, and perhaps also in Frelimo's counter-insurgency efforts against anti-Soviet rebels in the north of the country".

ROMANIAN BARTER AGREEMENT REVIEW

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] THE Zambia-Romania joint trade committee may meet soon to review the barter trade agreement signed last year.

The meeting is necessary because the K10 million set aside in both countries has been used in the exchange of goods.

Minister of State for Commerce and Industry Mr Leonard Subulwa said yesterday that since all the money allocated for the barter trade between the countries had been exhausted, the joint trade committee has to review the agreement again.

Mr Subulwa early this year led a buying mission to Romania which was followed by a buying delegation from that country led by first deputy Minister of Foreign Trade and international Cooperation Mr Ion Nicolae last June.

The barter trade agreement was signed last November and was to last one year. — Zana.

NATION'S INVESTMENT POLICIES ATTRACT INDIAN BUSINESSMEN

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 2

[Excerpt]

NEW DELHI, Tuesday.

ZAMBIA's investment policies have attracted interest among Indian industrialists many of whom are seeking to establish joint industrial ventures in Zambia.

The Zambian high commissioner to India Mr Axon Chalikulima attributed the enthusiasm among Indian industrialists to the stable leadership and stability in Zambia and to the warm relationship between the two countries.

Zambia was seen as a suitable centre for exporting Indian manufactured goods to neighbouring countries.

A journal for the Indian Investment Centre in an article in July noted that Zambia was endowed with abundant agricultural land and mineral resources which, if supported, could achieve self-sufficiency in consumer goods and even provide a surplus for export at competitive prices.

Mr Chalikulima said foreign investors were welcome in Zambia, adding that it was the basic and fundamental objective of the Government to attract foreign investment for the country's development.

Industrialists were looking forward to Zambia's participation in the Indian international trade fair to be held this year where they expect to exchange views with officials from the Ministry of Commerce and Industry.

Indian businessmen feel that the trade fair will help them see what Zambia has done in industrial development.

Meanwhile, British Caledonian Airways has chosen Lusaka as its regional management base, an airline spokesman said in Lusaka yesterday.

He said this when he announced the arrival in Lusaka of a new manager for Central and Southern Africa Mr Ray Corsan.

Mr Corsan is taking over from Mr Jonathan Oakes who has been appointed the airline's manager in Nigeria.

RESULTS OF ZCTU GENERAL COUNCIL MEETING NOTED

New Salary Scales Approved

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] THE Zambia Congress of Trade Unions has approved pay increases ranging from 38 to 273 per cent for all its workers including the labour leaders themselves, it was learnt yesterday.

The annual salary of the ZCTU general secretary goes up by 37.5 per cent from K9,600 to K13,200. That of his assistant is up by 66.3 per cent from K7,800 to K11,400.

But the biggest increases have been awarded to those in the low income groups. Accounts assistants, formerly called clerk/typists and stenographers will now earn almost three times their previous salaries.

The entry point for this category has been increased from K1,320 to K3,600 — a bonanza of 272.7 per cent.

Approved

The new salary scales and conditions of service were approved at a ZCTU general council meeting at Kitwe's Katilungu House at the weekend.

At the same meeting top labour leaders reassured delegates that no efforts would be spared to secure the release of the detained unionists who include chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba.

The chairman who is part-time, does not receive a salary, but he gets a responsibility allowance of K250 a month, the same as his deputy.

Under the new conditions of service, workers who serve between five and 15 years will be paid six months' salary on retirement, while employees who serve 20 years and above will get nine months' pay.

This is exclusive of other social security schemes like the National Provident Fund retirement pay-offs, according to Times investigations.

Other attractive fringe benefits include a home-ownership scheme by which arrangements have been made to enable even the lowest paid worker to borrow up to K8,000.

The scheme provides that elected ZCTU leaders will now borrow up to K50,000; workers receiving up to K4,000 a year are eligible for K15,000 loans.

The money can be borrowed from the Zambia National Building Society and guaranteed by the ZCTU.

The major feature in the ZCTU new salary structure is that those who earn the least have been given the most in take-home increases.

This is a sharp departure from the Ignatius Munchangwe salary reforms for the public service which increased by 137 per cent the pay for the highest public servant and by 45 per cent for the lowest.

Last week's meeting was informed that the ZCTU's financial position was healthy with cash, fixed assets, investments and current assets standing at K200,000 in excess of total liabilities.

The only reservation was that the ZCTU auditors advised against the present practice whereby cheques are signed by "authorised union members and trustees."

At least one official from the accounts personnel should be a signatory, according to the audit report.

Apart from the salary rises the new conditions do not offer any notable increases in fringe benefits to the top leadership.

Increase 'No Surprise'

[Editorial]

[Text] THE main yardstick used by the Muchangwe salaries commission to award hefty increases to civil servants was the fact that the cost of living had risen disproportionately to wages since 1975.

According to figures by the Central Statistical Office the cost for consumer items required for a decent living jumped to 102.8 per cent for the low-income group and 88.4 per cent for the high bracket by 1980.

The commission, appointed in June 1980, further compared the salaries of workers who fall into the Zimco conglomerate and who had just been given pay rises with what civil servants were earning.

It was found that the Government servants' wages could not support an average household of a man, wife and four children "at a reasonable level of health and decency"

Many companies, parastatal and private, have since been negotiating and signing agreements with trade unions over the need to relate salaries to cost of living indices.

It therefore comes as no surprise that the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions has announced pay rises and perks for its full-time personnel.

Yes, they deserve an increment. Except for a few unionists, Zambia owes what industrial peace there is today to the dedicated men and women in the ZCTU and its affiliated bodies.

There are at least 18 trade unions which come under the umbrella of the ZCTU and it is no mean task to organise them.

The goodness of the ZCTU increments is that the lowest employee has been given the highest rise (almost 273 per cent) while the topmost ZCTU servant gets 38 per cent.

If the Muchangwe commission had done similarly there would have been no grouses but the percentage increments for the "superscale" officers were just too high compared to the lower ranks.

Now that ZCTU personnel have been "rewarded" they should give off their best in ensuring that trade unionism is not a matter of condemning whatever management is doing or calling for strike action without genuine grievances.

Let demands for more pay be matched with higher productivity. Surely in these days of little or stagnant industrial activity workers should even be prepared to have their pay cut if only to save their tottering company from closure.

By so sacrificing — it has been done elsewhere — they will be saving their jobs and possibly give a lease to their industry to reawaken.

The ZCTU "bonanza" should not be taken by union members as a spur or enticement to start wildcat walkouts. It should encourage workers to demand more service from the ZCTU so that the monthly subscriptions they pay are justified.

Detained Leaders, Social Security

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] THE Zambia Congress of Trade Unions will continue to recognise the four detained labour leaders as the legitimate holders of their offices "because they are innocent", it has been declared.

The ZCTU expressed concern over its omission from the commission of inquiry now collecting evidence on the country's social security schemes.

These were resolutions passed by the ZCTU general council which met in Kitwe at the weekend and released yesterday by assistant general secretary in-charge of administration and organisation Mr Samuel Lungu.

The detained labour leaders are ZCTU chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba, general secretary Mr Newstread Zimba, deputy chairman of the Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) Mr Timothy Walamba and ZCTU assistant general secretary Mr Chitalu Sampa.

On the commission of inquiry the council said:

"Considering the importance of social security to all workers the general council registers its indignation for the deliberate omission of ZCTU on the membership of the commission on social security."

It resolved that despite "this unfortunate move" it would make submissions to the commission which is being chaired by Minister of Labour and Social Services Mr Basil Kabwe.

Mr Lungu said the council had appointed a seven-man working committee to prepare a paper to submit to the commission.

The council regretted the continued detention of Mr Chiluba, Mr Zimba, Mr Sampa and Mr Walamba.

"In view of the innocence of the labour movement and especially the four detained leaders the council reaffirmed that they are recognised and will continue to be recognised as the legitimate labour leaders in their respective capacities".

He said: "Obviously we expect the law of the land to take its course in the courts," he said.

EFFORTS TO PREVENT DESTRUCTION OF MAIZE HARVEST REPORTED

Namboard Delivery Speedup

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] NAMBOARD has urged farmers to speed up maize deliveries to its depots to save the crop from destruction by rains.

The call was made in Lusaka yesterday by a Namboard spokesman who warned that some rural depots would not be opened for a long time during the rainy season.

A week ago Prime Minister Mundia warned that between four and five million bags of maize from this year's bumper harvest were threatened with destruction by rains unless urgent steps were taken to move them to storage points.

He was addressing teachers at Lusaka's Old National Assembly where he said Namboard and cooperative unions bought 5,316,223 bags by August 28.

The spokesman yesterday could not say whether his organisation had secured foreign exchange to buy tarpaulins. He appealed to farmers who had not yet delivered their maize to depots to do so now.

The appeal comes in the wake of reports that some farmers were still shelling their maize and have not heeded previous appeals for them to speed up its delivery to depots.

"Time for delivery of maize to depots is running out as the rains could be with us in a matter of weeks now."

If Namboard was expected to store the maize before the rains then farmers should cooperate by delivering their maize to depots soon.

Maize Shelling Speedup Call

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia has appealed to all farmers in the Southern Province to expedite the shelling of maize so that the local co-operative marketing union can buy the maize and deliver it to the line of rail depots where there are adequate storage facilities.

Mr Mundia has also directed that all depots where there are crops awaiting transportation to safe storage facilities must immediately be open to any transporter that has capacity to help in the movement of the produce.

The prime minister said yesterday that the present practice where specific transporters have been allocated to certain areas to transport the produce must be rescinded.

As a result, the Southern Province Co-operative Marketing Union (SPCMU) has been directed to revoke any such agreements that they may have entered into with some transporters to exclusively deal with certain areas.

"The revocation of such agreements is aimed at speeding up the collection of maize and other agricultural produce to safe storage areas," he said.

And Zana reports that Eastern Province member of the Central Committee Mr. Joshua Mumpanshya has asked the Eastern Co-operative Union (ECU) to cover the stacks of maize at depots in case of early rains.

He told the provincial council which met in Chipata yesterday that the co-operative union has already bought 1,134,248 bags of maize from farmers since the opening opening of the marketing season.

ZR Transport Agreement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Excerpt] ZAMBIA Railways has agreed to move 3.2 million bags of maize after a meeting with Namboard officials in August, a company spokesman said in Kabwe yesterday.

The spokesman said four trains had been assigned specially for this purpose to move the grain Kalomo, Tara, Bowood, Choma, Monze, Kaleya, Mazabuka, Kalubwe, Chisamba, Kasabasa, Kabwe, Natuseko, Chankwakwa and Kapiri Mposhi.

The company has so far moved 1.1 million bags as at September 25 at the rate of 31,000 bags a day, the spokesman said.

The maize was being transported from Namboard collection depots in Southern and the Central provinces to the Copperbelt maize storage silos at Bwana Mkubwa, Nkana-Kitwe and Chambeshi storage depot.

MPONGWE PILOT WHEAT PROJECT TO HARVEST MORE WHEAT THAN LAST YEAR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt] MORE than 1,250 tonnes of wheat is expected to be harvested from the Mpongwe pilot wheat scheme in Ndola Rural next month.

This year's harvest will be more than last year's when about 1,000 tonnes was harvested.

Senior farm manager Mr Lambie Turnbull informed Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu, who visited the wheat scheme which is being financed by the European Economic Community, yesterday that they expected to harvest 1,250 tonnes from the 250 hectares.

Mr Zulu, who was accompanied by Member of the Central Committee for the Copperbelt Mr Alex Shapi, was informed that an extra 550 hectares of wheat would be grown under irrigation during the next planting season to bring the total hectarage to 8,000.

Mr Turnbull assured Mr Zulu every effort was being made to ensure the success of the scheme to make the country self-sufficient in wheat production.

The management and workers were encouraged by the support the Government gave them and were optimistic Zambia would reduce her import bill within the next few years when the scheme will be able to meet the nation's demand for wheat.

The production of wheat was going on even without the necessary infrastructure, Mr Turnbull said. But he said what they needed most was electricity to generate power for the irrigation system.

Zesco has already started working on the power line from Kapiri Mposhi to the scheme.

Mr Zulu said it was the Party and Government policy to support productive projects like the Mpongwe wheat scheme because it would benefit the nation by saving on foreign exchange and feeding the people.

If wheat farming was carried out on a large scale Zambia would save a lot of foreign exchange. He appealed to friendly countries and organisations to help Zambia in her efforts to boost food production.

The Party and its Government was looking forward to the day when the nation would be able to feed itself.

The nation was looking to the workers for the success of the project.

During a brief stop-over at Mpongwe Mission Hospital, Mr Zulu appealed to villagers to grow more food.

He said the Party and its Government had improved feeder roads to make it easy for people to deliver their produce to markets.

ZINCOM CHIEF SAYS FIRMS FACE DIFFICULT SITUATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] Some companies in the country are likely to close down in the next four months unless foreign exchange is made available to import raw materials.

The Government has also been asked to suspend the issue of import licences for the last half of this year because it is "too late".

Chief executive of the Zambian Industrial and Commercial Association (Zincom) Mr Humphrey Samuchapi said this in Lusaka yesterday and stressed that the business community was in a "difficult situation".

"The import licence allocations for the last half have not started and we have even written the Government asking them to suspend them and instead find foreign exchange for the current import licences already in circulation."

Zincom had made representations to the Government on the matter and Mr Samuchapi was waiting to hear from it.

"We have adopted a wait-and-see attitude but we are in a difficult situation."

The Lusaka and Kitwe Chambers of Commerce and Industry had sent circulars to companies asking them how much raw materials they have.

"I am afraid that if nothing happens now, companies will start closing down in four months' time".

Mr Samuchapi explained that because of the delay in issuing import licences for the last half, Zincom felt it was not too late to start giving them out as planning was adversely affected.

"We have suggested to the Government to find foreign exchange for existing import licences and to start preparing for the first half of 1982".

Late last month Lusaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry chairman Mr Francis Mphepo said some companies were slowly grinding to a halt because of lack of raw materials and letters of credit.

He said foreign allocations for the first half of 1981 were slow to materialise and that when that finally did, they would be disastrously inadequate.

At the same time Zincom reported that the country's payment arrears stood at K500 million and that it was unlikely there would be any dramatic change in the economic performance in the medium term.

Zincom said the Government should provide adequate incentives for rapid economic growth.

IRISH OFFICIAL ARRIVES ON FACT-FINDING TOUR

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 29 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] IRELAND will soon sign a bi-lateral agreement aid with Zambia involving K3 million for development programmes.

This was said in Lusaka esterday by the visiting Ireland Executive Secretary of the Ministerial Advisory Council on Development Co-operation Miss Veronica Canning.

Miss Canning said the agreement had already been concluded and drafted but waiting for signatures from the two countries.

K1 million of the money has already been given out and Miss Canning said this would be doubled to K2 million next year.

Other projects to be included in the agreement are in the agricultural field — a farm in Kasama, Northern Province and another dairy farm west of Lusaka.

She said there were also experts provided by the Irish government to Chilanga cement factory while in the education field, a number of technical lecturers had been provided to the Department of Technical Education and Vocational Training (DTEVT).

Miss Canning pledged her government's desire to take an active part in Zambia's economic development.

On her visit here, she said: "so my visit here is a fact finding one as I am looking at some of the projects in which we are involved in Tanzania, Zambia and Lesotho.

"I will listen to the views of people running the projects we are taking part in, and on my return home, I will have to report on these."

She said she was satisfied with Ireland's assistance to Chilanga cement for out of the 12 posts held by Irish experts there, seven had been Zambianised.

The agreement concerning Chilanga cement, has been renewed for a further three year period after the first three years expired.

Ireland was also providing simulator training to Zambia Airways Corporation as part of a government to government agreement.

Simulator training is an advanced and specialised training given to Zambian pilots in Dublin and the agreement will run for a year from last July.

While in the country, Miss Canning will meet and have discussions with officials from several government, parastatal and private organisations.

Miss Canning has already been to Tanzania and leaves for Lesotho on Friday.

NCCM DISMISSES DETAINED MUZ DEPUTY CHAIRMAN

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by George Makulu]

[Excerpt] The Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) has dismissed detained Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) Deputy Chairman, Mr Timothy Walamba from his job with Konkola Division.

MUZ Chairman, Mr David Mwila confirmed in Kitwe yesterday that the Konkola Division management had sacked Mr Walamba "because he is no longer in their employment".

An NCCM spokesman in Kitwe also said that the family of Mr Walamba had been asked to leave the mine house they were currently occupying along Chililabombwe's Kalanga Road.

Mr Walamba, who is being detained at Kamfinsa on the outskirts of Kitwe, was a township officer with the division.

Mr Mwila said that he had travelled to Chililabombwe on Monday where he saw the Knokola Division management on the matter.

Asked to confirm whether Mr Walamba had been relieved of his post, Mr Mwila replied: "Yes it is correct. They (NCCM) say he is no longer in their employment."

The NCCM spokesman, said in a written reply to a DAILY MAIL query: "It is true that Mrs Walamba has been asked to vacate the mine house in accordance with the provision of the conditions of service applicable to Mr Walamba as an employee of Konkola Division."

Mrs Walamba could not be contacted yesterday as she was in Kamfinsa where she had taken food for her husband.

A relative, who preferred to be anonymous, said that Mr Walamba's wife had received a letter a few days ago informing her of the husband's dismissal.

According to her, the letter which Mrs Walamba was expected to deliver to her husband also asked the family to move out of the house by today.

The relative said that when Mr Walamba read the letter, he told his wife to move the family out of the house but leave all the property there.

It is understood, MUZ officials also told her not to move out until they had seen the mine management on the issue.

Mr Walamba was detained on July 27 together with three other labour leaders, Zambia Congress of Trade Unions Chairman-General, Mr Frederick Chiluba, his secretary-general, Mr Newstead Zimba and assistant secretary-general, Mr Chitalu Sampa.

In an early morning broadcast to the nation, President Kaunda said that the unionists had instigated wildcat strikes in the country with a view to eventually overthrowing the Government.

The men have since appeared in court to challenge the State's grounds for detaining them.

The ZCTU stated over the weekend that the labour movement would continue to regard the four men as labour leaders, despite their being in detention.

No mention was made as to the reasons that prompted the statement and it is now understood that the meeting was called after the ZCTU got wind of Mr Walamba's dismissal.

It was not immediately known whether the move by the mine management would affect Mr Walamba's position with MUZ.

NMC OFFICIALS, FARMERS SEEK TO END POULTRY STOCKFEED CRISIS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] LUSAKA commercial farmers were yesterday locked in crucial talks with National Milling Company officials in a bid to end the stockfeed crisis now crippling the poultry industry.

National Milling Company officials told farmers that the Bank of Zambia had allocated K10.2 million in foreign exchange for raw materials used to make stockfeed but the company was unable to make use of this because it could not obtain letters of credit.

After the closed door meeting one farmer described the situation as "desparate" and said the least the NMC could do was to inform farmers weekly of the flactuations in the supply of stockfeed so that farmers could plan.

For three years now, there has been an erratic supply of stockfeed which farmers had said was of poor quality. The situation has hardly improved.

Emergency measures worked out at yesterday's meeting included sticking to an allocation system which demanded that poultry farmers would be given stockfeed according to the number and size of their bird flock.

The NMC's marketing section will check on all poultry farms in the area to assess their needs and thus ensure a fair distribution of stockfeed.

In the past, the company had allowed farmers to queue at its depot and buy any stockfood that was available.

Marketing officers will from now on advise farmers on the supply of the commodity although this would be difficult to predict at times.

The Commercial Farmers Bureau said six months ago that there was absolutely nothing good in the poultry industry and many farmers had been forced out of business as a result.

Last year, farmers blamed political interference, lack of forward planning and expertise and bureaucracy at NMC. These things were ruining the industry in Zambia, charged the farmers.

General manager of Caledonian Hatcheries Mr Stan Gibson said that manufacturers of chickenfeed had committed an unforgiveable sin by not telling poultry farmers of deficiencies in the quality of feeds which had resulted in the high death rate of chickens.

MINER SPOTS BOMB, FOILS SABOTAGE ATTEMPT AT CHILILABOMBWE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Excerpt] A SABOTAGE attempt was foiled when a Zambian miner spotted a powerful bomb planted at Chililabombwe's No.1 shaft underground which could have resulted in loss of life and property worth millions of Kwacha, Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu disclosed yesterday.

And Mr Zulu has directed security forces on the Copperbelt to investigate thoroughly the planting of the bomb which could have rocked the entire underground and surface installations of the Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines Konkola division.

Making the order Mr Zulu informed a parked meeting at Lubengele Hall in Chililabombwe that security men in the area had briefed him about the incident.

He visited the mine during his continued tour of Copperbelt mines to dicuss the security situation in the province in view of the rising rate of violent crimes in the area.

Mr Zulu said "a gallant Zambian miner whom the nation should salute for his vigilance" saved thousands of lives of his fellow workers at the mine when he spotted the bomb device and reported the matter to bomb experts who defused it.

But he did not name the miner or the make of the bomb.

The planting of the bomb was one of the many desperate actions by enemies of the nation who wanted to disrupt peace in the country, he told the shocked audience.

Sodiers, police and influential Zambians were being used by outsiders to destabilise the nation.

"You should all be security concious and report people you suspect are working against the interests of the nation to the police.

"Some of the labour leaders, university intellectuals, traders and students are stooges of capitalism and servants of outside machinations who want to use you the poor Zambians to show them strategic buildings for their targets. Please tell them off."

The enemies were going round using shortages of essential commodities in the country as a weapon against the State.

"They are telling you to have a change of leadership. You should ask them if this will end the shortages the country is facing."

Mr Zulu said President Kaunda and his leadership had led the country to Independence and wondered how Dr Kaunda would disown the people for whom he had suffered so much during the struggle for freedom.

The President loved the people of Zambia and was doing his best to improve their conditions of living and he appealed to the meeting to disregard such "loudmouths" because their intentions were to plunge the nation into chaos.

Mr Zulu ordered the Party leadership in Chililabombwe to form security committees at section, branch and ward levels to identify enemies.

Party officials should patrol mine areas at night to reinforce police patrols to beat criminals.

"Nobody else will safeguard our property for us. We should do it ourselves."

BRIEFS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 pp 1, 10

[Article by Gareth Willard]

[Text] CLOSER relations between the United States and South Africa were causing grave concern throughout Africa, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said here yesterday. Speaking at the opening of the Commonwealth heads of government conference, he also warned that South African intransigence over Namibian independence was causing international anxiety.

He called on members of the Western contact group of five nations negotiating with South Africa on Namibia to use their strength to press Pretoria to the conference table. He added: "The friendly posture taken by the Reagan administration towards South Africa is a cause for grave concern to the whole African continent."

In one of the seven opening speeches, Mr Mugabe called on the Commonwealth to take a positive stand in condemning South Africa.

The Commonwealth could not be complacent about a former Commonwealth country which oppressed most of its people, illegally held Namibia and invaded and subverted neighbouring states, he said.

He said the apartheid system in South Africa was showing itself in three dimensions:

- The national dimension was based on the oppression of the people of South Africa and had caused a lot of suffering;
- The Namibian dimension showed South Africa's intransigence and unwillingness to co-operate with the United Nations in the implementation of Resolution 435;
- The international or regional dimension showed itself through South Africa's numerous acts of aggression against its neighbours.

"When South Africa sends its demons of aggression into Angola or Mozambique or commits acts of sabotage in Zimbabwe or Zambia, engages in border incidents in Botswana, assassinates the African National Congress representatives in Swaziland, Mozambique, Angola and Zimbabwe, it is not engaging in a sport."

A strong stand by the Commonwealth on supporting anti - apartheid resolutions at the United Nations would reinforce the position of the international community, the Organisation of African Unity and the frontline states, he said.

"We insist on the solution of the Namibian problem based on United Nations Resolution 435 without modification or prevarication.

"We are opposed to any effort to institute so-called confidence-building measures which, in reality, are aimed at perpetuating the interests of the racist South African regime in its continued occupation of Namibia."

Zimbabweans had learned they could live in unity and harmony from the examples shown by the rest of the world during the creation of the nation, Mr Mugabe said.

"We have learned our lesson from the unity shown us by the Commonwealth, by the Organisation of African Unity and the United Nations.

"That is, if the rest of the world can unite in our cause why should we, the participants, the actual people concerned, the Zimbabweans, not be able to unite and live in harmony?"

He praised the Commonwealth for its efforts during the tortuous struggle for independence, an issue that dominated the agenda through years of frustration, bitter recriminations and sometimes acrimonious discussion.

Two years ago, in Lusaka, the basis was laid for the Lancaster House talks, which led to an agreement, a ceasefire and elections.

"This seeming miracle would not have been possible without the concerted support and sacrifices Commonwealth countries were willing to make. Let me on behalf of the people of Zimbabwe and my Government extend our profound gratitude for the magnificent achievement of making Zimbabwe a reality.

"Millions of Zimbabweans are now living in peace and tranquillity. They are united in progress and hard work, determined to make Zimbabwe — the country they fought for, sacrificed for and died for — a land of peace and harmony."

The Prime Minister also congratulated the Commonwealth on its efforts over the years to find a satisfactory solution to the independence of Belize, a former British colony in Central America which won self-rule last week.

He especially welcomed the new State's membership of the Commonwealth, taking over Zimbabwe's position as the youngest member.

[Editorial: "Racists' Shadow"]

UNDER other circumstances, Commonwealth leaders meeting in Melbourne for the next week could have been celebrating the 20th anniversary of South Africa's withdrawal from the "club".

In the wake of Sharpeville, the Commonwealth made it clear in 1961 that continued South African membership would be incompatible with the principles of this unique grouping of nations.

South Africa got the message and withdrew with what little grace it could muster under the circumstances. Unfortunately, although now not a member of the "club", the apartheid republic's shadow continues to loom large over every meeting of Commonwealth leaders.

The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, devoted much of his brilliant opening speech to the problems created by the Pretoria regime, not only for Zimbabwe, but also for Namibia and Southern Africa.

Mr Reagan has a lot to answer for in the continuing intransigence of South Africa over Namibia and its naked aggression against Angola and Zambia.

Mrs Thatcher, the British Prime Minister, appears to have struck a particularly good rapport with the American president. Both of them believe religiously in the monetarist theories of Milton Friedman.

Mrs Thatcher has not, however, emulated Mr Reagan's deep affection for everything the South Africans do. With some prodding from Lord Carrington, who performed a similar task over Zimbabwe's independence at the 1979 Lusaka "club" summit, she could be persuaded to see the error of her friend's ways.

Then, perhaps, we can see a genuine US attempt to solve the Namibia problem, rather than this dubious "carrot and stick" policy which, so far, has not produced a sausage.

STOCK EXCHANGE SHAKEN, SAYS NEW CHAIRMAN

Salisbury THE BUSINESS HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] THE FUTURE of the Zimbabwe Stock Exchange depends upon how radical the Government's policies are going to be, says its new chairman, Mr Bill Burdett-Coutts. The stock market, now standing at a three-year low, indicates that the confidence of a large section of the financial community is at an extremely low ebb.

Recent statements, said Mr Burdett-Coutts, made in the wake of favourable comments delivered at this year's Zimcord conference, have not been encouraging to investors.

"It does appear possible that the Government is now following a more radically socialist policy than it appeared likely 12 months ago, examples being the almost hostile attitude it adopts in numerous statements to any extension of foreign control of companies and also to multinational companies," the new chairman said.

"If the Government does not moderate its public pronouncements and if socialist policies or developments are pursued too far, the potential for the future growth of Zimbabwe may be stillborn," he said.

"But I do believe that the stock market and the free enterprise system can be of tremendous assistance to the Government in meeting and achieving its objectives providing the two can work together in some way.

"Stock markets can work in socialist states, for instance Sweden, Britain under Labour governments and now, of course, France."

He was surprised by the lack of reference made to the stock market in Government policy statements, especially when one remembered the opening address by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, to Zimcord delegates.

Mr Mugabe said at the time: "... to those of you who may be wondering how it may be possible to meet any demand for local Zimbabwe participation, let me inform you that the mechanism of the Zimbabwe Stock Exchange exists and has the potential to meet such requirements."

M. Burdett-Coutts said foreign investment was not forthcoming despite great interest shown in Zimbabwe since independence, because uncertainty regarding Government policies did not make the investment background attractive enough.

"This is a great tragedy, as without foreign investment it will be much more difficult to increase the numbers in employment in industry, particularly in the mining sector where development of new mineral deposits will be delayed."

The general lack of confidence in the marketplace stemmed from a variety of reasons.

First, the refusal to grant Wankie Colliery Company a price increase for coal despite the Government's agreement to do so; and the failure of ZSR Ltd to secure a price rise for sugar — the company has been running at a loss since July 1980.

Second, the growing inflation rate due largely to Government expenditure, rising wages without commensurate increases in productivity, and the possibility of Zimcord aid beginning to flow.

"Due to rising costs of production, transport bottlenecks and reduced foreign exchange availability, quite apart from price control, it may be difficult for companies to maintain, let alone increase, earnings in future years," said Mr Burdett-Coutts.

As for the future of the Zimbabwe Stock Exchange he admitted that members had not done enough to explain its function to the public at large, a situation which he intends to act upon.

"I think the objective is to do more to make the public aware of what the exchange is trying to do and, of course, getting the Government to understand more about it.

"My hope is to work much more closely with the Treasury, Reserve Bank and the ministries of Finance and Economic Planning and Development.

"Basically I think there has been a misunderstanding in the past."

Mr Burdett-Coutts added that the ZSE believed that a satisfactory procedure will soon be laid down governing any takeovers of public companies.

"I still think there is a good future for the stock exchange, but as I said earlier, this depends on how radical the Government's policies are going to be."

ZCTU LEADER HITS BACK AT CARTWRIGHT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 7

[Text] THE general secretary of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, Mr Albert Mugabe, yesterday accused Republican Front MP Mr Richard Cartwright of making "irresponsible and unfounded allegations against the ZCTU".

Mr Mugabe said Mr Cartwright was a racist who did not want the conditions of service for blacks to be improved.

In a speech in the Assembly on Tuesday, Mr Cartwright (RF, Hatfield) said the ZCTU was helping ruin the economy of the country instead of working for the good of the nation.

Mr Cartwright was reacting to a statement by Mr Mugabe this week that the Government should take over control of public transport.

Mr Mugabe said yesterday: "I stand by what I said. Public transport should become the direct responsibility of the Government."

The union leader, said that as long as public transport remained in the hands of the private sector which was interested in "huge profits" the working class would always be milked and offered poor services.

"It is surprising in this context that a man like Mr Cartwright can stand up in the Assembly and oppose what I said.

"I thought people like him who have supported the suppression of blacks over the years would now change and start looking ahead. What he said in the House is not helpful to the majority of the people of this country. I hope he will soon realise this," he said.

He said he had invited Mr Cartwright to share a platform with him at a workers' rally in Salisbury this weekend.

"This is where he will see the true picture of the people's feeling regarding public transport."

Mr Mugabe also said his organisation welcomed the Government's appeal to all rival trade unions to establish one union in each industry in less than a year.

MUTASA JOINS IN SCATHING ATTACK ON UNITED STATES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 8

[Text]

HAVANA.

THE Western world was harshly condemned for its exploitation of Africa and its negligence towards developing countries by Zimbabwe and other Third World countries at the 68th Inter-Parliamentary Union conference here.

Following the lead of host President Fidel Castro, the Speaker of the Zimbabwean House of Assembly, Mr Didymus Mutasa, said the West was insensitive to the rights of the Namibian people and continued "unashamedly" to exploit the people and their natural resources.

Mr Mutasa, representing the first official Zimbabwean delegation to the IPU conference earlier this month called for the non-aligned countries to send an armed force to Namibia. He said the non-aligned community should "stand up and be counted with the Namibian people.

ACTION

"We have listened to too many resolutions on Namibia being passed without action taken to accomplish them. We want speedy implementation of these resolutions in order to stop the suffering of the Namibians.

"We do not expect the West to do this and if we asked the East, the West would put up the same sort of ugly silence as we witnessed at this conference," said Mr Mutasa.

The friction at the conference, to which Mr Mutasa referred was triggered off by the opening speech given by Dr Castro.

Mr Amos Midzi, ZANU (PF) MP for Mashonaland East, who was one of the Zimbabwean delegates to the conference, said President Castro made a "vitriolic attack on the West and the US" in a speech which lasted an hour and 45 minutes "non-stop".

Mr Midzi said Dr Castro "made it clear that it is the complicity of the United States and other Western powers with the Pretoria regime which is giving encouragement to that regime to continue with its apartheid system, with its intention to destabilise the situation in Southern Africa and also the attempt to install a puppet regime that will acquiesce to the wishes of Western imperialism in Angola".

Mr Midzi said Dr Castro's lashing of the West caused an uproar among delegates from the Western bloc. Britain Australia and New Zealand spoke "very very strongly" against what he had said.

"They said they felt they had been abused by Dr Castro as a host and that he had taken advantage of his being a host to attack delegates who had come from the Western countries."

But he said that as far as Zimbabwe was concerned Mr Mutasa made it, "very clear that we completely agreed with what had been said by Dr Castro".

THANKS

In his address Mr Mutasa thanked President Castro for "stating so clearly the feelings of the developing nations of the world. We note with deep regret the disrespectful remarks made during this conference about the Cuban people and their head of state. The Zimbabwean group wishes to dissociate itself completely from those remarks".

Mr Mutasa said the Namibian problem arose out of the "greed and inhumanity of the Western capitalist society...

"We in Zimbabwe were told to solve our problems peacefully but in Namibia the South African regime is refusing to take this approach. The people of Namibia are right to take up arms to defend their human rights."

He warned, however, that the defeat of South Africa in Namibia was not the end of the problem.

"We need to obliterate that regime from the face of our region. It is the most inhuman and ugly regime in the world. We should take up arms and fight against it."

He said that with the South African Government's defeat, Southern Africa would be one of the richest and most stable regions in the world.

"The Western community, which benefits from the exploitation of the people in South Africa and Namibia, must share equal blame and condemnation with South Africa," he said.

CONCERN

Mr Midzi, who remained in Havana until the end of the conference after Mr Mutasa's departure for the US on September 20, was instrumental in the drafting of resolutions adopted by the committee on non-self-governing territories and ethnic questions.

The resolutions included "deep concern at the invasion of Angola by the apartheid South African military forces" and at South Africa's "defiance of the United Nations, the Organisation of African Unity, the Inter-Parliamentary Union and other international organisations on the status and rights of the Namibian people, and at the intensification of the military occupation of Namibia".

The resolutions also said that South Africa's invasion of Angola was embarked on with the support of the United States.

Mr Midzi said these resolutions caused lobbying within the Western group as there were countries which felt that some of the resolutions "went rather too far in their condemnation of the United States".

Zimbabwe was officially admitted as a member of the IPU on the first day of the conference and received a "very warm welcome" into the international body, which includes representatives from most countries of the world.

Mr Midzi said that from listening to people who had attended IPU conferences before "you find that the IPU is becoming more and more revolutionary in its approach to various issues. The impression I got was that the non-aligned countries had the upper hand, especially when it came to voting — we were in the majority.

"In most cases we presented a united front on certain common issues that we feel are vital."

This was not the case with a number of Western countries whose political differences at home were reflected in the splitting of votes even within their own delegations at the conference, he said.

He said the conference had been a success and it was important that Zimbabwe sent more delegates next year because the items discussed and the policies decided on were important for Southern Africa. — Ziana.

ALL-OUT PUSH FOR MAPUTO EXPORT ROUTE REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] ABOUT 40 percent of Zimbabwe's import and export traffic — excluding that to and from South Africa — is now being moved through Mozambique, the Minister of Transport, Mr Josiah Chinamano, said in the House of Assembly yesterday.

Of the total export and import traffic an average of about 23 percent ran through Mozambique, he said.

Answering questions during the committee of supply debate on the $121 million vote for his ministry, Mr Chinamano said it was both "economically and politically desirable" to aim at transporting all Zimbabwe's traffic through Mozambique.

He said not only was this route politically more acceptable to reduce Zimbabwe's dependence on South Africa, but it was also a shorter route to the sea.

The minister added however, that there were many obstacles in the way of rerouting traffic and it could not be done "overnight". But he congratulated the Mozambique authorities for all they had done.

"The ports have been improved beyond all recognition," he said. "Two bridges on the Limpopo have been rebuilt and many forklifts purchased."

Some problems had arisen because of derailments, "but the figure I have mentioned speaks for itself. Both we in this country and the authorities in Mozambique are dedicated to removing the remaining bottlenecks and to solving problems when they occur as soon as possible."

Answering a question from Mr Paddy Shields (RF, Bulawayo Central) on tariffs for traffic through Mozambique, he said that apart from one or two exceptions, rates within Zimbabwe were the same for all traffic movements and were related to distance.

This would benefit traffic through Mozambique because it was a shorter route than through South Africa. Rates in Mozambique were "similar" to rates in Zimbabwe, Mr Chinamano said.

He also told Mr Shields that there had been two meetings between Zimbabwe and Zambia to discuss the break-up of the unitary railway system and that "much progress was made". He said the next meeting was to be held in Salisbury next week and it was hoped "that this exercise will be done as quickly as possible".

Mr Chinamano also told the House that under the SADCC Zimbabwe was exploring the whole transport system in Southern Africa and was considering employing a consultant to explore the possibility of exporting coal through Walvis Bay. — Ziana.

ROW FLARES OVER ZVOBGO'S ROLE IN DEMONSTRATIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 15

[Excerpt] A row in which a Cabinet minister called on PF members to quit the Government if they could not work with it, erupted at the end of the Assembly's sitting on Wednesday.

The row erupted when, during an adjournment debate, a Patriotic Front MP for Matabeleland South, Mr Edward Ndlovu, again queried the personal intervention by the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, in recent public demonstrations.

"Taking a look at these demonstrations, we find that they are not voluntary," Mr Ndlovu said. "We are convinced that they were more tribal than anything else."

Accusing the minister of "acting like a stormtrooper" of "Nazi" times at these demonstrations, Mr Ndlovu said: "We are aware that power corrupts, be it political or economic power."

"If you guys do not want to be part of Government then quit," he told the PF MPs. "We can rule alone", he added to applause from the ZANU-PF benches.

Commenting on PF allegations that because of his actions staff at various administrative offices now felt insecure in their jobs, Dr Zvobgo assured the House that council employees had every confidence in him and that he tried his best to protect them in their work.

The only council official he had dismissed was the former chief executive officer for Chitungwiza, Mr Brian Elkington, he added.

Strongly denouncing those who talked about tribalism in the House as being tribalistic themselves, Mr William Ndangana (ZANU-PF Manicaland) supported the minister's actions in the demonstrations saying: "We don't want ministers who just sit, who just become office ministers.

"The one who talks about tribalism here is still a tribalistic man," Mr Ndangana added. "His white brothers are enjoying it when they hear about tribalism."

Before the adjournment debate, black MPs had another row with Mr Bill Irvine (RF, Malborough) when he insisted on continuing a speech he was making despite calls of

"sit down" "shut up" and "stop giving us a lecture, we are not school-children."

The row erupted because the black MPs wanted to finish consideration of the Ministry of Agriculture vote as its minister Senator Denis Norman, would be away for two days.

Prior to the debate on the vote, the ZANU-PF chief whip, Mr Alexio Mudzingwa (Mashonaland West) arranged with his Republican Front counterpart, Mr John Landau (Avondale), for consideration of the Ministry of Transport vote to be held over, so that the House could deal with the agriculture vote.

But, to the chagrin of the black MPs, Mr Irvine insisted on making what they felt was a lengthy speech despite the approaching adjournment time.

Despite an appeal by Mr Mudzingwa to curtail his speech in view of the agreement by the chief whips, Mr Irvine insisted on his right to make his contribution.

Dr Zvobgo then angrily accused him of reneging on an agreement reached with Mr Irvine's own party whip.

If the RF members regarded these agreements in this way, "today is the last day for arrangements", said Dr Zvobgo heatedly, adding that with the end of such accords "we still steamroller every item through this House".

As had been feared, Senator Norman could not finish his reply before automatic adjournment. This means consideration of the vote will have to be resumed some other time.--Ziana.

SUICIDE RATE AMONG BLACKS SOARS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Suicides among blacks in Zimbabwe are on the increase, according to figures released by the Bureau of Statistics recently.

A total of 410 suicides were recorded this year—81 of them in Salisbury.

In 1978, 31 blacks committed suicide. This increased to 62 in 1979. This year it has risen to 355--287 of them men.

Among whites, 44 men committed suicide compared to 11 women. The age group most affected was 50 years and over. No whites under 15 took their own lives, although five blacks under 15 did.

The director of the Samaritans service, Father John Gough, said most suicides were caused through loneliness. He said most of the calls they received were from people who "just want someone to listen".

This seems substantiated by the statistics which say that unmarried men are more liable to kill themselves, and widowed women show the people tendency. Retired people also feature prominently.

Father Gough said over 200 attempted suicides phoned the Samaritans last year. They also had a visiting group who arranged meeting with lonely people at hotels and cafes.

"We need more people though. We have 100 people at present, although some are sick or on holiday, and we hope to increase the number to 150." He said black counsellors were especially needed to try to curb the rate of suicides among blacks.

"They are now facing problems like detribalisation and urbanisation and find themselves without their extended family to go to with troubles.

SOVIET-TRAINED FARMER PUSHES COOPERATIVES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 16

[Text] A SOVIET-TRAINED Zimbabwean farmer, Mr Paul Themba Nyathi, says "all for one, and one for all" should be the guiding principle of a co-operative settlement.

Mr Nyathi, of Bulawayo, points out that collective production helps to create a "new man" able to move away from individual thinking towards communal thinking.

In the process, he says, a homogeneous society is created to "eliminate conflicts of exploitation of man by man," and every individual comes to appreciate "the dignity of labour".

Mr Nyathi was released from detention at the time of independence and spent 12 months studying co-operative farming in Russia.

He recently came back and briefly taught at Kushinga-Phikelela Agricultural Institute near Marandellas up to the graduation time last week when he returned to Bulawayo.

At the ceremony, President Banana, chairman of the board of trustees, said: "I would like to single out Comrade Nyathi for his voluntary work in the area of the co-operative movement.

"I hope his dedicated and relentless research will be of benefit to the students who have had the privilege of studying under his guidance."

The notes prepared by Mr Nyathi for students say social development in Zimbabwe calls for a revolutionary switch from capitalist to communal mode of production.

The system, he says, prepares farmers to work towards improving material and cultural levels of individuals and the collective.

"Co-operative planning makes it possible to utilise production forces in the most economical and effective way by freeing society from competition inherent in a capitalist set up," says Mr Nyathi.

"Morals governing a co-operative should be based on the concern of every member for the welfare of his neighbour. Religion should be dynamic, reflecting socialistic and egalitarian nature of the new society."

SHAVA ISSUES THREAT ON RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 pp 1, 11

[Text] THE Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Frederick Shava, yesterday threatened to prohibit the employment by the private sector of former civil servants who had retired under the controversial incentive scheme.

Dr Shava was referring in the Assembly to the prohibition of the re-employment in the public sector of those who had already retired under the scheme which allows them to leave early and commute their pensions — a system established under the administration of former prime minister Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

He also lashed out at "certain sections" of the management of Air Zimbabwe for their "determination" to prevent the employment of black Zimbabweans.

Dr Shava was speaking during private members' question time after a question from Mr Richard Cartwright (RF, Hatfield) asking for confirmation of an embargo on the employment of retired servicemen.

Dr Shava's claim was that people retired under the incentive scheme were forming a new "white laager" in the private sector and he warned: "It is hoped that in due course the Government might in fact consider expanding this embargo (applying to the public service) to the private sector if this negative attitude towards the employment of black Zimbabweans in senior positions persists in some sections of the private sector."

He said it would be "very honourable" if companies in the private sector of their own accord took steps to ensure that beneficiaries of the incentive scheme were offered jobs only after no suitable Zimbabwean could be found.

Dr Shava said he was "pleased" that Air Zimbabwe was affected by the directive of the Public Service Commission against the employment of incentive scheme beneficiaries, as the corporation was one of the country's statutory bodies, "which has been most particularly the cause for concern among many of us in the Government".

Chief among the minister's charges was that last year the airline had refused to employ about 50 black Zimbabwean men and women, who had completed courses in aircraft maintenance, pilot training and technicians' courses at the training school of Ethiopian Airlines.

The 50 were refused for having inadequate qualifications and not sufficient experience, which, Dr Shava said, were "the usual euphemisms used by many in the parastatals and private sector when the real reason is often purely racial bias".

There was laughter from the Republican Front benches when Dr Shava told the House that his ministry had failed to convince Air Zimbabwe that the Ethiopian Airline training school was "one of the best institutions in the world and that the skill training programmes of this school were second to none".

As a result of this reluctance, he said after the Speaker had called the House to order, the Ministry of Manpower, with the Prime Minister's Office and the Ministry of Transport had formed an ad hoc transport advisory committee to "devise the most appropriate method" to secure the employment of the 50 in Air Zimbabwe.

Two visits were made to Ethiopia — in July and October last year — by a Government delegation which included officials both of the air force and of Air Zimbabwe.

The committee completed its work in two weeks and concluded that "the Ethiopian Airlines-trained personnel were adequately qualified and experienced to take up posts in Air Zimbabwe and receive remuneration equivalent to their local counterparts".

He said that air force and airline officials agreed with the recommendations.

"Yet you will be surprised to learn that even in spite of all the efforts, time and money that the Government spent in this exercise, Air Zimbabwe and some senior officials of the Ministry of Transport are still reluctant to implement these recommendations."

He said the employment of the 50 had been "somewhat regularised" after a directive from the Minister of Transport then, Mr Ernest Kadungure.

Mr Donald Goddard (RF, Lundi) told the minister it was "a fact" that the people he referred to were unable to pass the examinations set by Air Zimbabwe. Dr Shava replied he was not aware of any of them having failed, and asked for more statistics so he could follow the issue.

He said it was only now, that "significant improvements" were being seen in the corporation's manpower policy, thanks to the airline's new board of directors and "some progressive officials" in the Ministry of Transport.

The minister added that his ministry had learned that some 60 Zimbabweans had finished training in various fields with several airlines outside the country, but to date only 30 of them had been employed "with difficulty" with Air Zimbabwe and other firms in the aircraft industry.

He challenged the local aircraft industry to give the 30 as yet unemployed technicians work and with it, the necessary experience.

COTTON FARMERS WARN GOVERNMENT ON SUBSIDY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Mike Overmeyer]

[Text] WORRIED farmers in Gatooma yesterday warned the Government there would be a massive flight from cotton growing if they were not paid their usual $4,1 million subsidy due on last year's crop success.

The president of the Commercial Cotton Growers' Association, Mr Alistair Davies, said cotton production had plunged by 30 percent over the last three years — and it could drop another 10 percent this year.

He painted an even gloomier picture of the future if cotton growers were not given the subsidy — and a guaranteed pre-planting price for crops this year.

About 60 growers meeting yesterday accused the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, of holding back the millions that had been paid as a formality in previous years.

Production of the last 1979-80 cotton crop resulted in a surplus of more than two cents a kilogram due to the producer.

Mr Davies told farmers the $4.1 million payout was due to both commercial and small-scale cotton growers and would inject a substantial amount of cash into the peasant sector.

The Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, had already approved payment of the money, but it was still awaiting approval by the Treasury.

"I have been advised by Senator Norman that the Minister of Finance is currently out of the country, and it is hoped that an early decision will be received from him upon his return," Mr Davies told the farmers.

There had been little progress on setting a pre-planting price for the coming season which would allow farmers to plan a cropping programme.

"However, that is not to say we have given up. Negotiations are continuing in all these matters.

Vegetable oil

"Cotton, which will earn $77 million in foreign exchange from the crop we have just delivered, is extremely important to the country . . . the drop in plantings is extremely serious in terms of foreign exchange earnings and vegetable oil supplies.

"Please be assured that I will continue to pursue an increase in price as our number one priority this year," he said.

The South African crop had been short this year, resulting in unbudgeted sales to the country from Zimbabwe and saving considerably on transport costs to Europe.

Some of the farmers who complained about the diesel shortage were assured there were enough stocks for the planting season.

Delays in some areas were caused by wear-and-tear on tankers being overworked to keep up supplies.

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 5

[Article by Chemist Mafuba]

[Text] THE Secretary to the Ministry of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Robbie Mupawose, yesterday clarified the purpose of Dr Sydney Sekeramayi's visits to Fort Victoria.

On Monday the minister attended to problems of "unauthorised occupation" of the Lake Kyle-Great Zimbabwe area.

On Tuesday Dr Sekeramayi explained to district councillors the new concept of the "accelerated resettlement programme" which runs parallel to the normal resettlement exercise.

Next Monday he will attend to land issues pertaining to "squabbles" between Chiefs Mugabe and Charumbira.

Mr Mupawose said in an interview that it was incorrect to say Dr Sekeramayi's visits were entirely connected with the Lake Kyle-Great Zimbabwe case as reported yesterday.

Unauthorised occupation of the Lake Kyle-Great Zimbabwe area had been a subject "of considerable concern" made worse by the misuse of land and tree-cutting.

The Cabinet had set up a committee to co-ordinate efforts to resolve the matter.

The committee is made up of Dr Sekeramayi; the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo; the Minister of Natural Resources and Water Development, Senator Joseph Msika; and the Minister of Information, Immigration and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira.

"As far as reports are concerned," said Mr Mupawose, "the meeting was very successful."

In June the ministry distributed 500 000 forms to assess which people needed to be resettled. A total of 48 144 forms were returned in time and selection ended 10 days ago, with 31 294 people qualifying.

Now Dr Sekeramayi, his deputy, Mr Moven Mahachi, and ministry officials are touring the country explaining the aim of the accelerated resettlement programme.

Yesterday the minister was in Gwelo and Bulawayo while Mr Mahachi completed the exercise in Mashonaland. Today Dr Sekeramayi visits the Umgusa resettlement scheme in Matabeleland and the deputy minister will meet district councillors for Manicaland in Umtali.

UNIONS WIN BATTLE FOR PAY RAISES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 15

[Text] AFTER "tough" negotiations at industrial council level, Zimbabwe's textile workers are to get pay rises of up to 25 percent from January 1, trade union officials announced yesterday.

The president of the United Textile Workers' Union of Zimbabwe, Mr John Mutemi of Bulawayo, and the secretary-general, Mr Elphegio Soko of Salisbury said they had secured a 25 percent rise for the lowest-paid workers and relative increases for everyone in the other nine grades.

The workers at the bottom would have their pay increased from $20 a week to $25 a week.

Those at the top would go up from $82 a week to $98 a week.

"They were tough negotiations," Mr Soko said. "We entered them seeking an all round 50 percent increase.

"Since the employers could not meet that demand, we will now tell our members to work harder and increase production so the employers will have no excuse for not meeting our next claim," he said.

● In Salisbury yesterday Mr Charles Pasipanodya the general secretary of the National Union of the Clothing Industry, said long - serving clothing workers would benefit greatly from a 5 percent increase in their minimum wages.

The increase was part of the agreement reached between the union and representatives of the employers' associations last week and affects those employees who have served 10 years or more with one employer.

"I am thrilled that we made this breakthrough. For years we have always advocated that long service employees in the industry should be rewarded for their contribution to respective companies," he said in an interview.

The agreement comes into effect in January next year, and according to Mr Pasipanodya, it would encourage people to stay with one employer.

"It is very encouraging that for the first time long service employees have been recognised in our industry. We are very happy."

He added that his organisation would continue to fight for more increases for all workers in the industry in general.

"This is only the beginning. We are determined to continue to fight for more increases for all our members in the clothing industry. It is an onward battle," he said.

He said his union's achievement had helped the Government a "great deal by solving this problem which had been confronting the ministry."

POWER CUT ATTRIBUTED TO STAFF SHORTAGE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 6

[Text] THE temporary closure of Umniati power station a few weeks ago was caused mainly by resignations of staff who were attracted by better working conditions elsewhere, the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simbarashe Makoni, said yesterday.

Dr Makoni added that it would be necessary to engage foreign staff to fill vacancies in the Electricity Supply Commission and expatriates would not only perform essential services "but will also undertake training programmes for local Zimbabweans who are expected to give them their full co-operation in order to maximise the effectiveness of the training".

He emphasised the importance of power as an essential commodity and said its supply must not be jeopardised.

Presenting long-service awards at the power station near Gatooma, the minister said that while the country was going through a period of economic readjustment, pay structures and other working conditions varied from one employer to another.

"The Government, however, is always willing to discuss these matters so that staff remuneration is commensurate with job categories," he said.

He told the workers that where 'there was a shortage of skilled manpower the Government would find it difficult to match the salaries offered by the private sector.

"This does not imply that workers should put up with working conditions which are manifestly unfair. We are all workers and it is human to bargain for improved conditions through correct channels and procedures," he said.

"Any organisation which fails to train Zimbabweans with sufficient haste for eventual takeover from foreign personnel is doing the country a disservice."

BRIEFS

LOADER GIVEN MAPUTO--The Zimbabwe and Swaziland sugar industries are paying for a second sugar loader for the Caminhos de Ferro de Mozambique (CFM) bulk terminal at Maputo. The US$2 million required has been raised by Hippo Valley Estates Ltd, Triangle Sugar Corporation Ltd and the Swaziland Sugar Association. The second loader should be in operation by August 1982. The equipment, ordered in February, is being supplied by the Portuguese company, Mague, which constructed the terminal back in 1965. The need for the new loader, according to Sugar Sales general manager Mr Geoff Thomas, arose when the old one broke down for two months earlier this year halting all shipments from the port. "It will obviate the position that could happen whereby there could be no exports at all if the first loader breaks down again, which in turn would bring the sugar estates virtually to a standstill," said Mr Thomas. "It is an insurance policy, but a very essential one," he added. Loading from the terminal, which has a storage capacity of 120 000 tonnes, should reach 500 tonnes an hour. At present the rate is somewhere between 250 and 300 tonnes. Hippo Valley, Triangle and SSA are literally giving the loader to CFM rather than lending the money, as they did for the terminal 16 years ago. SMITH GUARDS WITHDRAWN--The Government has withdrawn security guards from the Republican Front leader, Mr Ian Smith, and the UANC president, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa confirmed yesterday. He explained that the move was in line with what the former regime had done to former Rhodesian Prime Minister, Mr Garfield Todd, when he lost his job. "We are following the practice of the former government. Mr Todd's guards were withdrawn when he ceased to be the prime minister of the country," the minister said. A Republican Front spokesman confirmed the removal of guards from Mr Smith but declined to comment. Both Bishop Muzowera and Mr Smith had three guards each. STUDENTS PROTEST--Bulawayo.--About 250 student teachers from the United College of Education here marched into the city centre to stage a demonstration outside the regional education offices. They said they were protesting against the "below minimum wage" rates they were being offered when they did practice teaching. The demonstrators threatened to boycott classes until the Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, flew to Bulawayo to address them. KAROI TRADERS CO-OP--Businessmen in Karoi have formed a business development co-operative in response to the Government's call for such arrangements, the secretary Mr Eric Ndoro, said yesterday. In an interview with Zimbabwe Information Services, he said the Urungwe Business Development Co-operative, which had just been registered, would enable members to benefit by buying from a wholesale supply in which each was a director. "We have acquired a big warehouse which we intend to use as our wholesale depot. Members will be able to order all their goods through the wholesale," he said. Previously small businessmen could not make much profit because wholesalers charged exorbitant prices, he said. Each member would be able to hold shares not exceeding $1 000 initially until the society has established itself and had more assets, Mr Ndoro said. Members would be able to get managerial and financial expertise from courses to be organised by the co-operative. "Each of the members will benefit. We intend holding refresher courses and inviting leading businessmen and economists to lecture us," he said. The co-operative intended buying plant and machinery which would be used by the members. Funds would be raised by mortgaging movable and immovable facilities. Mr Ndoro said the co-operative would be able to negotiate overdrafts and loans on behalf of the members.--ZIS. WHITES WORRIED ABOUT FUTURE--Many whites are worried about their future in Zimbabwe because of the talk of a one-party state and the ban on furniture exports, the chairman of the Republican Front, Mr Geoff Kluckow, said yesterday. He said his party was finding it difficult to urge whites to stay and build Zimbabwe. "The reaction is that those who left were wise and that those who chose to stay are the losers," Mr Kluckow said. Mr Kluckow was commenting on reports that some whites wanted to burn their furniture because they were not allowed to take it out. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 11]

SA LINK CUT--Zimbabwe's Institute of Personnel Management today becomes a fully independent and autonomous organisation after formally breaking away from the South African body. The break, which was decided on Wednesday night at a city hotel, ended an association with the South African institute which stemmed back to the early seventies. The vice-president of the IPM, Mr Terry Hemming, said on Wednesday that the break was for political reasons. "Zimbabwe and South Africa have taken a fundamentally different course since April last year. We simply wanted to remove any possible political conflict for a totally non-political body," he said. NHONGO'S E. EUROPEAN TOUR--The Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, leading a delegation of four, left yesterday for a three-week visit to Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union and Bulgaria. Mrs Nhongo said that in Czechoslovakia she would study the role of women in industry. In the Soviet Union "they want me to meet and share experiences with their first lady cosmonaut, Mrs Valentina Tereshkova". The delegation would be there for four days. "Then part of the team will return, while the others go to Bulgaria to attend a conference of the international movement of the non-aligned countries." The delegation would attend the session as observers for the four days of the meeting. The team consists of three people from the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs and an MP for the Victoria Province, Miss Sheba Tavarwisa. The

NEW SCHOOLS--A massive project to build more than 440 secondary schools before June next year was well under way, the Deputy Minister of Works, Mr Grafton Ziyenge, said yesterday. About 38 of these, all rural secondary schools, would be completed before December this year, Mr Ziyenge said in an interview in Salisbury yesterday. The ministry was also going to build 316 rural clinics all over Zimbabwe. "Our development programmes are mainly directed at the rural areas because that is where the majority of the people are, and instead of taking our builders from the urban areas, we will try to recruit builders from those areas. "We want to utilise the manpower in the areas and for every man who can handle a trowel and a brick it means a job," said the deputy minister. The move would also benefit people in the rural areas by creating jobs for the general workers. In addition to these projects, he said, the ministry was going to build a secondary school in each of the former townships. "We are a service ministry, and whatever Government wants to undertake, we are the ministry that has the responsibility to carry out those requirements. STRANDED RAIL STOCK--The Government is arranging to bring back a number of Zimbabwe rail wagons trapped in Mozambique during the war, Mr Chinamano told the Assembly. Although most of them had been reclaimed, there were still a few there. He told Mr Paddy Shields (RF Bulawayo Central) who asked what had happened to the wagons that there was no need for anxiety. There were about 28 wagons which Mozambique had decided to use for ferrying molasses and some of them had been used to carry petrol. The minister said a question on the difference between the cost of locomotives on loan from Mozambique and South Africa from Mr Donald Goddard (RF, Lundi), revealed his "subconscious thinking." There were no South African locomotives on hire to Zimbabwe. "We accept offers from people who want to help us," he said. Mozambique had offered nine locomotives, Zambia four and Malawi four. TRANSPORT PROBLEMS--Zimbabwe is losing about $5m a week because of the country's transport problems, Mr Chinamano told the Assembly. The minister was commenting on the gravity of the transport situation during the Committee of Supply consideration of his ministry vote. He said he had recently visited a tobacco firm where he had seen stockpiled "tonnes and tonnes" of tobacco said to be worth millions of dollars. Mr Chinamano told Mr Denis Walker (RF, Bulawayo North), who had asked what had caused the transport crisis, that it was mainly due to the loss of manpower to maintain Zimbabwe's locomotives aggravated by South Africa's withdrawal of a number of its locomotives. Mr Walker also asked the minister when there would be an improvement in the situation. Mr Chinamano said everything possible was being done to deal with the crisis and that the best solution was for Zimbabwe to have enough of its own locomotives and sufficient manpower to maintain them. The country had already ordered 60 locomotives, he said, and more could have been obtained had it not been for the fact that Zimbabwe would soon be turning to electrified railway lines. The minister added: "By early next year Zimbabwe will be self-sufficient." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 15]

SABOTAGE OF FUEL TANKERS--Mr Chinamano, told the Assembly that he had heard rumours of petrol tankers coming empty to Zimbabwe from South Africa, or returning to South Africa without their fuel being offloaded. Mr Exevier Matibenga (ZANU PF, Midlands) asked the minister, during the committee of supply debate on the Ministry of Transport vote to confirm whether he had heard of railway trucks which came into this country with fuel from South Africa and a few days later returned to South Africa marked empty, but still full of fuel. Mr Chinamano said he did not know if they came full and went back full "or vice versa", but said he had heard that there had been sabotage concerning fuel transported from the south. Theorising, he said people wrote on the tankers as they returned to South Africa: "Racist South Africa" and when they crossed the border the railway men there saw the graffiti and thought: "We will fix these natives." It was then possible they then sent the trucks back empty, with the attitude "you have asked for it", the minister said. "This is the work of saboteurs and the railway authorities are stamping it out," he added. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Oct 81 p 15]

PF SLATES HOVE--The Patriotic Front party's executive secretary for information and publicity, Mr M. M. C. Nziramasanga, yesterday deplored the warning by the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, that he might act against public rallies. It was a most unfortunate statement which negated the fundamental principle of freedom of expression "for which the masses of Zimbabwe struggled, suffered and died", he said. "ZANU (PF) was the first to demonstrate in favour of a one-party state. The minister did not condemn that. Why should there be violence when the PF stages demonstrations? "When ZANU (PF) demonstrated, the PF did not interfere," he said. The people were beginning to exercise their hard-won freedoms and threats to crack down on opponents posed the question: "Where are we going?" Violence should be stamped out immediately. This was the duty of the police and the courts. But peaceful demonstrations were a democratic right of a free people in a free country. They were genuine expressions of the people's opinion. Whether they were for or against the Government, they should be respected as expressions of the masses. "If they become violent, the PF will part ways with them," he said. The idea of a one-party state was promoted by ZANU (PF). Four other parties, PF, ZANU, UANC and the RF were opposed to it. "The leaders of these organisations continue to make their views known." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Oct 81 p 8]

TRUCKS HIRED--The Ministry of Agriculture has hired 150 trucks from various Government agencies to help transport crops from communal areas to marketing depots, and this should mean completing the exercise by November, Mr Harry Howden, chief agronomist, who is also helping to coordinate the transport of communal crops, said recently. BRIEFS

EMIGRATION RECORD--Salisbury, September 24--Emigration from Zimbabwe reached a record 12,551 during the first seven months of this year, according to official figures released here Wednesday. The number of emigrants, who are almost wholly white, was 8,862 for the same period last year, the monthly Digest of Statistics said. In July alone 1,621 Zimbabweans left the country definitively. Those who have left between independence on April 18 last year and July this year number 26,847, equal to about 12 per cent of the total white population of about 220,000 at the time of independence, the Digest reported. But the true figure is probably higher, the Digest suggested. The figures were known to be incomplete, it said, because border crossings at other than official points were not fully recorded. There was also evidence that residents who said they intended to leave for less than a year extended their absence or even left permanently. Meanwhile, immigration in the first seven months of the year totalled 5,215, compared with 3,110 over the same period last year. (A. F. P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 25 Sep 81 p 26]

FRANCE SAID TO BE BECOMING VERY ACTIVE IN CENTRAL AFRICA

Dakar AFRICA in French No 133 Aug, Sep 81 pp 19-20

[Article by Pierre Biarnes: "France Again Very Active in Central Africa"]

[Text] Three months after Francois Mitterrand's victory, it is in Central Africa that one can best observe presently the multiple facets of France's new Africa policy, for it is there--leaving Western Sahara aside--that the former metropolitan power, now ruled by the left, is confronted with the most diverse situations and the most urgent problems.

Cameroon, which is presently the francophone African country experiencing the strongest economic expansion, and whose regime continues to enjoy a remarkable and highly valued stability, was honored by being the first country on the dark continent to receive the new French minister of cooperation, Mr Jean-Pierre Cot. Already, on the night of 4-5 July, France had proved without hesitation that it remained faithful to its commitments by taking out of its own stocks, in accordance with the defense agreements in force between Paris and Yaounde, the additional munitions necessary for the African country to deal with the clear Nigerian threat then posed on its western borders. This, however, will not prevent Mr Cot from paying an official visit to Lagos, too, this month.

No "Leftist Barracuda"

It was this same concern to reassure, and a fortiori to communicate the fact--to all those who nurse secret hopes, in light of the present government's unsparing condemnation of the previous majority's interventionism in sub-Saharan Africa--that there will be no "leftist Barracudas," which also led the new French president to move fairly quickly to receive President Bongo of Gabon at the Elysee, even though he was the object of personal attacks within the ranks of the PS [Socialist Party], as soon as it was clear that such attacks, which scarcely take French interests into account, were in some degree excessive.

Such a basic attitude can nevertheless accommodate many modalities and many nuances. And it is in this context that one must place the decision to hold the next Franco-African summit in Paris, rather than Kinshasa, as was decided last year, even though at the same time high French diplomatic officials gave Zaire to understand that France would nevertheless scrupulously continue to carry through on all the cooperation accords concluded previously with that country, including those in the military domain (in particular it is French experts who provide the continuing training of the Zairian paratroop commandos, the regime's elite force).

Central African Republic: To the Rescue?

In the Central African Republic [CAR], by contrast, it must be conceded that for the time being the nuances are poorly disguising a rather serious embarrassment. Here again, there is no question either of "pulling out," or, on the other hand, of putting someone in power, whoever he may be, by force, even though it may be that the former majority's legacy in Central Africa is the most difficult of all for the new majority to inherit. Nevertheless, as between a weak president with weak control over the situation, who nevertheless was properly elected, whatever his opponents may say, and a murky opposition which, with the exception of Abel Goumba, consists mainly of former collaborators of Bokassa, while David Dacko was at least for part of the time a victim of the deposed emperor, whom would one choose, given a choice? A waiting game is going on at present. Cooperation with Dacko continues; but it is dispensed quite carefully: more than ever before, financial assistance is provided sparingly; technical advisers are being withdrawn from several positions of high responsibility which they have held for 2 years, particularly in the financial area; very strict orders have been given to the 1,400 soldiers from metropolitan France maintained in Bangui and especially in Bouar, that in order to avoid an explosion that might have unpredictable consequences, they are to stay totally out of the domestic political life of the country. And, with that as a start, there is still hope that Dacko can be brought to gather around him again some individuals who are at least potentially more credible and who might take his place later on. But it is clear that such a balanced position may well not be easy to maintain for a very long time. So, on the pretext of not getting involved, will the Central African army be allowed one day to resolve the problem in its own way?

Chad: Strengthen the GUNT

In Chad, by contrast, a period of uncertainty at last seems to be coming to an end. After having at one time considered not agreeing to return to Ndjamena until the Libyan army departs, the new decision-makers involved in France's Africa policy have wisely decided that this would lead to an impasse, whereas on the contrary, a gradual return of the former metropolitan power, by strengthening the GUNT [Transitional National Union Government], even to the point of supplying replacement parts, will allow the proper time for Goukouni, one might reasonably hope, to call himself for the departure of his burdensome ally of convenience, and thus to drive Col Qadhdhafi into a corner.

It was in this context that an initial exploratory mission was sent to Ndjamena toward the end of July, headed by Ambassador Campredon, which followed the decision the previous month to cut off--this time totally and permanently--the admittedly scant assistance it had continued to provide, secretly to Hissein Habre, via Sudan, and openly to Col Kamougue and his southerners, through the CAR. Little by little, France is thus moving toward reactivating (they had never actually been broken off officially) its diplomatic relations and civilian cooperation with Chad. As for an eventual resumption of its military technical assistance to the Chadian central government, whether directly, through the New Integrated Army--presently being created--or indirectly, by supporting the deployment of the famous inter-African force called for by the Lome accords, it is not completely out of the question, even if opinion in Paris still remains divided.

Finally, and this is not the least interesting fact, the first 3 months of the Mitterrand administration were marked, as might have been predicted, by the beginnings of a major rapprochement in relations between the Congo--which is also socialist and is presently booming thanks to oil--and its former metropolitan power, after nearly 20 years of various misunderstandings. President Denis Sassou Nguesso's official visit to Paris put the seal on this reconciliation, which showed also that, contrary to the mistaken fears of supporters of the former majority, French influence in sub-Saharan Africa has entered a new phase of growth.

MINISTERS CONSULT WITH WORLD BANK HEAD

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 2 Oct 81 p 5

[Text]

WASHINGTON, October 2 - African ministers Thursday began what is likely to be a lengthy process of consultations with the new World Bank president, Tom Clausen, on a report proposing a "new deal" for Black Africa on the basis of a "re-ordering of post-independence priorities".

The hefty document, released as the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the bank was drawing toward its end here today, sheds crude light on the shortcomings of sub-Saharan African countries' development effort.

It offers the outline of a strategy to tackle the causes of the economic crisis facing the continent, which comprises 21 of the world's 31 least developed nations.

A doubling in real terms of official aid to the region, from 4,900 million dollars last year to 9,100,million in 1990, will be indispensable to help get the needed domestic reforms and adjustments under way, it says.

Drawn up by World Bank staff on the request of the African countries themselves, the document, specked with statistics, places the emphasis on three key points :

Candid appraisal

1) African countries have followed trade and exchange rate policies that have "overprotected" their nascent industry, "held back agriculture, and absorbed much administrative capacity".

2) They must seek increased efficiency in the public sector through planning and management of resources, and

3) They must reconsider price, tax and exchange rate policies which, according to the report, have discouraged domestic food production.

The frank and open language of the report, distributed to the governments concerned only a few weeks ago, initially irked some of the African delegations here.

But reliable sources said Mr. Clausen made it clear to the African caucus here, chaired by Senegal's Finance Minister Ousmane Seck, that the report was not meant to be "critical" but a "candid" appraisal of where the region stands and how its 39 countries could be shunted onto a better course.

The African ministers, who also met IMF managing director Jacques de Larosière for discussions that reportedly centred on IMF conditions for lending were said to have accepted Mr. Clausen's assurances.

The sources said they set up a "contact group" to keep in touch with the World Bank between now and next May, when the IMF Bank Development Committee will consider the report at its scheduled session in Helsinki, Finland.

World Bank sources said Mr. Clausen intended to continue his "dialogue" with the Africans during a planned tour of several East African countries next month. (A.F.P.)

ENGINEERING PROFESSOR PROMOTES IRON, STEEL INDUSTRIES

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 24 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Dr Gladius Lewis: "Africa Must Have Its Own Iron and Steel Industries"]

[Text] THERE is undoubtedly a direct relationship between steel production and industrial development through three main linkages.

First, historically the strongest industrialised nations are those with the largest steel industries.

Second, the "take-off" stage of economic development is characterised by an increased in per capita steel production. It has been shown that as per capita national income rises to about $700 (at fixed 1963 prices) the rate of steel consumption per national income also increases markedly.

Third, basic indicators of economic progress in a nation (such as industrial production and gross domestic product) are known functions of per capita steel consumption.

Currently, raw steel production in sub-Sahara Africa represents only about 0,1 percent of the world's total. This has led to a dependence by these countries on the developed world for a material that is crucial to the production of capital equipment and consumer goods. This dependence is not only undesirable but also expensive (for example, Cameroon's iron and steel imports in 1979 cost some $57 million).

National iron and steel industries in developing countries are a vital first step towards breaking this dependence and progressing towards full industrialisation and economic development.

For example, a good proportion of Africa's main capital and consumer goods imports could have been manufactured in these countries if such industries existed. If these industries are not set up soon and present levels of steel consumption are maintained, a significent proportion of Africa's mineral wealth would be lost through exports.

This is obviously an unacceptable situation as it would lead to depletion of the continent's mineral resources without any attendant improvement of living standards.

There is therefore an urgent need for consideration to be given to the establishment of an iron and steel industry in those African countries where it is most viable. What are pre-requisites for such viability?

First, there are the mineral resource supply requirements. These are made up of basic raw materials (iron ore, coke, limestone or dolomite), processing materials (steel scrap, ferrosilicon, ferro-aluminium, ferromanganese), refractories (limestone, silica, etc.), flux (fluorite or limestone), ferro-alloy materials (nickel, chromium, etc.), plating or coating additives (tin, zinc, etc.) and other additives (lead, sulphur, etc.).

Second, there are power requirements (which are enormous; 13 kWh per kg of steel produced).

As no one country in Africa possesses all of this array of resource needs, there is a case for a co-operative approach.

For example, in the sub-Sahara zone such an approach could involve the supply of iron ore from Sierra Leone or Liberia, chromium from Zimbabwe or the Malagasy Republic, manganese from Botswana or Upper Volta, cobalt from Zambia or Zaire, tin from Burundi or Mozambique, limestone from Malawi or Ethiopia, zinc from the Congo or Kenya and natural gas from Nigeria or Gabon.

One point to note here is that for economic exploitation sufficient quantities of the mineral resources ought to be present in the form of low-cost high-grade ore deposits. Now is the time to plan for this integrated iron and steel industry before all or most of these deposits are exhausted (considering the high rate of exploitation by foreign interests).

Otherwise the costs of using deposits of marginal value (when the high-grade ores have been depleted) become prohibitive. And because steel consumption in Africa is low (only 0.3 percent of the world's total) there would be no reservoir of recycleable materials to draw upon.

The current situation as regards iron and steel production in Africa is as follows. Small-scale integrated plants exist in some places (Egypt, Algeria, Tunisia) whereas small electric furnaces are used in other countries to recycle domestically - consumed foreign - produced scrap.

There are also a number of small steel rolling mills (in Tanzania, Ghana, Nigeria, etc.) which are used for the conversion of imported ingots to galvanised corrugated sheets and other semi-manufactured steel products.

Finally, there are many plans afoot to expand existing steel production capacities (as in the Helwan and Highveld steelworks in Egypt and South Africa, respectively) or install new plants (as in Warri and Ajaokuta in Nigeria and Misurata in Libya).

One common feature of steel production in sub-Sahara Africa is that production levels are too low to benefit from economies of scale (the production capacity of the ZISCO plant at Redcliff is only 410 000 tonnes). In this regard the proposed subregional integrated steel complex must have a capacity of at least 6 million tonnes a year.

An iron and steel industry is very capital-intensive (a plant to produce six million tonnes a year would cost about $5 billion) but the manufacturing industries that utilise the products can be labour - intensive, thus creating employment opportunities.

African nations ought to embark upon this project after consideration has been given to such questions as collective ownership by participating countries based on capital input, location of the plant, products type to be related to current and future needs of the participating countries and no equity participation by outside interests.

With these and other considerations in mind, Nigeria seems best placed for the location of this plant. It has vast reserves of energy (oil, natural gas, coal, etc.), enormous investable surplus capital (its trade surplus in 1979 was about $6.5 billion), the largest domestic market in the sub-Sahara Africa and it is centrally located with respect to population concentrations in the subregion (transport costs of raw materials from the other countries to the plant would thus be low).

Because Japan produces the best quality steel at the lowest possible cost, Japanese technology in this field ought to be acquired for the plant, as has been done in other areas.

For example, in 1971 a Brazilian company entered into a contract with Nippon Steel to provide the necessary engineering services in the construction of parts of a steel plant (no direct equity participation by the Japanese was involved).

SOCIALIST INTER-AFRICA IS EVALUATED

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 11 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] In February this year a meeting took place at which representatives of governments and political parties from Senegal, Tunisia, Morocco, Sudan, Somalia, Gambia, Ghana, Jibouti and Mauritius decided to establish the Socialist Inter-African Organization as an umbrella for African "Democratic Socialists."

It is widely known that Leopold Senghor former President of Senegal and Bourgiba would want to see the S.I.A. as an African branch of Socialist International. Mr Senghor is a Vice-President of the latter organization.

It is important that Africans take more than a passing interest in the Tunis meeting and its implication in both global and African contexts.

In the first place, the organization claims to represent governments and parties of the tradition of "democratic socialism" but uses Senghor's yardstick which excludes countries and peoples led by parties formed in the crucible of struggles for democracy and socialism such as Zimbabwe, Angola, Mozambique to mention a few.

It is clear that the S.I.A. criteria for democracy and socialism are based on a very narrow, rigid and unrealistic definition which may have very little to do with the reality of contemporary Africa.

Congress

It is interesting to note that even though the "Constitutive Congress" adopted a motion declaring an "unwavering support for the African peoples and National Liberation Movement fighting to eradicate the last pockets of apartheid and colonialism...in Namibia and South Africa..." the vanguard liberation movements in Southern Africa such as SWAPO of Namibia and the ANC (South Africa) were not invited.

Also absent from the TUNIS gathering were the Frontline States whose contribution to the liberation struggle cannot be overemphasized. In the ranks of the front-line states are countries like Tanzania and Zambia whose leaders have supported socialism and humanism for decades.

Generally, in terms of attendance, the TUNIS congress rather demonctrated an apathetic response to the idea of the Socialist Inter-Africa.

Of the 15 political parties attending the meeting only 10 elected to join the organization; and in fact one of the main organizers--the Socialist Alliance of People's Forces from Morocco--refused to join the organization at the last stages of the congress.

There are many valid reasons for the lack of enthusiasm for the S.I.A. Perhaps the most important one is the close politico-military dependence of the majority of the members on the Western capitalist countries especially the U.S.A. and France.

Charter

In the charter of the S.I.A. the members agreed to "consider Nonalignment as a common strategy for the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, racism and zionism...and for the development of international cooperation and the setting up of a fair and durable peace among the peoples and the nations."

Nonetheless, Morocco, Senegal, Jibouti and Somalia have French and American military bases on their territories, and right after the congress the Sudanese government declared its readiness to give permission to the U.S. to build a military base on its territory.

The leaders of the Indian Ocean Island of Mauritius at the time of the congress fully agreed with the British annexation of the Island of Diego Garcia where the U.S.A. has the biggest military base in the Indian Ocean.

Is it any wonder therefore that a majority of African States, including those that sympathize with the Socialist International or have relationships with some of its European socialist parties did not want to be associated with the S.I.A.?

Indeed the still-birth of the S.I.A. received only scant notice in the English-speaking press and the Francophone press was largely critical of the S.I.A. magazines like JEUENE AFRIQUE, called the S.I.A. an instrument of neo-colonialism..." and an "international of charlatans" some newspapers noted that the member-parties of the S.I.A. had little in common with democracy and less with Socialism!

Another factor that detracts from the acceptability of the S.I.A. is the personality of its leader, the former President of Senegal L. Sedar Senghor.

It is well known that Senghor has always felt destined to lead Pan-African Movement. This ambition has led him to propound one untenable theory after another.

At one time he attempted to unite Africans on the basis of his "Negritude" theory and when that failed to catch on he switched gears to "African Socialism" in the sixties. Now it is "democratic socialism" which he told the Tunis meeting was the African interpretation of Marx and Engels.

Question

A pertinent question to ask ourselves at this juncture is what is the probable motive behind the formation of the S.I.A. at this moment. The answer lies partly in the speech given by Senghor in Tunis and partly in the current realignment of forces globally.

The balance of forces in Africa has shifted in favour of progressive forces. The imperialist forces watch in almost helpless dismay the on going struggle for self-determination and genuine economic independence; neo-colonialism has been totally exposed and discredited.

However, new forms of exploitation continue to be explored. Since the glorious early days of the African Independence Movement, many governments have been forced to adopt the rhetoric of socialism as a smokescreen behind which to hide their anti-people activities.

The struggle for genuine socialism served to expose such phonies but in their desperation, they are regrouping under a new slogan to perpetuate the old status quo. Old wines in new wine skins!

Attempt

Perhaps the most telling point of all is Mr Senghor's latest attempt to deny the validity of the class struggle in individual countries of the third world, favouring instead the "north-south polarity as the principal contradiction of our time.

No doubt there is an urgent necessity to establish a New International Economic Order in the world. Indeed the struggle for that new order is a legitimate struggle of the people.

But the old economic order resulting from colonial and neo-colonial exploitation has created forms of class domination in Africa as elsewhere in the third world.

No less than the struggle for the New International Economic Order is the importance of the struggle for social and economic progress and justice in every country. Mr Senghor's denial of this obvious truth is the clue to the motive force behind the establishment of the SIA.

The SIA is an attempt to freeze the development of the African revolution at the neo-colonial phase and make this continent a stooge of the capitalist powers. Thus it is right and proper that this organization be exposed for what it truly is: "the international of charlatans."

FRONTLINE STATES URGED TO FORM TASK FORCE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 23 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

[Text]

THE Frontline States have been urged to consider the formation of a military task force to be deployed to contain invasions from racist South Africa.

This was suggested yesterday at the on-going consultative meeting of Eastern, Central and Southern African Students Organisations at the University of Dar es Salaam's main campus.

A paper presented by the Tanzania National Union of Students (MUWATA) also urged the Frontline States to strengthen their military capabilities in the light of the grave situation obtaining in Southern Africa.

"An African joint force has proved difficult to master. We strongly believe the defence of the Frontline States can only be assured by the creation of its own task force", the paper said.

MUWATA commended the efforts already made by the Frontline States in soliciting world opinion to condemn the racist South Africa and western imperialist manoeuvres in this part of Africa.

It called for further support for the liberation movements and isolation of the racist regime.

Papers from seven delegations at the meeting underscored the need for the student youth to be in the forefront in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism.

The papers were from Zambia, Botswana, Mauritius, Uganda, Iraq, the International Union of Students (IUS), Asta Bremen — a progressive youth organisation from the Federal Republic of Germany — and MUWATA.

An IUS paper, presented by Ndugu John Kwadjo, called on African students organisations to establish a solidarity with other progressive youth organisations in Asia, Latin America and capitalist Europe as well.

He said the youths were an important aspect in the struggle against imperialism, for they served as intonators of popular class struggles.

The Asta Bremen representative, Ndugu A. Armgot, explained the role played by western capitalist nations in propping up the racist South African regime.

In 1978 for example, he said, West German ranked third among investors in South Africa after Britain and the United States. A total of 204 German companies invested a total of 2,500million/- in South Africa.

ILO COURSE ASSISTS IN SOLUTION OF CONSTRUCTION ISSUES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Text] The government has been urged to form a contractors support agency to enable local firms acquire the capacity to handle major projects now given to foreign companies.

The Mwananchi Engineering and Construction Company (MECCO) General Manager, Ndugu N. Lemunge, told reporters in Dar es Salaam yesterday, that lack of capital and skilled consultants and engineers were the basic constraints facing local construction firms.

He also cited "rigid and out-dated" contract specifications and conditions applied in the construction industry as being unfavourable to local firms, adding that they should be reviewed to become more relevant.

Briefing the press at the Dar es Salaam International Airport on arrival from Gaberone, Botswana, where he conducted an eleven-day course on "the construction industry and rural development," Ndugu Lemunge said unless such hitches were removed, foreign firms would continue to dominate the construction industry in the country.

The General Manager, who is also an International Labour Organisation (ILO) construction management consultant, hailed the formation of the National Construction Council but emphasised that it should be supplemented by a contractors support agency.

"The formation of the council is the first step. There must be a supplementary agency to assist local constractors in processing financial loans and overdrafts from financial institutions," he said.

He explained that such applications were not easily accepted from individual companies because construction was regarded as high risk business by financial institutions.

"The alternative would be for the government to inject money into these institutions through the back door which would be drawn by local contractors through the front door," he suggested.

Ndugu Lemunge, who is also an author of an ILO report on local construction firms in Tanzania, Zambia, Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Malawi which he studied last year, said the contractors needed training in construction management to improve their performance.

"In Tanzania, this could be provided by MECCO or any other established construction institution," he said.

He meanwhile explained that construction firms in the country were preparing a constitution for a national contractors association, adding that he hoped the new body would be registered before the end of the year.

The Gaberone seminar held at the Botswana Institute of Development Management (IDM) was attended by 21 senior government officials from Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland.

The first similar course designed by the ILO to assist East and Southern African governments in solving construction problems was held at the East and Southern Africa Management Institute (ESAMI) in Arusha last year.

Ndugu Lemunge hinted that the ILO had plans to institutionalise the courses and base them in one African country.

YOUTH URGED TO SPEARHEAD LIBERATION STRUGGLE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 22 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

[Text] The youth from free African countries have been urged to spearhead the liberation struggle by working closely with the liberation movements.

The Executive Secretary of the OAU Liberation Committee, Colonel Hashim Mbita, said this yesterday when opening a five-day consultative meeting of the Eastern, Central and Southern African Students Organisations at the University Hill in Dar es Salaam.

Colonel Mbita further urged the youth to popularise the struggle in their respective countries and elsewhere in the world.

He said that the youth from free Africa should be the inexhaustible reservoir of encouragement to national liberation movements, source of material supply, mass mobilizers, public educators and torch bearers of the struggle for African freedom, independence and dignity.

At the moment, Colonel Mbita said, the Namibian question is on top of — the international political agenda. "Since January in Geneva, when the South African regime refused to cooperate with international communities to implement UN Security Council Resolution 435, the OAU has taken a number of decisions to intensify the struggle".

He said one of those decisions was the adoption of the Arusha Plan of Action on Namibia. In this plan, the youth are called upon to play a specific role.

"You may therefore wish to abreast your attention to this document", he told the attentive audience.

Colonel Mbita expressed concern over the failure of the African youth to express seriosu concern over the recent racist South African rugby tour of New Zealand and now in the United States.

"It was very heartening to see how anti-apartheid movements in New Zealand and elsewhere in the world reacted against the tour.

"But it was unfortunately lamentable that in Africa the reaction was not that vocal", he said adding that one wondered where the youth vigilance and militancy of the 60s and early 70s had vanished to.

However, he lauded the role played by the youth in the Southern African liberation struggle — the role they played in Mozambique, Angola, and Zimbabwe and the one they are playing in the continuing liberation struggle in Namibia and South Africa.

He was appreciative of the idea of convening the meeting for no other purpose than to mobilise the youth towards increased support for the liberation struggle in Southern Africa.

About 40 delegates have already arrived for the seminar. They are from Botswana, Zambia, Mauritius, Kenya, Angola and Uganda. Representatives of liberation movements of PAC and ANC, the International Union of Students from Ghana, Senegal and Vietnam are also in attendance.

Delegates from Burundi, Iraq, Mozambique and Zimbabwe and the General Union of Palestinian Students are expected to arrive any time.

OAU MEDICAL SLAM--Addis Ababa, 1 Oct--The Organisation of African Unity (OAU) on Wednesday vehemently condemned the readmission of the Medical Association of South Africa (MASA) to the World Medical Association (WMA). "Diabolical schemes by certain countries" were responsible for the constitutional amendment that made MASA's re-entry possible, the OAU said in a press statement. MASA was readmitted at a WMA conference now in progress in Lisbon, Portugal. The move was "a travesty of the most elementary ethics of the medical profession which the World Medical Association seeks to promote," the OAU said, adding that the decision had been taken in spite of "overwhelming evidence of collusion" between MASA and Pretoria. The statement alleged that: "The callous treatment meted out to Steve Biko by doctors Ivor Lang, Benjamin Tucker, Colin Hersche and others in Pretoria hospital would make any decent and principles medical officer bow his head in utter shame." It was referring to the death of black activist Steve Biko of injuries received while in custody in September 1977. The Panafrican body called on members of the WMA to re-examine their continued membership in the association in light of its involvement with apartheid. TARIFF RISE NOTICE--Dar-es-Salaam, 28 Sep--East African Conference Lines (EACL) is reportedly expected to come under strong pressure this week to give shippers in Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia an extra month's notice of its plans to raise tariffs. The tariff rise, according to reliable reports here today, is being discussed by the board of the Inter-governmental Standing Committee on Shipping (ISCOS) which will meet EACL in Mombasa, Kenya, later this week. ISCOS, bringing together the governments of Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia, was formed 14 years ago to coordinate shipping policies and negotiate issues pertaining to shipping on behalf of the four member-governments. The organisation's secretariat, headed by a Zambian, is based in Mombasa. The new strategy by ISCOS is designed to give shippers in the four African countries five months from the time EACL proposes new rates to the date they become operative. Under existing agreements EACL is required to give ISCOS three months' notice of a tariff rise and local shippers one extra month. The ISCOS proposal would make this two months. Local shipping experts predicted strong resistence from EACL in view of unpredictable operating cost rises in the shipping industry, but a Tanzanian ISCOS official was quoted in the government DAILY NEWS as say that the move was well within the United Nations code on shipping tariffs. DOS SANTOS VISIT TO IMPROVE TIES WITH FRANCE

AB111149 Paris AFP in French 1431 GMT 10 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 10 Oct (AFP)--The visit to France next week of Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the People's Republic of Angola--the first ever paid by any Angolan head of state since the country's independence in 1985--will help solidify the rapprochment between the two countries following the coming to power of President Mitterrand, observers believe.

During his official working visit on 14 and 15 October, President dos Santos will hold discussions with Mr Mitterrand to be followed by a luncheon. He will also be the 15th African head of state to be received at the Elysee since 21 May.

During the previous 7-year period, French-Angolan relations did not reach the level expected, as the former Portuguese colony often accused France of tolerating on its soil movements hostile to the Luanda government, such as UNITA, the Angolan National Liberation Front and the Front for the Liberation of the Cabinda Enclave. However, relations improved gradually, and embassies were opened in Paris and Luanda.

President dos Santos' visit is not the first contact of the Angolan authorities with the new French Government. Last August, Guy Penne and Regis Debray, who are respectively adviser and roving ambassador at the French presidency, went to Luanda and in September, Angolan Foreign Minister Paolo Jorge held talks in Paris with Claude Cheysson.

In February 1981, 1 month after the visit to Luanda of Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet, the Angolan ambassador in Paris, Luis de Almeida, stated that France could and should play an important role in Southern Africa, and particularly within the contact group countries on Namibia.

In the economic field, trade has grown considerably during the past few years and reached about Fr400 million in 1980--a figure three times higher than that of 1978. On the other hand, in 1981, contracts worth about Fr1 billion were signed between Angola and some French companies.

Technical cooperation has also developed with a variety of projects, particularly in the oil, mechanical, coffee production and fishing fields.

DOS SANTOS SPEECH IN SOFIA REPORTED

AB061636 Luanda Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Text] The president of the party and of the republic, Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, who has been on an official and friendly visit to the People's Republic of Bulgaria since 2 October, is expected to leave that friendly country today for Hungary on the third leg of a tour which will take him to several socialist countries.

Yesterday in Sofa, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, speaking before a workers' rally, appealed to all progressive forces of the world to come to Angola's aid in order to enable it cope with the difficulties facing the Angolan people, and to give an internationalist support to the Namibian people's struggle. The head of state specified that apart from diplomatic support, Angola needs concrete aid like medical and food supplies, means of transport, clothes, tents, etc. To meet the immediate needs of victims of the bombings and acts of genocide committed by South African troops, Angola particularly needs effective military aid to forcibly expell the enemy invader and to reestablish the territorial integrity of the country, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos stressed.

The state of war imposed on us by imperialism through South Africa, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos said, has had a serious and adverse effect on our economic and social development, stressing that hospitals, bridges, means of transport and schools are the favorite targets of the enemy during these constant aggressions against the People's Republic of Angola. The recent large-scale invasion was preceded by a series of aggressions, violations of air space and constant bombings, the Angolan head of state indicated, adding that thousands of persons were forced to abandon their (?work places) and their homes to take refuge on the outskirts of cities. This increased the problems of food, sanitation and accommodation. The amount of money needed to come to the people's aid is about $5 billion, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos specified. After stressing that these acts of aggression by the Pretoria regime are part of a global imperialist strategy in Africa, the Angolan head of state specified that racist South Africa wants to establish a buffer zone south of Angola in order to install a puppet government of counterrevolutionaries. That government's objective is to sow terror among the people and to prevent the liberation struggle led by SWAPO and the application of UN Resolution 435 which established the plan for the independence of Namibia.

President Jose Eduardo dos Santos denounced the United States' open complicity with the Pretoria regime which is becoming more and more arrogant toward UN resolutions. The complete and genuine independence of Namibia does not correspond to the interests of the United States which wishes to transform Africa into their zone of influence, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos affirmed, adding that the United States wants to regain lost influence in Africa, Asia and Latin America by destabilizing progressive and revolutionary forces and countries. Thus, to achieve their destabilization aims the United States resorts to everything--force, manipulation of prices of raw materials and interest rates and foments subversion in progressive countries.

The advent of the Reagan Administration to power in the United States marked the beginning of this belligerent policy which is precipitating the rebirth of cold war, President Eduardo dos Santos declared. The struggle which the Angolan people are waging against South Africa is an integral part of a more general struggle of all peace-loving people seeking social progress, stressed the Angolan head of state.

The Angolan and Bulgarian delegations took stock of the cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic, scientific and cultural fields and found future perspectives very satisfactory. President Jose Eduardo dos Santos remarked that Angola, an African country which has opted for the socialist path, considers the establishment of preferential relations with countries of the socialist community as one of the basic conditions for the building of socialism in Angola. It is within this framework that the multifaceted cooperation between the People's Republic of Angola and the People's Republic of Bulgaria should be placed, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos stated.

BLACK MARKETS ABROAD SHOULD BE TRACED, DESTROYED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 27 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Telmo Augusto: "Export of Black Markets"]

[Text] "It is well known, at least here in Luanda, that certain products that are in great demand and difficult to find on our market, such as tobacco, domestic whisky, cutlasses, etc, are sometimes found on black markets outside our country."

These were the words of Manuel Pedro Pacavira, Central Committee secretary for production during the closing session of the fourth enlarged consultative council of the Ministry of Industry on 11 September. They zeroed in on a problem that should merit more attention from the competent structures, even if it is not possible to solve it right away. Beyond fomenting and supplying the country's black market, speculators and black marketeers are now crossing borders into neighboring countries, exporting black markets together with our products.

They are exporting the black market, that is, they are illegally shipping our domestic products out of our country, organizing their sale abroad.

This is what is happening and what the people traveling to neighboring countries can openly observe.

Who is organizing this traffic? How is it taking place?

Would it be too risky to refer to the existence of a network of traffickers, or of many networks involved in this business?

The fact is that many articles either produced locally or imported are sold abroad.

There is, in effect, a traffic involving domestic products which supply other black markets, where transactions can take place more easily and with fewer formalities, resulting in higher profits.

These goods surely must, somehow, be transported. We do not believe they are invisible. They transit our borders, by land or by air.

A more careful visit to black markets abroad, where one can find products such as our tobacco, whisky, cutlasses, etc, could provide a better view of this hemorrhage which feeds parasitic elements and reduces our possibility for fair distribution.

On the other hand, we believe that there is a close relationship between this traffic and the uncontrolled proliferation of little shops and boutiques that can be noted all over Luanda today.

Traffickers must surely possess a base from which to obtain the products that are then smuggled abroad. Moreover, in order to follow the smugglers' route from one end to the other, there are a lot of middlemen to trace as well, in order to complete the picture. Our goal is to sound the alarm in relation to a situation that will naturally become increasingly serious and affect our economy if proper methods are not devised to put an end to it.

NEWSMAN'S RESTRICTION DENIED--The ANGOP [Angolan News Agency] yesterday formally denied the patently false information--designed to foment trouble--published by the Portuguese paper O DIA in its Friday edition, according to which the special correspondent of the newspaper PORTUGAL HOJE, Jose Vieira, is being restricted in his freedom of action and subjected to a "treatment similar to that of fixed residence." Contrary to the assertions made by O DIA, the special correspondent of PORTUGAL HOJE has been conducting his work in normal fashion without any interference by Angolan authorities. As confirmation of this, Jose Vieira is presently in the province of Kwanza-Sul, visiting a SWAPO educational camp, together with various colleagues from other Portuguese newspapers and an ANGOP newsman. The false information published by the O DIA newspaper has already been exposed in Lisbon by the deputy director of the PORTUGAL HOJE newspaper, who denied the allegations, confirming that the situation in Angola is perfectly normal. RUSSIAN LANGUAGE COURSES--The new academic year for Russian language courses began on 7 September at the Russian language center in Luanda. The opening session was attended by the first secretary of the USSR Embassy, the director of the center, Alexei Maklachov, the course director, Mikhail Nenachev, the president and the secretary general of the student council and the women professors who will teach the courses. The number of students registered this year is about 700. At the end of each academic year, the Russian language center organizes a contest for all those students who distinguished themselves during the year. In the 4 years the center has been open, 10 students have thus visited the USSR, where they participated in various international activities as representatives of the People's Republic of Angola. For instance, in March of this year, the center held a national competition in the Russian language and the winners were Manuel da Rosa Pacavira, Jose Doria, David Luis and Jones Zamba. These students represented Angola in the fourth international olympiad for Russian language students held in Moscow in July of this year, attended by a total of 450 students from around the world. KEREKOU ON PARIS VISIT--Cotonou, 26 Sep--Benin's President Colonel Mathieu Kerekou returned here today from a four-day official visit to France, his first since seizing power in 1972. In a brief statement he said that his talks with French President Francois Mitterrand and other officials in Paris had been successful. At a press conference before leaving Paris, Col Kerekou said trust had been reestablished between Benin and France following his three-day official visit. His talks with the new Socialist government convinced him his trip had been "fruitful and even historic", Col Kerekou commented. It was his first visit since he seized power in Benin in 1972. He recalled that bilateral relations had been "vitiated" when a band of largely French mercenaries had landed at Benin's capital Cotonou in January 1977. But his talks here on the matter with French Justice Minister RobertBadinter had been satisfactory and he expected a "favourable outcome", he said. Benin's Justice Minister Lt Col Michel Alladaye will shortly hold talks with Mr Badinter on the matter, he added. President Kerekou said French military aid to Benin had never been completely cut off, as cadets from his country had continued to come to France for training. It was not time to "redynamise" that cooperation, he said. Benin would readily supply a contingent for a neutral inter-African force for Chad if the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) and the current Chad interim government made the request, Col Kerekou said. He reaffirmed Benin's support for Chad's territorial integrity and its opposition to any foreign intervention there, whether African or from outside the continent. KAMOUGUE TALKS WITH BONGO, TO PRESS

[Text] Libreville, 8 Oct (AFP)--The Bagonese president, Omar Bongo, held discussions with Col Abdel Kader Kamougue, the vice president of the Transitional National Union Government (GUNT) of Chad on Wednesday in Libreville on the prevailing situation in that country.

Mr Kamougue told the press that the Chadian problem requires extended contacts to try to curtail possible contradictions that might crop up not only in regard to international issues but also on how Chadians intend ruling their country.

Talking about the eventual sending of Pan-African forces to Chad, the GUNT vice president stressed that the issue was raised at the last OAU summit at Nairobi and that Chadians were waiting for the report of the current president of the OAU on the matter. Should any difficulties come up in the establishment of this force, Mr Kamougue added, Chadian authorities will analyze all proposals that could enable Chad to regain some degree of political stability.

Mr Kamougue then revealed that the proposal by the Gabonese head of state to give Chad the financial means to permit it to set up an integrated army and not an inter-African force was favorably received in Ndjamena. It is an evidence that President Bongo is seeking to help Chad by every possible means, he said.

The vice president asserted that the infiltrations of Hissein Habre's northern armed forces into the east of the country, especially to the localities of Adre and Guereda have been repulsed and that absolute calm now reigns in the region.

On the subject of the return of the refugees in Kousseri (northern Cameroon) back to Ndjamena, Mr Kamougue stressed that almost 1,000 people have crossed the river since 1 October. It is a movement which will take time because there are about 35,000 people who have to return to the capital. The GUNT vice president stated that the return of the refugees is being carried out with the assistance of the UN High Commission for Refugees in conjunction with the government. As for the cadres of the south, they are gradually coming back to the capital to participate in the activities of the state. Of course, they are faced with some problems, notably lodging and food, he further said.

ARMY, FAN FIGHTING HALTED--Yaounde, 7 Oct (AFP)--The fighting between Chad-Libyan Army and Hissein Habre's FAN in eastern Chad had ended, it was learned today from informed sources in Yaounde. However, the authorities in Ndjamena recently decided to send substantial Chadian reinforcement, mostly men, to that region to forestall further skirmishes, the same sources in the Cameroonian capital stated. The Chadian foreign minister, Ahmat Acyl, affirmed on 18 September that the clashes around the Guereda area, near the Sudanese border, left 500 FAN soldiers dead. But according to information received in Yaounde, it seems, however, that the Chad-Libyan forces also suffered great casualties, but no figures could be obtained. Guedera, which fell in the hands of Hissein Habre's troops, was taken back about a month ago by Chadian-Libyan forces, according to Ahmat Acyl. Furthermore, even though many Chadian elements are stationed in the towns of Abeche, Biltine, Guedera, Iriba and the neighboring garrisons, this part of the territory is now entirely under the administrative and military control of Libyan Army; about 10,000 Libyan soldiers, with heavy material, are permanently stationed there, the same sources stated. LIBYAN PARTICIPATION IN REBUILDING ARMY--Yaounde, 7 Oct (AFP)--Libya has decided to participate in the training and financing of the National Integrated Army [ANI] of Chad, beginning 1 September, under an agreement concluded with the Ndjamena authorities on 17 September in Tripoli, it was learned today from informed sources in Yaounde. Under the agreement, Libya pledges to contribute to the training of 2,000 men annually for the next 5 years (a total of 10,000 men). Tripoli will also help in setting up the commanding bodies of the ANI and the whole set up of the future Chadian Army. The agreement was presented by Transitional National Union Government Defense Minister Addoum Togoi to several Chadian military leaders and representatives of various political and military factions in Chad during a meeting which took place from (?21) to 26 September in Ndjamena, the same sources in Yaounde state. NATION SAID TO WANT TO BE INDEPENDENT OF USSR

[Article by Attilio Gaudio]

[Text] The Congo's future is going to be dominated by energy. The socialist government has planned around this fact, but petroleum energy, prospecting and exploitation are in the hands of the same old powers: the French, Italians, Americans, etc. Under these conditions, what is the outlook for this energy-dominated future? Our correspondent, Attilio Gaudio, is optimistic.

The old ferry that crosses the foaming (and still crocodile-infested) waters of the Congo River--known as the Zaire River on the other side--linking Kinshasa to Brazzaville carries passengers in the space of a few dozen minutes from one world to another. But historically and ethnically, the same Lingala people inhabit both sides of the river, though they belong, because of the bizarre aftermath of the break with colonialism, to two states which have evolved so differently: the Republic of Zaire and the People's Republic of the Congo. While huge Kinshasa is gloomy, anxious and poor, in little Brazzaville the people are cheerful, relaxed, and apparently without problems in maintaining themselves. Yet in the former Belgian colony, people live under a liberal and pro-Western regime, while in the Congo an avowedly Marxist-Leninist government is in power. It must be noted that much water has been poured into the wine of Marxism-Leninism since 4 April 1979, the date on which the current president of the republic, Col Denis Sassou Nguesso, took over the leadership of the country. In 2 years, changes took place that none of his predecessors were able to carry out. Since 1963, under the aegis of several regimes all of which claimed allegiance to "scientific socialism," the Congo seemed doomed to live under dictatorship. Though Col Sassou Nguesso may be the leader of the militant wing of the Congolese Labor Party [PCT], the people's militia, the fighting arm of that party, is presently back in its barracks and one no longer hears talk about abuses of power. The regime has been characterized from the very start by a return to individual freedom. Col Sassou Nguesso seems to have turned to good account the lessons of the two previous regimes, that of Marien Ngouabi, who was assassinated in 1977 and whose lawful heir he claims to be, and that of Yhambi Opongo, who decided to turn his back on socialism. The motto of the current president is: "Be red and an expert as well, but get positive results." Rigor in government administration must be reconciled both with ideological principles, but Sassou Nguesso also keeps in mind the realities of power, and is opening up toward the West, a move dictated by harsh national realities and deficiencies in cooperation with the socialist states. In May 1980, during his visit to Moscow, the Congolese president reportedly asked the Russians for fewer guns and more butter.

A Policy of Nonalignment

Congolese foreign policy gives a good indication of the country's resolve to maintain its independence of the USSR. When Sassou Nguesso came to power, his first visit was not to Moscow, as had been expected, but to Paris (in October 1979). Next he went to Beijing, before going to Moscow. During the Brazzaville centennial, the French delegation was treated with great deference, while the Soviet delegation remained in the shadows. One should also recall that during the United Nations General Assembly debates on Afghanistan in January 1980, the Congolese representative "abstained" while those from Angola and Ethiopia voted in favor of the USSR.

At the time of the Congolese president's visit to Moscow, on 13 May of this year, a treaty of cooperation was signed which did not contain a military clause. Mr Brezhnev, who congratulated Sassou Nguesso on the PCT's development toward "the construction of a new society, founded on scientific socialism," would have liked his country to have a naval base at Pointe-Noire. The Congo has always been hostile to foreign military presence, and the Congolese minister of foreign affairs was to reaffirm a month later that his country would never accept a foreign base on its soil, and that it hoped others felt the same elsewhere in Africa. The nonalignment policy is thus clearly expressed in military matters. For Sassou Nguesso, respect for Marxist ideology does not in any way mean allegiance to the USSR.

Indeed, education is the most important facet of the cooperation agreements between the Congo and the USSR. Hundreds of Congolese students are pursuing their studies in Soviet universities. The cadres thus trained occupy key positions in the bureaucracy and the government. Moscow has also contributed to the training of the Congolese army; the military materiel is primarily of Soviet manufacture, and the officers are educated in Moscow and then trained by Soviet advisers on the scene.

But if the Soviet presence on Congolese soil is large, on economic matters the leadership does not hesitate to play off every country against the next, sometimes giving preference to the Chinese, the Japanese, the Germans, or again the French. Relegating the former French colonial power to a secondary position cost dearly: economic and financial crisis even in spite of oil, lack of spare parts, shortages in basic commodities, and inflation. The crisis led to the events of 1977. Also, under Nguesso, external trade has been liberalized, and appeals are being made to foreign investors, both public and private, particularly in France. The general trend, with respect to cooperation, is toward specialization. Thus, in accordance with the preferences of the Congolese Government, China is brought in for agriculture, the USSR for road infrastructure, the United States for oil prospecting; nevertheless, France still remains a privileged partner. Mr Albin Chalandon, the president of Elf-Aquitaine, said recently that the Congo, among all the countries of Africa, was the country where France had the greatest hopes of production. There are about 200 private French firms in the Congo, and French investment—

Fr CFA 1.159 billion in 1980--is considerable. The Congo belongs to the franc zone, and the majority of Congolese imports are of French origin.

Oil accounts for 50 percent of export earnings, and the current production level of 5 million tons should reach 10 million by 1990. The wood industry, which accounts for 25 percent of export earnings, is in decline. The other potential source of revenue, potash, faces an uncertain future. According to the plans, a production level of 800,000 tons could be possible, with the help of French investment. Unfortunately, the mines were flooded in 1978, and the French investors decided to put off their financing.

Oil Exploitation

The dependent condition of the Congolese economy is further accentuated by the fact that all the oil produced and exported is extracted by a single company, Elf-Congo, 80 percent of which is owned by Elf-Aquitaine, held by the state of France. Since 1979, the United States has invested $1.4 million in the search for oil, both offshore and on land, particularly in the Congolese basin. Thus the Exxon corporation, along with Philips, holds 22.66 percent of the deep-sea rights, compared to 36 percent for Hydro-Congo. Other companies are also very active in the market, such as the Italian company Agip, and Canadian Superior.

According to estimates, oil reserves may amount to a billion tons. At present 1.8 million tons per year is being extracted from the Emeraude deposit. This deposit is presenting problems, but Elf-Congo is considering installing a steam injection system which will facilitate extraction. This is the first time this operation is going to be attempted at sea.

Congolese hydrocarbon policy is based on the PCT platform. It includes, as its first objective, gradually taking control over the energy sector, in order ultimately to achieve economic independence. This was the purpose of the creation of Hydro-Congo, the national oil prospecting and exploitation company. Up to now, prospecting and exploitation have remained out of reach of the state, dominated as they are by Elf-Erap and its subsidiary Elf-Congo, on the one hand, and by the Agip group on the other. This will have to change soon, given the world political environment, and OPEC in particular. Entry into OPEC should guarantee international solidarity and put an end to neocolonial exploitation. This concept has several aspects, including:

--denunciation of the conventions signed with Erap and Agip, and negotiation of new accords;

--alignment with OPEC's tax structures;

--the elaboration of a new Congolese mining code, abolishing the old one which is modeled on those of the 1960's.

The Congolese Ruhr

The city of Pointe-Noire is, for the Congo, a veritable economic crossroads. The city is built on the shore of the Atlantic Ocean, and has a port through which

2.5 million tons of merchandise pass each year. Its airport also provides good access to the world: the Congo-Ocean railroad links the city to Brazzaville and Maondo (southern Gabon).

The Kouilou region, of which Pointe-Noire is the provincial capital, contains sizable mineral deposits: oil, zinc, and lead at Mfouati, iron at Zananga, potash at Hole Saint-Paul (40 km from Pointe-Noire), wood.... This region bids fair to become the Congolese Ruhr. For industrialization, sizable energy resources are needed, so the Congolese Government has begun work on two dams on the Bouenza. There are also plans to create a petrochemical plant and a bitumen plant. The richness of the soil--and the riches that lie underground--combined with a heavy concentration of population--about three-fourths of the country--will make Pointe-Noire and its environs one of the most industrialized spots in Africa.

However, despite substantial industrialization, the Congolese economy is not without its problems. Along with problems in oil exploitation and the interruption of potash exports, dating from 1978, there is the fact that the government's budget has rapidly increased. Since 1975, the minimum wage has grown by 75 percent.

In the agricultural domain, while one must note a decline in Niari sugar production, one also sees new growth in coffee production. As for wood, the Congo has been affected in the same way as the other producing countries, but here again a mild resurgence is apparent.

A Promising Future

The Congo's major problem is the same as that of the other African countries: chronic underdevelopment running up against start-up problems. The government is hardly in a comfortable position. On the one hand, it is socialist, on the other it needs foreign capitalist investment which often is conditioned on the adoption of criteria of profitability and free-trade competitivity in management. Tripartite management (industry, labor, and party) is a stumbling block for capitalist investors. The masses of the people, indoctrinated for years by organizations such as the Revolutionary Union of Congolese Youth, the Union of Young Congolese Socialists, and the Congolese Trade Union Confederation, are not ready to take these economic realities into consideration.

Fortunately, public assistance: bilateral, multilateral, and international, is less demanding. FAC [Aid and Cooperation Fund] in particular between 1975 and 1978 invested Fr CFA 5.5 billion in nonreimbursable subventions. Aid from the EDF [European Development Fund] is on the same order of magnitude. Also, mention must be made of aid from the UNDP [United Nations Development Program], the ADB [African Development Bank], and the Central Fund [CCCE] [for Economic Cooperation], and, finally, the OPEC loan of $4 million to the Congolese Hydro-Carbon Company. Thus, even if the country is going through a difficult economic phase, possibilities for the future are wide open.

MBAZOGO WANTS 'DEMOCRATIC LIFE'--Paris, 9 Oct (AFP)--A referendum is to be organized in Equatorial Guinea before 3 August 1982. In an interview with the weekly newspaper JEUNE AFRIQUE, to be published in the next Wednesday's issue, Equatorial Guinean President Col Obiang Nguema Mbazogo stated that the referendum is aimed at presenting a draft constitution to the people. The date 3 August will mark the third anniversary of the fall of Macias Nguema's regime. Our first preoccupation is the total return to a democratic life where freedoms are guaranteed, the head of state asserted, adding that a democratic process must be established right from the grassroots. Village councils have been created through the process of free voting, the Equatorial Guinean head of state explained. These, in turn, will elect regional councils and we will continue in the same way on the district level, he added. A constitutional commission will be established later on to draft a constitution which will be presented for a referendum. Taking stock of the situation 2 years after the fall of Macias Nguema's dictatorship, the head of state admitted that his country was suffering from insufficiencies due to the serious lack of manpower, particularly in the field of [word indistinct] and also due to the fact that no meaningful cooperation has been established with the outside world. FOREIGN MINISTER ADDRESSES UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

AB071400 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Address by Gabonese Foreign Minister Martin Bongo to the 36th Session of the UN General Assembly on 6 October--recorded]

[Excerpts] The Gabonese delegation is taking part in this session as it did in the previous ones, with the firm determination to contribute to the establishment of peace, justice and human dignity and the advent of a better world.

Mr president and honorable delegates, the primary role of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security and establish cooperation among nations while remaining a forum where we must harmonize our common efforts. Unfortunately, however, the present situation in the world compels us to remark once again that this session of our General Assembly is taking place at a particularly preoccupying moment in the history of mankind as it is characterized by very serious tensions and conflicts as well as by economic chaos and increasing poverty of which the Third World in general and Africa in particular are the main victims. One of the main subjects of preoccupation for our states is the situation in Southern Africa, and particularly Namibia, a territory still under colonial domination despite the pertinent resolutions of the United Nations which the racist authorities in Preotria continue to defy.

Mr president, as long as Namibia remains under the dependence of South Africa and the racist and fascist government in Pretoria continues to impose its apartheid regime on the black majority, the task of decolonization and liberation of Africa will be incomplete. We will never stop repeating that the key to a rapid solution of this problem is in the hands of the South African Government and of the countries of the contact group, which must achieve a settlement on the basis of UN Security Council Resolution 435 relating to the solution of the Namibian problem. Gabon which--through an official declaration of its head of state, His Excellency Omar Bongo--very strongly condemned the invasion of the Angolan territory, reaffirms its full support for the UN plan and is convinced that on this basis, Namibia will soon achieve independent in its entirety, including the vital port of Walvis Bay. It is in the interest of the world community that this should happen because there is no doubt that the problem of Namibia contains the germs of a generalized conflict which involves the risk of a nuclear war.

Mr president and honorable delegates, in South Africa itself, our brothers continue to be subjected to the domination, oppression and humiliation imposed on them by the Pretoria regime which has written in its institutions the system of apartheid as a basis of organization of its economic, social and political life. The recent elections constitute the latest manifestation of this shameful system. The message which the president of the Republic of Gabon addressed to the chairman of the international conference on sanctions against South Africa on the occasion of Africa liberation day on 25 May this year proves how much Gabon is in solidarity with the brotherly people of South Africa in their liberation struggle. My country therefore believes that the international community must support the difficult struggle of the freedom fighters while we continue to look for solutions which will lead to the rapid elimination of the shameful system of apartheid.

In Central Africa, we are very much concerned by the situation in Chad resulting from a long fratricidal war. In Nairobi, the OAU again examined this painful problem. As far as Gabon is concerned, it did not remain insensitive to the appeal for solidarity made on that occasion. With regard to Chad's recovery, my country is of the opinion that this problem concerns all of us. It therefore strongly hopes that the international community will mobilize itself in favor of this brotherly country in order to help it to reconstruct its economy.

As far as the Korean problem is concerned, Gabon is in favor of any action aimed at ensuring the reunification of the peninsula by peaceful means and without any foreign interference. In Kampuchea and Afghanistan, the people must be allowed to freely express themselves and determine the regime of their choice. Finally, concerning Iraq and Iran--two friendly countries which are now at war--we renew to them the appeal made by the Gabonese head of state, His Excellency Omar Bongo, who called on them to put a stop to their conflict.

FOODSTUFFS SUPPLY DEFICIENT DESPITE 'GABONIZATION'--I, Makaya, a civil servant in a small town in the interior of the country, find it extremely difficult to get what I need to feed myself and adequately feed my children. In the small town where I have been working for a year, there is no fresh fish and fresh meat is unavailable. Let's not even mention the other products that abound in the stores in the capital. And yet, we are told that Gabonese are increasingly controlling the economy. They are in the market place where they have replaced the foreigners. One can also see their large trucks crisscrossing the roads in the bush in search of the products of our plantations. But what are they waiting for to start thinking of us, the people who don't live in large cities? I was under the impression that our businessmen were all going to launch themselves in the supply of the whole country, including the small towns. But they have chosen to look for the large profits to be made in the capital and the towns with large populations. Meanwhile, the poor little civil servants who would like to preserve their standard of living in the bush are ignored. How sad! ...Makaya [Article by Makaya] [Libreville L'UNION in French 14 Sep 81 p 1]

MAKAYA DEPLORES CORRUPTION IN GOVERNMENT--In white countries, diamonds and precious stones are taken great care of. On the occasion of a month-long exhibition of previous artifacts from Sri-Lanka at the Commonwealth Institute in London, a sapphire was exceptionally well guarded. It was under the protection of a poisonous cobra. The reptile had been placed inside the closed case where the sapphire was exhibited. It is generally agreed that this stone is one of the three most beautiful sapphires in the world because of its size, quality and color. Indeed, it deserved such careful protection. In our country, too, we have precious artifacts and particularly dangerous reptiles, some of which could very well be caught in the bush and deposited in state coffers as protection against some thoughtless people who often confuse their own wallets with that of their administration. Coiled at the bottom of their cage, the reptiles could, once and for all, make them forget the desire to taste the poison of dishonestly earned money. As for me, so what.... ...Makaya [Text] [Article by Makaya] [Libreville L'UNION in French 11 Sep 81 p 1]

SPAIN SIGNS MERCHANT MARINE AGREEMENT--First deputy prime minister and Minister of Transportation and Merchant Marine Georges Rawiri arrived in Madrid, Spain, on 14 September for an official 48-hour visit. He was accompanied by a delegation of high officials and technicians from his Ministry. He traveled to Barcelona on 15 September. During his stay in the country's economic capital, the first deputy prime minister met with officials from the Maquinista Terrestre y Maritima company (an enterprise specializing in the manufacture of railroad equipment). He then visited the installations of the Barcelona autonomous port. On 16 September, the first deputy prime minister and his entourage returned to Madrid where Mr Rawiri was received in audience by King Juan Carlos, to whom he handed a message from President Omar Bongo. In the afternoon, the Gabonese and Spanish delegations held a meeting, during which the first deputy prime minister and the Spanish minister of transportation, Mr Jose-Luis Alvarez, signed an agreement in the field of merchant marine. Georges Rawiri and the Gabonese delegation are supposed to return to Libreville today. [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 18 Sep 81 p 4]

INTER-AFRICAN CHAD FORCE REJECTED--Libreville, 27 Sep--Sending an interafrican peace-keeping force to Chad would be a "manoeuvre" to recolonise that country, Gabon's President Omar Bongo charged here Saturday, reiterating his opposition to the formation of such a force. He asked who would pay for the force, and said France and African countries would do better to give Chad financial aid so that it could both set up an integrated army of its own and set about rebuilding its economy, which has been shattered in years of civil war. "Gabon is ready to do that, but it will not send a single soldier", Mr Bongo said. He acknowledged Libya's help for Chad, but said it was time that nation's leader, Colonel Moamer Kadhafi, withdrew his troops. The Gabonese leader, speaking at a press conference, also gave his views on Namibia (South-West Africa), saying free elections should be held in which all the territory's representative groups could take part. "If we want to prove in the eyes of the racist South Africans that the South-West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) controls the country, we have to agree to organise those elections as was the case for Zimbabwe", Mr Bongo stressed. Everyone was insiting it had to be SWAPO alone that led Namibia to independence, he noted, yet at the same time there was talk of democratization of African politics, what was there to be afraid of in proper elections? Mr Bongo asked. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 29 Sep 81 p 23]

COMMENTS ON AL-SADAT DEATH--In a tribute to the late President al-Sadat of Egypt, the daily GRAPHIC says his violent murder is one of those incidents likely to change the tide of human history. It is not an exaggeration to say that President al-Sadat, on many occasions within the past few years, has held in his hands the difference between peace and war. And it is very sad that such a man who pursued peace with such singleness of purpose should meet such a violent end. [Excerpt] [AB080835 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 8 Oct 81]

CABINET MINISTERS SWORN IN--Three new cabinet ministers were today sworn in at the castle. They are the attorney-general and minister of justice, Mr Djabatey; the minister of works and housing, Mr Felix Amoah and the minister of youth and rural development, Dr Acquah. The three ministers were promoted to the cabinet in a major reshuffle last week. In a short address, the president thanked them for accepting the posts and hoped they would live up to expectations. Replying on behalf of his colleagues, Mr Djabatey said their appointment can be interpreted as the recognition of what they had been able to do so far and the potentials in them. He assured the president that they would do their best to meet his expectations. [Text] [AB082140 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 8 Oct 81]

'MAJOR ECONOMIC MEASURES' COMING--The president, Dr Limann, this morning announced that his government would soon come out with major economic measures which will include a new producer price of cocoa. This may come before or during the next sessional address. Dr Limann was speaking at the inauguration of the 17-member governing body of the cocoa marketing board at the castle. He said the new producer price would take cognisance of the current economic factors in the country. He asked the new board to ensure that all purchased cocoa locked up in the countryside are evacuated before the new price is announced. The president asked the board to evolve a realistic price indexing system as required by the manifesto of the People's National Party to make possible the automatic adjustment of producer prices when the need arises. He also urged the board to infuse fresh and life-saving blood into the cocoa industry. The chairman of the board is Harry Dodoo, member of the Council of State. PAPER CALLS FOR AMNESTY--The PALAVER takes up the recent amnesty granted to some political prisoners in Nigeria by President Shehu Shagari. It says the amnesty should provide an impetus to President Limann to consider, on humanitarian grounds, granting similar dispensations to Armed Forces Revolutionary Council [AFRC] convicts who were detained without proper trial. Whatever their offenses, the PALAVER feels that such convicts might have by now repented from their alleged crimes against the state. While it appreciates that the president's hands might have been tied by the insertion of the obnoxious transitional positions in the constitution, the PALAVER's plea that, since the presidency is vested with power to grant amnesty, President Limann should invoke that power. It continues: We plead with President Limann to grant amnesty to the AFRC convicts who have an invitation, since 4 June, to mark the forthcoming silver jubilee celebrations. If the president would read this humble plea and temper justice with mercy he would have carved a name for himself in the annals of political history. It is our earnest hope, concludes the PALAVER, that Dr Limann will, can and should grant amnesty to the AFRC convicts. [Excerpt] [AB121537 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 12 Oct 81]

PUBLIC MEDICAL SYSTEM 'COLLAPSING'--Accra, 12 Oct (AFP)--Ghana's public medical system is on the point of collapse, National Medical Association President C. O. Quarcoopome has warned. Calling the current drain of Ghanaian doctors abroad catastrophic, he told the association's annual scientific and general meeting at the weekend that only 550 doctors remained in the public service and morale in the profession was low. There was little job satisfaction, inadequate remuneration and total frustration in the service and if nothing was done it would collapse, Professor Quarcoopome warned. Observers noted that education and public utilities had also suffered from the loss of doctors, university teachers and technical and unskilled workers abroad because of Ghana's critical economic situation. BRITISH POWER GENERATOR DONATION--An electric generator now in the port of Bissau will reinforce the supply of power to the capital and is part of the British government's assistance to Guinea-Bissau, which, in addition to the cost of the generator, valued at over 1 million pounds sterling, also includes a Land Rover vehicle and two Peugeot vans, construction materiel (iron and cement) and British technicians to install the generator. The new K6 generator is manufactured by the same company as the generator of the group 5 of the Bissau power plant. Both can produce up to 2,200 kilowatts of electricity with the new generator's alternator being slightly more powerful. Within the terms of the agreement between the British and the Guinea-Bissau governments, three local technicians attended an 18-month training course in Great Britain on the installation, repair and maintenance of the generator. Morover, the project also includes spare parts for a number of years. The Guinea-Bissau government will only provide living expenses for the engineers who will work in the installation of the generator and will purchase the needed equipment for the project. The completion of this project is scheduled, in principle, for March 1982. [Excerpt] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 19 Sep 81 p 8]

ROK MERCHANDISE SHOW OPENS--The Liberian Government will continue to lend its fullest support for the strengthening of trade relations between Liberia and South Korea, Commerce, Industry and Transportation Minister (E. Samuel John) [as heard] said in Monrovia last night. Minister (John) was speaking at the opening ceremony of the Korean merchandise show organized by the Korean Trade Center at the Ducor International Trade Fair in Monrovia. The merchandise show, which is expected to be held for a week, includes (?various) goods and items such as garments for men and women, certain equipments, electrical appliances as well as textiles. Minister (John) said since the opening of the Korean Trade Center in 1978 and the signing of the trade agreement between Liberia and South Korea in 1980, more efforts have been made to concretize commercial relations between both countries for the benefit of the two governments and peoples. He then hoped the show will encourage businessmen in Liberia to become involved in the importation of Korean manufactured goods and articles to further boost their ventures. Earlier, the director of the Korean Trade Center, Mr (Yin Shan Kin), welcomed all those interested in establishing commercial relations with the center and assured them of his cooperation and assistance. He said the show was indicative of the Korean Government's desire to promote trade links between the two countries. For his part, the Korean ambassador to Liberia, (Sayi Yao Li), lauded the friendly and cordial relations existing between Liberia and South Korea and hoped they will continue to be consolidated through cooperation and mutual understanding. He praised the People's Redemption Council [PRC] Government for its commitment to ensure a healthy business climate in the country which he said was encouraging and commendable. TRAORE RETURNS FROM UN, BRAZIL

[Text] The president of the republic, Gen Moussa Traore, returned to Bamako this morning after an 8-day visit to New York and Brasilia. He was welcomed at the airport by Col Amadou Baba Diarra, deputy secretary general of the Malian People's Democratic Union [UDPM] who was leading the constituted and the consular bodies. Right after his arrival, Gen Moussa Traore spoke to Baba Daga of the outcome of his trip.

[Begin recording] I have just arrived from a trip during which I visited the UN in New York and Brazil. At the UN, I explained Mali's views on the major African and world issues to the General Assembly. I reiterated our country's profound attachment to the principles and objectives of the UN and the firm determination of the Malian people and their party, the UDPM, along with their government to constantly contribute to efforts aimed at finding just and equitable solutions to the various issues on which the future of manking depends, especially in the face of the current world economic and political turmoil. I am sure that Mali's voice was heard.

As chairman of the Inter-State Committee to fight the drought in the Sahel, CILSS, I reiterated to the international community the appeal for solidarity with the people in the Sahel who are suffering from hunger and thirst. My various talks with the officials from the UNDP, the Islamic conference and from friendly and brotherly countries on those problems aroused new hopes for increasing assistance from the international community to the Sahel. Such increased assistance is all the more indispensable as the situation is dangerously deteriorating.

I took the opportunity of my visit to Brazil, which was an official one, to confer with Brazilian Vice President Antonio Aureliano Chaves, deputizing for the president and with other Brazilian officials on avenues to promote a dynamic and fruitful cooperation between Brazil and Mali. We agreed to establish south-south exemplary cooperation between our two countries. In this regard, the Mali-Brazil Joint Commission, which we have decided to set up, will hold its maiden session in Bamako during the first part of 1982. Also, we have signed an agreement on cultural, technical and scientific cooperation and outlined specific sectors in which our cooperation is bound to be efficient.

The situation in the Sahel was also a major topic on our agenda. As CILSS chairman, I henceforth drew the attention of the Brazilian authorities to the need for solidarity with the Sahel countries. Such solidarity must fall within the broad framework of south-south relations in the face of the worsening economic situation. I can affirm that the Brazilian people and authorities had enough information on the real difficulties which most Sahel people face daily in their struggle for survival and they were quite responsive.

Taking stock of the result of my trip to the UN and Brazil would mean speaking of my efforts to promote public awareness in international organizations through the UN whose efforts to assist those victim of the drought will continue to increase as Dr Kurt Waldheim observed during our talks.

Taking stock of the results of my trip would also mean speaking of the determination pledged by Mali and Brazil to strengthen their cooperation, to dynamize it and to make it a multiform exemplary cooperation. Lastly, one of the results of my visit is the interest promoted among Brazilian officials in the problems facing the Sahel.

Before closing, I wish to express my sincere thanks to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim for all the kindnesses accorded me and my delegation during our stay at the UN headquarters in New York. I also express my wholehearted thanks to the Brazilian authorities, his excellency Vice President Antonio Aureliano Chaves and to the Brazilian people for the particularly warm, friendly and fraternal reception reserved me and my delegation in Rio and Brasilia. INCREASED TRADE WITH FRANCE VIEWED ON BOTH SIDES

[Text] "Pierre Cot, French minister of cooperation, will come to Mozambique [RPM] by the end of this year, to give concrete expression to his country's new policy toward the RPM and to sign an accord with Mozambican authorities defining the development of cooperation between the two states," Michel Versaevel, commercial attache of the French Embassy in Maputo, told NOTICIAS yesterday.

Asked if the French representation at FACIM-81 [Maputo International Trade Fair] reflected a new French attitude toward our country, Versaevel said this year's representation at FACIM did not yet express this concern.

"The French Government wants to improve its cooperation with the RPM. We are studying a new model for cooperation that will better answer the concerns of the Government of Mozambique. It is impossible to say now how it will be in 1982, but the entire picture of cooperation is being examined," he added.

France sent 18 exhibitors to FACIM this year. Most of these firms already have a base of cooperation with Mozambique and the contacts are now in the area of training Mozambican technicians.

Regarding technical assistance and training, Jean-Pierre Stephan, delegate of the French Committee for Economic Activities Abroad, told our reporters: "We are not just interested in selling, without offering any assistance. We have to make sales but we also have to pass on our technology. This assistance is part of our cooperation."

UTA Sets Example

UTA [French Airlines] was mentioned as an outstanding example in the area of training Mozambicans. Since last April, when the direct Maputo-Paris route was initiated, the French company has been training personnel serving Mozambique Airlines (LAM). It has also supported the LAM School of Civil Aviation, and next week a Mozambican group will leave for the Pilot Training School in Toulouse (France).

"We are also interested in cooperating in the development of the Mavalane International Airport and in greatly expanding cooperation between UTA and LAM," said Versaevel.

RVI (Renault Industrial Vehicles) is also offering training courses for mechanics for its models sold in Mozambique: Renault, Berliet and Savien. Its distributor in Maputo is CODAUTO.

Also in this area, Mozambique will be represented at a technical training seminar on hydrography, to be held in Paris on a date to be determined.

In the area of cartography, contracts have already been signed by DINAGECA and Mozambique's COTOP, and there are also plans to train Mozambican cadres. In a first stage, they will only observe French specialists.

Not Always Contracts

Asked if new contracts had been signed at FACIM-81, Versaevel said he was not yet familiar with the final results of the French participation at this year's fair. He added he was already aware of products for which collaboration in Mozambique is assured.

"Pavailler Company will deliver an oven and the respective equipment for bread baking. Incidentally, INTERMETAL [?State Industrial Equipment Import Co] has already bought three of these ovens since the firm began exporting this equipment. Various orders have been placed by several Mozambican firms.

"There are not always contracts. The firms come to exhibit their expertise. They may come here three or more times without signing any contracts. The point is not to come here, make a sale and go home. They are interested in sales, certainly, but also in training, cooperating, creating ties," the French commercial attache concluded.

HOPE EXPRESSED FOR INCREASED TRADE WITH PORTUGAL

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Sep 81 p 3

[Interview with Alvaro Machado Monteiro, representative of Portugal's Export Promotion Fund, by Pedro Tivane, date and place not given]

> [Text] Various possibilities for creation of Mozambican-Portuguese joint enterprises in the areas of culture, public works, industry and energy should be realized by the end of 1981. The major problem to date pertains to guarantee clauses to cover the lack of a code regulating investments. Nonetheless, the Portuguese industrial investors' interest in Mozambique is growing, evidenced by the growing number of Portuguese firms represented at FACIM [Maputo International Trade Fair]. These steps reflect the significant improvement in relations between Mozambique and Portugal of late, said Alvaro Machado Monteiro, delegate of the Portuguese Export Promotion Fund, in an interview with NOTICIAS.

Three accords and a protocol have already been signed, specifically, a financial accord between the Bank of Mozambique and the Bank of Portugal, a trade agreement and a cooperation accord between the two governments and, finally, a protocol of cooperation between the Export Promotion Fund and the Mozambican Chamber of Commerce, creating the foundations to broaden future prospects for better economic relations.

NOCICIAS: Portugal's representation at FACIM-81 exceeded past years. Portugal was, let us say, a significant presence at the trade fair. Is this a reflection of improved relations between the two countries?

Monteiro: I think so. Incidentally, this was clearly expressed by the president of the People's Republic of Mozambique when he said that good political relations are based on good trade relations. Clearly, there were problems, which have been overcome through the good will of the two governments. Relations have improved considerably and this improvement has been confirmed by the signing of several accords, so the Portuguese showing this year was the largest ever. The minister of trade and tourism planned to come, but stayed away at the last minute because of unforeseen circumstances connected with the change of government. Even so, the president of the Export Promotion Fund came and brought the fund's best staff members with him.

NOTICIAS: What problems or difficulties were you referring to?

Monteiro: Well, there was the so-called dispute, which has already been settled, but there are still many problems to resolve. It will take hard work, but nothing can be accomplished without work. I think the conditions have been created to move forward.

NOTICIAS: Does the fact that many Portuguese industrialists and businessmen are coming here mean they are all aware of this good will between the two governments?

Monteiro: We cannot infer this. After Mozambique became independent, many industries maintained cooperation with Mozambique, often under difficult circumstances. Over 60 firms were represented at the fair. More would have come, but the space available to us would not accommodate all those who wanted to be here.

FACIM in the Zone

After a pause, Monteiro added: Well, FACIM is important not only for Mozambique but also for the markets of the neighboring countries. The representatives of these countries are introduced to Portuguese products. Mozambique's geographical and political position must be taken into account. The country functions as the "pivot" for the zone. Within the SADCC [?Commission for Coordinated Development of Southern Africa], Mozambique is the leader in the transportation sector. This is essential for economic growth. So the exhibitors are not just interested specifically in Mozambique, but in this economic zone.

NOTICIAS: Has there already been anything concrete with these countries?

Monteiro: We are taking soundings and there is considerable interest on both sides. I went to the last trade fair in Bulawayo. As the Export Promotion Fund, we have to be alert to the possibilities. Our function is to inform the trade authorities of existing possibilities.

Joint Enterprises

NOTICIAS: There has been and there continues to be talk of Mozambican-Portuguese joint enterprises. Is there anything specific now, and what is Portugal's position?

Monteiro: I think Portuguese cooperation in this area must be based on the creation of joint enterprises. The bases are now established to go forward. Negotiations are in progress, but this is a slow process. Since Mozambique has no code regulating foreign investment, the statutes of the joint enterprises must cover all possible situations. It is important that the contracts cover all eventualities and are based on mutual advantage.

NOTICIAS: What does this mean, specifically?

Monteiro: The investor wants a profit, and he wants to take out this profit, so we have to think about this. Antoher detail: foreign exchange comes solely from exports, so there have to be prospects for exportation. In other words, to be established, an enterprise would have to guarantee production in sufficient volume to place on the foreign market. The enterprise must be guaranteed to function. For example, if we can purchase 50,000 contos' worth of raw material, but are assured of 60,000 contos from exports, then we can do business. We can even tell the bank to advance the money in the assurance that by the end of the year we can pay it all back and make a profit.

NOTICIAS: What has been the experience of the Portuguese companies that operate in Mozambique?

Monteiro: It has been more or less good. But, at the moment, the Portuguese are more concerned with making the companies function as well as possible within the existing difficulties. Our greatest concern is to establish credibility. Another form of action would be to purely and simply ignore Mozambique's problems. We are not concerned about transferring funds, but about improving.

NOTICIAS: What have been the results?

Monteiro: They have been positive. Obviously, there are problems sometimes. If you tell a worker to produce 10 things and he gets the job done in 3 or 4 days and then sits around for a week, the next time he will spend 10 days producing the same amount. It also means that the worker is losing some of his skill.

But I think things are getting better.

NOTICIAS: Does this have some effect on Portuguese investors' interest in Mozambique?

Monteiro: The Portuguese investors' interest is increasing. We still have a problem of education. But it should be noted that sales are not the only reason to come to FACIM. This is the third fair I have seen in Mozambique and I noted a really spectacular improvement in organization, operations, etc. I think there was a great improvement even from last year to this year. For our part, we think it was very easy this year to make the contacts we needed. Considering the shortage of cadres, I found a high spirit of sacrifice in the FACIM staff, and may I say we are grateful for it.

NOTICIAS: Portugal received an award at the fair.

Monteiro: It was an award that filled us with satisfaction. It is a proven fact that we are highly stimulated by it. It symbolizes great effort on our part and I am very pleased. I think the other Portuguese exhibitors were equally pleased. Basically, however, the prize means that Mozambique is a mature and independent country politically. It is hard to comprehend how Mozambique, after only 6 years of independence and with all the problems we are aware of, had the courage to award such a significant prize to Portugal. This is where the importance of the gesture lies. Mozambique is a truly mature country and should be happy.

MAPUTO WATER SUPPLY SERIOUSLY AFFECTED

Damage Described

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Thanks to the uninterrupted efforts of workers in the sector, Maputo's water supply was restored last night, a few hours after repairs were completed on the ruptures, considered the most serious in recent years. The residential water system was in operation throughout last night, in an attempt to ease the severe water shortage that has been affecting the capital for 3 days.

The shortage of this precious fluid, which reached its highest point yesterday, paralyzing some productive sectors, forcing some restaurants and similar establishments to close and causing great problems for hundreds of citizens, should be overcome by tomorrow.

In a press conference yesterday, national water director Lopes Pereira, announced that the residential supply would be cut off all day today to replenish reserves. The reservoirs have been completely drained. Until the cutoff takes place today, water should be used sparingly; otherwise the pumping at the reservoirs will take longer.

Five simultaneous ruptures in the only two conduits that carry the water from Umbeluzi to the four distribution centers in Greater Maputo resulted in the most severe breakdown recorded in recent years.

According to the national water director, the breakdown was the result of the power failure that occurred Saturday morning, completely paralyzing the pumping system at the Umbeluzi water collection station.

Although there are backup systems for such eventualities, some failure in the system (which has not yet been ascertained) caused the first break in the pipeline, and this was followed by four others.

The first break was detected around noon on Saturday in the 88-mm pipeline (the largest), in which a valve burst 16 kilometers from the city in Matola zone. Men worked throughout Saturday night at the site to replace the valve.

It was on Sunday, when some repair work was still being done on the main pipeline, that the other breakdowns occurred on the 600-mm pipeline.

To restore the water supply system as quickly as possible, dozens of employees in the sector worked without rest for about 48 hours.

Among the problems Fereira stressed at yesterday's press conference were the difficulties in communicating with the brigades working on repairs at the various sites where the breakdowns occurred and in obtaining the materials needed to repair the ruptures in the pipelines.

The work had to be done with the resources available, knowing that some material was being used as a temporary resort.

Improving Supply

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 Sep 81 p 8

[Text] Although they carried fewer cans on their heads, the residents of Greater Maputo struggled again yesterday with the consequences of the major breakdown that occurred Saturday in the pipelines that bring the water from Umbeluzi to the broadest sectors of life in the capital. Starting today, however, the water supply will return to normal.

Although the breaks in the conduits were repaired by Monday and the system is now fully functioning, the cutoff yesterday to reestablish levels at the reservoirs prevented distribution to residences and other sectors during the day.

A number of industries, restaurants, pastry shops and other similar establishments are still closed.

We should note the efforts of the Public Assistance Corps to bring water to the public and to some sectors considered to have priority, which were affected by the shortage of this precious fluid yesterday.

Although the residential water supply system was operating Monday night until early yesterday morning, the water was not reaching several zones of the city. The low pressure, aggravated by the fact that most of the distribution network carried no water at all, made circulation very sluggish.

Moreover, buildings without water storage tanks and those with storage tanks but no pumps to raise the water obviously went without water for several hours even after the supply was available again.

It is noted that a large amount of water was lost Monday night because the resumption of service was not expected. In many restaurants, pastry shops, gardens and other public places that had to close down during the day for lack of water, the faucets were left open, resulting in the loss of great quantities of water until the supply was cut off again.

The same thing occurred in some residential districts where some users or watchmen were particularly careless.

SELF-STYLED RELIGIOUS PROPHET MURDERS NEIGHBOR

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] A bizarre homicide case is being tried in the Second Section of the Maputo Provincial People's Court. The four defendants are accused of complicity in the murder of Madongodongo Timbane, executed in truly macabre fashion by his neighbor, Bene Manamali Manzini. The killer, a prophet of the "Zione" sect, fled the country with his family and is being tried in absentia.

The drama took place in Zitundo, a locale in Matutuine. The victim, his killer and the killer's accomplices were at a house where a religious mass for the dead was being celebrated.

At a given moment, the killer accused Timbane of being the local sorcerer, responsible for the deaths that were occurring in the area, which the victim steadfastly denied.

Buried Alive

From what we could learn during the trial, Manzini called for some rope to tie up Timbane, threatening Timbane's family with the same fate if they interfered. The order was quickly obeyed by the four defendants now on trial.

After the victim was bound, Manzini led him to a field where a child had been buried. With the pieces of wood that had been used to form a cross at the site, he violently attacked Timbane, who began to bleed from the mouth and the nose, and demanded that he confess that he was a sorcerer who had cast a spell on the region. When Timbane continued to deny it, the killer ordered his accomplices to dig a pit beside the child's grave and told the victim to say goodbye to his family.

He then ordered the victim into the pit, whereupon he dealt a violent blow to his head with a spade. When Timbane collapsed, Manzini ordered his accomplices fill the hole, burying his victim alive. Timbane subsequently died.

Then Manzini told everyone there that he would turn himself over to the police and tell them he had executed a sorcerer. As a prophet of the "Zione" sect, Manzini was believed to have supernatural powers and was greatly feared and respected in the area, so no one dared to report him. Hence he had time to flee the country.

The Maputo Provincial People's Court should reach a verdict soon in this grim case.

HELP IN INDONESIAN SHIP ACCIDENT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] The Indonesian ship "Gemala," which ran aground earlier in Manica Bay, is expected today at the Port of Maputo. The freighter's crew, which abandoned ship last Saturday, returned to the "Gemala" at 1200 hours yesterday.

The Indonesian cargo ship ran aground near the Lacerda lighthouse, about 78 kilometers from the Port of Maputo, because of the poor visibility, torrential rains and gale winds occasioned by the storm that devastated the southern zone of Save last week.

The ship sailed from the Gulf of Aden in the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, destined for the Port of Maputo, where it was to pick up 10,500 tons of Zambabwean steel and proceed to Indonesia.

Ship Afloat

Two international salvage tugs, based in Cabo [?Capetown], South Africa, and Mombasa, Kenya, went to the scene of the accident last Monday and conducted successful rescue operations, freeing the ship from the sand bank on which it ran aground.

At 0800 hours yesterday, after 3 days ashore, the crew of the "Gemala" went aboard the launch "Paulo Santo," which belongs to the Mozambican firm Metalomecanice. The launch took them to the freighter, which they boarded 4 hours later.

According to a source at the Manica Mozambique shipping agency, which was in radio contact with the ship's captain, at 1330 hours yesterday the crew was checking out the machinery.

As this edition went to press, one of the ship's three generators and the main engine in the engine room were functioning.

The Port Authority informed us that the matter is still going through legal channels. As of yesterday afternoon, the authority had not received any information from the ship's captain enabling it to proceed with the respective inquiry.

ITALIAN FIRMS SIGN CONTRACT FOR DAM CONSTRUCTION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The contract for civil construction of the Pequenos-Libombos dam was signed yesterday in Maputo. Budgeted at about 3.5 million contos, the dam will be built by two Italian firms. Construction should begin in the first half of next year and should be completed in about 42 months. Some 3,500 workers will be involved in the undertaking.

The Pequenos-Libombos dam is a strategic project with multiple objectives, notably a water supply for the nation's capital, irrigation of 16,000 hectares, and Umbeluzi River flood control.

The dam will permit storage of water in its lake, making it possible to regulate the flow of the Umbeluzi below the dam. This regulation is essential for sufficient flow to increase the water supply for Greater Maputo.

Stabilization of the Umbeluzi current will make it possible to expand the water captation system serving the capital to 7,000 cubic meters per hour. The present captation capacity is about 3,000 cubic meters per hour.

The Umbeluzi River dam will be located about 30 kilometers south of the city of Maputo and close to 5 kilometers from the town of Boane. Although in itself it does not represent the total solution to the capital's water shortage, which has been worsening since the last years of the colonial period, construction of the dam will create the basic conditions for a solution.

According to the economic and social directives of the Third FRELIMO Party Congress, construction should have been initiated in 1980, but was held up because of various delays in the studies for the capital water supply and for irrigation of the Umbeluzi Valley. According to the contract signed yesterday, the project will not be completed until the end of 1985.

Arnaldo Lopes Pereira, the nation's water director, signed the contract for our government. Colinelle Giorgio and Antolini Adriano represented the Italian firms S.S.A. and the Cooperativa Muratori e Cementisti, respectively. Italian Ambassador Patrizio Schmidlin also attended the ceremony.

On that occasion Pereira noted that many problems had been surmounted in the process of negotiating the contract signed yesterday, reflecting the determination of our party and government to solve the water problem in the capital.

He added that the stronger relations between Mozambique and Italy were also a decisive factor enabling early initiation of the project. He praised the collective working spirit of the team involved in the preparations for the undertaking.

"We are now entering a more complex and difficult phase. For the next 4 years, hundreds of Mozambicans and Italians will be working together. As there have been up to now, there will certainly be points of disagreement, but, as we have done before, we will find ways to resolve them," the national water director said.

THEFT OF BROADCASTING EQUIPMENT--Huila District lost an important means of popular mobilization and entertainment on 2 September when thieves broke into the Cultural Center of that residential area. The stolen equipment includes a radio, amplifier and microphone, part of a broadcasting system introduced experimentally in that suburb of the nation's capital. According to information gathered at the scene, the theft took place during the night. "There were militia on duty that night here in the Cultural Center where the system is set up, but a problem came up very near here. Two men were fighting and disturbing the neighborhood. The militia heard about it and went to clear up the situation. It was then that the thieves broke down the door and stole the equipment," a district official said. The equipment was extremely important in mobilizing the public on various occasions. Through a system of loudspeakers that reached the entire district, it was possible to broadcast useful information, news, sports reports, speeches by our leaders, cultural programs and entertainment. GDR, PORTUGAL PHAPMACEUTICALS--Mozambique will receive $1.3 million (about 47,087,000 meticals) worth of pharmaceuticals as a result of contracts between MEDIMOC (Mozambican State Medicines Enterprise) and representatives of the Portuguese and GDR pharmaceutical industries. The contracts were signed at the end of the 17th Maputo International Fair (FACIM). Articles to be supplied by the GDR include radiographs, optical lenses, various medicines and spare parts to maintain existing medical equipment in Mozambique. Portugal will also supply medicines of various types, as yet unspecified. This is the first time a Portuguese pharmaceutical firm has exhibited at FACIM. According to the general director of MEDIMOC, these contracts are the result of closer relations. The signing of such contracts is among the objectives the fair is intended to achieve. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Sep 81 p 8] 6362

RAIL ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION--An incorrect order to proceed led to a train crash on the Sena line in the early morning of 24 August. Two locomotives collided head-on at Km 130, killing two crew members and causing damage estimated at over 75,000 contos. According to the findings of an investigative committee appointed for the purpose, the order was given to the crew of train 591 by Jose Camunga, the station attendant at Muanze. The document released to the news media yesterday adds that during the investigation into the causes and responsibility for the accident, erratic behavior was ascribed to Jone Chacuamba Junior, the station agent at Inhaminga, who later abandoned his post and is still a fugitive. Disciplinary proceedings have been conducted against Jose Caminga, resulting in the maximum penalty of dismissal from CFM-Centro [Central Mozambique Railways]. The case has been turned over to the competent structures to determine criminal responsibility and subsequent court prosecution. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Sep 81 p 1] 6362

GDR PROMISES MORE AID TO SWAPO IF UN PLAN FAILS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Oct 81 p 1

[Text]

THE German Democratic Republic will increase its aid to SWAPO if the United Nations independence plan for Namibia is not implemented, the country's ambassador, Mr Otto Becker, said yesterday.

Speaking at a Press conference marking the 32nd anniversary of the founding of socialist Germany he said his country would like to see the UN plan for the independence of Namibia implemented without change or modification. "We want to see the plan implemented in accordance with Resolution 435 of the Security Council," Mr Becker said.

His country and other socialist and progressive nations were discouraging countries in Europe [illegible] investing in South Af[illegible].

The GDR believed in and supported self-determination by the people of Namibia and South Africa. "I am sure if we do not succeed in implementing Resolution 435, my country will do everything possible to increase material and moral support to the people of Namibia under SWAPO," said Mr Becker.

The GDR condemned the continuing acts of repression and aggression perpetrated by South Africa against the people of Namibia, South Africa and Angola. The ambassador said his country demanded that Namibia be granted independence without delay and that comprehensive sanctions against South Africa be implemented.

Mr Becker said his country stood in solidarity with the frontline states, the OAU and the national liberation forces who were stepping up their resistance to the colonial and racist regime in South Africa. It supported all African states in their efforts to overcome the colonial heritage and to establish a new society.

The GDR supported in solidarity and friendship the peaceful programme of reconstruction, resettlement and reconciliation under the Government of the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe.

"We look forward to a stable and continued co-operation in the political, economic, scientific, technical and cultural spheres between our two sovereign states," Mr Becker said.

Mr Becker said a delegation from the GDR would visit Zimbabwe at the end of the month to discuss joint ventures including irrigation programmes, the supply of earthmoving machinery and ways of helping to overcome current transport problems.

QUESTION OF NEW STATE POSSIBILITIES ANALYZED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3367, 21 Sep 81 pp 2161-2162

[Article by Dr David Ruddell: "New States for Old"]

[Text]

AS THE "DEADLINE" for the creation of new states in Nigeria draws nearer, the speculation, the lobbying, the politicking and the hopes grow daily more outrageous. New state movements are mushrooming almost as fast as the youth movements, the state-unions and the hometown improvement associations did in the past. New headquarters are being opened, press and television adverts are being placed, fund-raising functions are held, and public figures are being pressed to lend their support to this or that state movement. A recent announcement from the Committee on the Creation of States recorded that 38 "pleas" had been registered to date.

President Shagari gave an undertaking before the 1979 elections that some new states would be created. Whether this was an NPN electioneering plank, or whether it was born of a genuine feeling of a need for more managable units has become an academic point — what matters is that the new states promised must be delivered.

The current 19 states vary considerably in size, but are meant to incorporate very approximately similar populations. While they are not drawn along specifically ethnic lines, many of them are made up of peoples with close ethnic, linguistic and historical links — the boundaries are not marked with the arbitrariness of colonial borders. The states' allocations of Federal funds for social and economic development projects (i.e. Federal subsidies to states, supplementing locally raised funds) is supposed to be based on "population, derivation and need". Thus any new state could expect to receive a share of Federal funds on the same basis as the existing states. This, as well as the prestige, the contracts, the employment and (at least in theory) the stimulus to development that would follow, is a very attractive proposition to those areas which feel they have been neglected by their states' administrations.

But there are enormous constitutional, political, financial and ethnic problems associated with the creation of new states, not least of which is the constitutional requirement that local council elections be held first. In the last few months the lobbying has snowballed to the extent that the government is now presented with organised political and popular pressure on a scale that no other issue has aroused since the return to civilian rule. And this being Nigeria, big financial interests are backing many of the movements: after all the pickings in the form of construction, supply and service contracts in the new states will be far from chicken feed.

Of course, the government could ignore all this and drop the whole idea. But if, as is widely expected, the 1983 elections are to be fought on the basis of the new states, time is running out. Time will be needed to get new state administrations set up at least early enough to allow reasonable election machinery to come into play. There will also need to be parliamentary time to get all the necessary legislation through. This time-scale means that any recommendations that seek serious consideration need to be developed, popularised and delivered to government in the very near future.

Speculation about the new states suggests three board possibilities:

1. There will be a small number of new states, and these will be the long-promised ones like Katsina (out of Kaduna) or Anioma (out of Bendel). However, there will be no suggestion that the states issue need end there. Thus the option would remain open for any new government to continue creating new states.
2. There should be eight or 11 new states, the approximate lines of which have been discussed publicly, and lobbied for, over the last year or two. Eight or 11 new states would also solve the "12⅔ Issue" — any repeat of the constitutional crisis over what was two-thirds of 19 after the last Presidential election will be ruled out by ensuring that the future total number of states is divisible by three.
3. There might be a complete rethink of the optimum size of a state, which would allow for the statehood of many of the smaller (often ethnically-based) areas now making their demands known. This could result in as many as 40 or more states, and while it appears to be the least likely of the possibilities, it would be foolish to discount it.

In deciding which option to plumb for, the Shagari Government will no doubt have the 1979 voting patterns, and the projections for 1983 well in mind. The complexity of the political pattern may appear daunting, especially given the possible non-coincidence of party affiliations of Governors, Senate and House of Representatives, as well as the recent collapse of the NPN/NPP accord. But the ruling party does not lack its experts familiar with every move, every influence, every pressure at work within the states, and well able to interpret the shifts, the nuances and the developments within the most sensitive areas. The advice of these men will be well-valued.

Ask any Nigerian which are the "obvious" new states and he will probably mention a potential new state to come out of his own home state or a neighbouring one; he may also mention Katsina and Anioma. These two have been floated as possible new states for several years now. Katsina has never participated fully in Kaduna State. Distance, history and a feeling of injustice since the change from North-Central to Kaduna, has encouraged the clearly-identifiable Katsina area to keep its distance as far as this is possible.

Bendel State has always been an odd construct: the very name derives from "Benin" and "Delta". Benin Ibos have long wanted an Anioma State out of eastern Bendel, along the River Niger. This could be based at Ogwuashi-Uku, or possibly at the tiny town of Anioma itself, though this latter would involve major new development. The area is densely populated, and has long felt that its new statehood is virtually certain. There has been speculation that the Onitsha people from just across the river in Anambra State might join Anioma, but this idea is unpopular among the "Aniomas".

The delta area of Bendel State could well become Delta State, probably with its capital at Ughelli. There have also been calls for a Warri-based Itsekeri state to be known as Coast State but these (on the surface at least) appear to be fairly mischievous attempts to undermine the achievement of a Delta State. The Benin-based remainder of Bendel could most sensibly be called Edo State.

In Rivers State the politics of oil and party rivalries are strong influences. There have been moves to take a Port Harcourt State out of Rivers, but these are unlikely to succeed given the strength of riverine politics over upland politics in the state.

Anambra State has a dense population, and a heavy political lobby for a division into two: a northern section that could be called Enugu State and the residual southern part is increasingly being called New Anambra State. There are serious doubts about this, but the population "pressure" and political pressure are not to be dismissed.

Imo State could divide into an Aba-centred Abia State — certainly some strong political names have backed this — and the residual Owerri-based Imo State would remain, smaller and more manageable.

In the large and poorly-linked Cross River State, there is little internal dissent from a split, the interior to be called New Cross River State and based inland at Ogoja, while the southern, Calabar based coastal area would be called Calabar State. This would be a clear physical division, but is also a party political split.

North of Cross River, Gongola State is vast in area, and a separation has been mooted there. The Gongola name might disappear altogether, with the formation of a Savannah State administered from Yola, and a Taraba State with its capital at Numan. But Gongola is a GNPP state with little political leverage, so it remains to be seen how seriously these movements can affect Federal Government's decision.

Much of the activity and business in Bauchi State has long been centered on Gombe rather than Bauchi itself. This has led to widespread support and powerful political and financial pressure for a new Gombe State. How far the residual Bauchi might be able to stop this is not clear.

In the extreme north-east there is talk about dividing the massive Borno State into two. But there appears to be no great enthusiasm in Maiduguri for this, and the most talked-about division — a north/south one — does not make much sense.

Kano's recent traditional vs. modern troubles have already brought bloodshed to that state. The Governor and the Emir are at loggerheads and the creation of any new states from Kano might well exacerbate this problem. However, four new emirates have already come into existence at Hadejia, Gumel, Rano and Birnin Kudu. There is serious talk in this heavily traditional Hausa state of a division into five states based on these emirates, along with the walled city of Kano.

The political fatalism of Nigeria means that most people shrug their shoulders at the apparently inevitable success of the President's home state's desire to break into two, one state to comprise the northern Sokoto-Argungu areas, and a new Kebbi State to be based at Birnin Kebbi, or even at Yelwa just above the Kainji Lake.

Niger State seems unlikely to be affected. For many non-indigenes Niger remains perhaps one of the least-known states in the Federation. It is likely to remain intact, and continue to function from Minna, its current capital.

Kwara State is an awkward and difficult state in its present form. Sparsely populated in parts, and with poor communications it has always been a buffer between north and south, and yet it is not truly "middle belt". There is a strong movement for a Kogi State which might also take in parts of Benue State. It could comprise eastern Kwara, and Lokoja would probably be the Kogi capital, though Kabba would also be a strong contender. Alongside Kogi State pressure, is an alternative movement for an Okura State. This is an archetypal ethnic-based movement by a group that feels hard done by. The Igalas are a permanent minority in Kwara, Benue and Plateau States: They would like an (Idah-based?) Igala State to be carved from all three.

Apart from ceding some parts into the possible Kogi State, it seems unlikely that Benue State will be touched in any way.

In Plateau, there is a strong but not a fierce movement for a Middle Belt State in the southern, lower-lying part of the plateau, centred on Lafia, or possibly the junction town of Akwanga. There is, however, strong party-political opposition to any split in Plateau State.

Among the south-western states only in Oyo State has there emerged a strong movement for a viable division. This would leave Ibadan as Oyo's capital, while Oshogbo could become the headquarters of a new Osun State. This proposed state has a strong claim; it could be one of those most likely to succeed.

In Ondo State, there is possibly a stronger movement in Akure to ensure a continued residual New Ondo State than there is any crystallised movement towards new states. Similarly there are no clear signs of strong voices from Abeokuta that might lead to a division of Ogun State.

Finally Lagos, in area the smallest state in the Federation, will almost certainly remain intact. There is neither good reason nor popular pressure for a split.

Speculation remains speculation. None of the prospective states discussed here has any hard and fast promise from the Federal Government that it will get the go-ahead. But it would be surprising if by 1983 we were not to see several of them on the new map of Nigeria. If the Federal Government can create a small number of new states without committing political suicide by handing too many of them on a plate to the opposition parties, this must surely be the most attractive course open to it. If, however, it is necessary to create more states to ensure a greater NPN respresentation, it would be a truly remarkable government that would fail to be tempted by this.

NEED FOR BETTER INTERSTATE RELATIONS EXAMINED

AB201413 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 19 Sep 81

[News analysis by Robert Nkepe]

[Text] The Rivers and Imo state governments recently set up a joint peace committee to find ways of improving relations between the two neighboring states. In the news analysis, Robert Nkepe, a writer on current issues, examines the need for improved interstate relations in the country.

The committee, which comprises representatives of the two state governments, the army brugade commanders and the police commissioners of both states, is to work out a truce to the war of words that had raged between Port Harcourt and Owerri. The Rivers State House of Assembly also recently sent a six-man delegation, led by the majority leader, to meet with members of the Imo State Assembly on the same issue.

It is only persons who are not aware of the intensity of the media warfare between the two states that would not appreciate the need for the present move toward peace. The impression was often given of two sovereign states at war when one has to listen to the radio of either state. The propaganda used by the two sides overshadowed the bone of contention. The only reason advanced was that it was a battle over old [word indistinct]. Of significance in this regard was the lingering memories and constant reference to the protracted problem of abandoned property. It is disheartening to note that the two sides disregarded the fact that the federal authorities had shown due concern over this issue and have been trying to solve the problem once and for all. It was not realized by the participants in the media war on both sides that the settlement of outstanding points in the abandoned property question cannot be achieved in an atmosphere of bitterness.

It was even more disturbing to note that the so-called press war had the tacit support of the governments of the two states. Action was only deemed necessary by the Rivers State Assembly when the deputy speaker reported that his vehicle had been stoned while passing through Aba, because it had a Port Harcourt plate number. In fact, the deputy speaker laid out for a motion condemning the action and the Imo state government, but it was decided that a peace mission should be sent to Owerri.

It is certain that a situation in which a Nigerian citizen cannot move about freely without molestation simply because he is from a particular state should not be tolerated anywhere in this country. Such a situation negates the fundamental principle of freedom of movement as eloquently enshrined in the constitution. But action need not be taken only when the political leader is directly affected. On the whole, it should be noted that there is need for improved relations among all the states of the federation. There was a time when interstate visits by the rulers of the various states were a common feature of our national life. In recent years, such visits have become far and few. In fact, since the inception of the presidential pattern of government, such visits have been aimed at satisfying partisan political interests. Visits aimed at furthering existing cordial relations between states can easily be counted on the fingertip.

It must be noted that all the existing five political parties, in spite of their differences in opinion and style, claim to be working for the common good of the nation. As politicians and leaders of the various people, state governors owe it a duty to the nation to work toward harmonious interstate relations.

As for the press, freedom should not mean a license to arouse emotions and inflame tempers. That could be a disservice to the nation. In a nation as large and diverse as Nigeria, there are bound to be disagreements and differences. That is why the press should always endeavor to emphasize more on those factors which unite and bind the nation. The press have an intrinsic power and value which, if abused, can be detrimental to the interests and welfare of the nation.

Peace and stability cannot be maintained in any federation in the face of constant conflicts among the component parts. That is why all well-meaning Nigerians hope that members of the joint peace committee set up by the Imo and Rivers state governments would take their assignment seriously to enable the people go about their normal business without fear of molestation.

It is also expected that the outcome of the mission would help to foster a good-neighborliness between the two states in particular, and the other states of the federation in general.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST HAUSA, FULANI NOTED IN JOS AREA

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 20 Sep 81 p 7

[Article by Umaru Sani: "The Hausu/Fulani and Their Lot in Jos"]

[Excerpts]

THE Hausa/Fulani settlers in Jos Township had always been subjected to one form of punitive axe or the other by successive governments in Plateau State. Their offence, I understand, was that their grand-parents were said to have maltreated the grand-parents of the Biroms during the pre-colonial and the colonial era, when they ruled the town successively for about seventy years. [1850-1950].

From 1950, when the helm of affairs was passed to the Biroms, the Hausa/Fulani settlers were haunted by the shadow of "political vengeance."

From that time on the Plateau tribes, particularly the Biroms, started claiming ownership of Jos. They made funny proclamations that their grandfathers were fed with husk by H/Fulani rulers, whose grand-children they would now feed with sand. That animosity continued to grow, and by 1967 when the defunct Benue Plateau State was created, the vendetta assumed wider dimensions.

And now, with a partisan and civilian administration in power, the respectability of "article of faith" has been added to the vengeance. It seems as if the government and its agencies have, as a priority, the intensified oppression and intimidation of the H/Fulani in Jos Township. Observers see the situation as a mockery on freedom: He who would be no slave must consent to have no slave.

Nobody can tell when the settlers would finish serving their sentence and paying for the alleged "offences" of their forefathers. They have been mercilessly subjected to intolerable denials and ostracism.

Of all the tyrannies on mankind, the worst is that which persecutes the mind; concerted efforts have been made to deny the settlers' children any reasonable standard of education. They are indirectly denied admissions into post primary institutions and the state scholarship is beyond their reach, no matter the candidate's academic excellence.

The Jos Government Day Secondary School, which was supposed to admit most of its students from the township admits over eighty percent from the suburbs and the rural areas, to ensure the exclusion of the settlers' children.

These hard educational measures have forced many of them out of their birth place. Those of them who can trace the home towns of their parents and grand-parents in Bauchi and the far North, have taken refuge and silently migrated to these areas to pursue their education. But those who cannot trace their grand parents' home towns (and the majority are within this group) have become stateless; they have been rejected in the place they thought (and rightly so) they belonged to and have not had any other place to go. Some of them have resorted to claiming states on which they have never set foot in their lives. The results are obvious - embarrassment, dejection and despair.

Since the creation of states in 1977, roads in the settlers' areas have been the most neglected in the town, while the government's favourites continue to be comfortably sheltered in healthy environments, with smooth motorable roads and good drainage and sewage systems.

In view of the fact that the Hausa/Fulanis pay more taxes in Jos Township than all the other groups put together, as they form a larger group and are mostly in commerce, this would reflect a classical example of "monkey do work baboon de chop." When the old market was burnt, the settlers lost properties worth millions of Naira. But to their dismay, when temporary stalls were re-allocated, people who had nothing to do with the market were given preference at their own expense. It looked as if the mountain tribe's prayers had been answered in the burning of the market, as this offered them a perfect and subtle opportunity to dispossess the people, whose sweat had made Jos a great market centre for the North Eastern zone.

Government patronage is a dream to them, and it will amount to an attempt at the impossible for any of them to apply for plot allocation let alone obtain it. Furthermore to secure a Plateau State Government's contract by a settler would be to achieve "a mission impossible".

Perhaps the most disturbing development was the recent disregard for humanity; the settlers' fresh graves at the Dogon Karfe cemetery were bull-dozed to prepare plots for allocation to party loyalists. This would have resulted in violent reaction were it not for the timely intervention of the three members of the state assembly (Jos Township constituencies). There is a limit to human endurance.

It is an irony of circumstance that the mountain tribes, who claim to dislike oppression, clearly enjoy oppressing others. But as the saying goes: Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not and under a just God, cannot long retain it.

The Hausa/Fulani in Jos do not deserve persecution. If there is any group of people that deserve respect in Plateau State they are the one. One may not fully appreciate the points I have just made without reviewing the history of Jos settlement.

During the colonial era, forced labour was the order of the day. Hausa/Fulanis were conscripted ("Dihan Gwamna") from the far north to provide free labour in tin mines. Consequently mining settlements were named after the settlers: "S/Gidan Danyaya," "Derawan Babuje" "Rafin Bala" etc.

The traders settled in "Jama" but their main business location were the mines where they provided facilities and other essential requirements for the miners. They also played a vital role in distributive trade between the Northern people, the miners, Bauchi, and the far north. It is needless to mention that such a role was vital to the development of the entire area and its people.

The Birom and other minor tribes were at that time, hiding on the hills, the settlers brought good things of life and gradually taught them community life and encouraged them to participate in economic activities; bought their firewood, employed them as labourers and eventually liberated them from the lure-lures of hills, cave-life and some cultural vices which it would be a disservice to mention.

When the colonial masters arrived, they administered the people through the Hausa/Fulani institutions. Like other British territories, the people were now exploited through their local rulers. Forced labour and mineral prospecting were intensified. Cattle and personal taxes were increased. Various forms of licences and permits were introduced.

In 1926, the colonial administration re-partitioned the Bauchi Kingdom and made Jos and Wase part of Plateau province. But the Hausa/Fulani continued to rule the town until 1930, after the death of Sarki Isiaku, when there erupted intra-ruling class conflicts resulting from succession problems. The colonial administration was not able to settle the rival parties. It was clearly easier for them to replace the Hausa/Fulani ruler with a Birom Gan to bother themselves with the intractable problems of arbitrating between the rival parties, each claiming the right to succeed to the throne.

From that time onward the Jos foredounders became "second-class citizens" and targets of repudiation and hard measures.

It could be seen that the Hausa/Fulani were not only the foredounders of Jos but had also played a leading role in developing the area and its people. If there is anybody who deserves honour, respect and the claim of ownership of the town they should be at the forefront.

The exploitation argument of the Plateau tribes is untenable. If their grand-parents were intensively exploited through the then local chiefs, the grand-parents of the settlers, it was purely an accident of history.

What explanation can one make for the preference given to somebody who migrated about forty years ago to a place already established as against somebody who founded a place about a century ago and brought development to the area? How do you even compare somebody whose parents, grand-parents and great grand-parents are part and parcel of a place with someone who has just arrived?

A government should give equal treatment to its citizens, irrespective of their various political and religious leanings. This is even more so with leaders like Mr. Solomon Lar, who aspires to national leadership. Anybody who thinks he can lead this country without, at least, a certain degree of support of the Hausa/Fulani people ... I wish him good luck. Why can't the Plateau State government borrow a leaf from Kano, Zaria, Ilorin and other places?

There's need for a second thought. The Hausa/Fulani in Jos Township have suffered enough. It's high time they were politically integrated for peace, tranquility and good government of Plateau State. They are now, like other groups, requesting for a local government of their own. Its only fair if they are given. They are not asking for the Jos traditional chief-dom, nor are they asking for political appointments; what they want is fair treatment, just like all the other groups.

REACTIONS REPORTED TO AMNESTY OF GOWON, OTHERS

UPN Praises Shagari

AB040600 Lagos NAN in English 1625 GMT 3 Oct 81

[Text] Lagos, 3 Oct (NAN)--The Unity Party of Nigeria (UPN) yesterday described the recent amnesty granted a former head of state, Mr Yakubu Gowon, and 13 others by President Shehu Shagari as "magnanimous and praiseworthy".

According to a statement issued in Lagos by the party's national secretary, Mr C. B. Gomwalk, the party congratulated the federal government and the Council of States for responding to the desire of entire Nigerians.

The party appealed to the federal government to extend its pardon to the two wanted persons, Clement Yilda and Dauda Usman, to make the 1976 February 13 tragedy a thing of the past.

It also urged the president to complete his 21st independence anniversary package by extending his prerogative of mercy to Mr Odumegwu Ojukwu presently in exile in Ivory Coast.

Pardon 'Prerogative of President'

AB072244 Lagos Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 7 Oct 81

[Text] The National Party of Nigeria, NPN, says the issue of amnesty for political prisoners in exile is the exclusive prerogative of President Shehu Shagari.

In a statement in Lagos, the party said the views of the PRP [People's Redemption Party] national publicity secretary, Mr Uche Chikum Arije, that the NPN has politicized the issue of amnesty was therefore completely false and unfounded. The statement said that amnesty formed the part of the agenda of the last meeting of the National Council of State at which the (?entire) decision was reached to pardon Mr Yakubu Gowon and a number of other political prisoners.

It further said that both Dr Nnamdi Azikiwe and Governor Jim Nwobodo, who were aware of the agenda of this meeting, deliberately kept away from the meeting as if they had no idea whatsoever that Ojukwu should be pardoned. This the NPN said, was because they were afraid that if he was pardoned and returned to Nigeria, he would overshadow their political influence as he did during the military era.

Shagari Pardon Action Praised

AB081310 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] It is a normal practice for heads of state to address their various peoples on occasions of national significance such as national day celebrations. In addressing the nation on its recent 21st anniversary celebration, President Shehu Shagari could be said to have acted in accordance with this routine. In his speech, the president reviewed the nation's progress in the past 21 years as a sovereign state and, as would be expected, paid specific attention to his 2-year period as the captain of the ship of state.

However, the highlight of the presidential address to the nation was the clemency granted to some alleged political offenders. Prominent among them was Yakubu Gowon, the country's head of state for more than 9 of its 21-year history as a sovereign state. The president's clemency was extended in categories to all those found to have been associated either by direct involvement or through allegations of complicity in the tragic events of February 1976.

In granting the amnesty, President Shagari observed that a spirit of magnanimity and restraint should be injected into the nation's political life in the interest of peace and stability. This seems to end lingering memories of a said incident in the nation's political history. Most Nigerians had a feeling of shock and indignation at the tragic incident of February 1976. The events that followed immediately after made that February a traumatic period of Nigerian history which would be best forgotten.

Yakubu Gowon was the leader of this nation for nearly 10 years--the longest period that any man had to be at the helm of affairs. He was in control during the period of the entire civil strife which culminated in the 30-month civil war. At the end of the war in January 1970, the Gowon administration declared a general amnesty and succeeded to bind the nation's wounds by implementing a policy of reconciliation and rehabilitation. This enabled an easy process of national integration which would have been beclouded if the government had acted otherwise.

The administration also announced a nine-point program leading to a democratic rule, which was later declared unrealistic for reasons largely unacceptable to the generality of the people. Yakubu Gowon's seemingly political offense that led to his overthrow in July 1975 was his alleged failure to adhere to the program leading to constitutional rule. In spite of this and the subsequent allegation of complicity in the 1976 abortive military coup, there was still remarkable sympathy for him throughout the country.

This explains why the amnesty granted him has been hailed and acclaimed an act of good gesture by most Nigerians. In fact, the demand for his return to the country from exile was turned into a campaign issue in the 1979 presidential elections. Some party leaders pledged that if elected, they would immediately grant clemency to the former head of state. Whether or not the issue should have generated political controversy is beside the point. Experience has shown that the prerogative of mercy which President Shagari has exercised in this case is earily a fairly controversial affair. The incident of the Nixon pardon by his successor in office can be cited though it is accepted that the circumstances are remarkably different.

However, in spite of everything there was the feeling that Yakubu Gowon should be allowed to return to his native land. This gesture was based on the fact of his contribution to the growth and development of the nation. It is to his eternal credit that he managed to hold Nigeria together in the tense period between 1966 and 1970 by acts of omission and commission. He consolidated the nation's federal structure with the creation of 12 states. The policies of his administration can therefore be said to have provided a lasting framework for national unity and integration after the period of intense national crisis. Yakubu Gowon's real and only fault was he failed to realize that the applause would never last forever. He stayed too long in office and has subsequently paid a severe price for that fault. That is why President Shagari's act of clemency should be appreciated by all well-meaning Nigerians.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SAID STEPPING UP FOOD PRODUCTION

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 22 Sep 81 pp 1, 13

[Article by Mustapha Tor Waya]

[Text] THE Minister of Agriculture, Alhaji Ibrahim Gusau, has said the Federal Government had worked out a comprehensive plan to increase food production by an average of about six per cent annually.

Under the food production plan, he said, the Federal Government expected the growth of crops like maize and rice to increase by about 10 per cent yearly.

The overall objective of the plan, the minister said, was that by 1985, maize and rice would cease to be imported while the import of wheat, meat and dairy products would reduce substantially.

Alhaji Ibrahim Gusau was addressing the first National Seminar on Green Revolution at the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology, Institute for Agricultural Research, A.B.U., Zaria, yesterday.

The minister said the Nigerian concept of green revolution was the total reactivation of the agricultural sector of our economy.

Alhaji Ibrahim said this concept was different from that adopted by Mexico, India and the Philippines which associated its green revolution with substantial increases in wheat, maize and rice production alone.

Alhaji Ibrahim said implementation of the green revolution programme was now in full swing. He said the national programme for boosting rice production took off early this year.

Alhaji Ibrahim said input supply and distribution for rice, maize, cassava, guineacorn and other crops would be stepped up to ensure an overall increase in the production of foodcrops.

He said programmes for the rehabilitation of major cash crops such as groundnuts, cotton, cocoa, rubber and oil palm were being implemented, adding that under the groundnut rehabilitation scheme, for example, over 7.5 million Naira had been spent to purchase seeds, sprayers, chemicals and other production inputs within the last two years.

Alhaji Ibrahim said in the case of oil palm, some 21 processing mills were to be installed in strategic locations throughout the oil palm belt.

Alhaji Ibrahim said the Federal Government, encouraged by the experiences in the Funtua, Gusau and Gombe agricultural development projects, intended to establish more of such projects, adding that other areas would be covered by the accelerated development areas scheme. He said these projects had served as vital channel of transfer of technical know-how as well as external finance into the agricultural sector.

Alhaji Ibrahim said the Federal Government saw the river basin development authorities as vital agents for the success of the green revolution. He said the authorities were being encouraged to prepare more land for the production of food and that it was expected the authorities would provide about 80,000 tonnes of rice this year and also be involved in large scale cultivation of maize and cassava.

Alhaji Ibrahim said the green revolution also extended to the livestock production sector. He said the aim here was to raise protein consumption to a level substantially above the minimum recommended by Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO). He said this would be achieved through increased domestic production of beef, pork, poultry meat, goats, sheep rabbits, milk and eggs.

Alhaji Ibrahim said the green revolution also embraced the fisheries and afforestation sectors. He said about 888 million Naira was given out for agricultural sectors of the economy.

Earlier, in his address of welcome, the vice-chancellor of the Ahmadu Bello University, Dr. Ango Abdullahi had said the prominence being accorded agriculture throughout the country by the Federal Government gave a reassuring hope to and deserved the support of all well-meaning citizens, who would want a politically stable and economically prosperous country in the years to come.

Alhaji Ango Abdullahi said the consequences of neglecting agriculture any further were too grave to contemplate for the bright Nigeria we wished to build.

STEEL MILL PROJECTS REPORTED MOVING ON SCHEDULE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 23 Sep 81 p 17

[Article by Ali Makele]

[Text]

ALL target dates set aside for commissioning the various rolling mills to service the country's main steel complex at Ajaokuta remain realistic, Minister of Steel Malam Mamman Ali Makele has assured.

The minister who gave the assurance in a progress report on the various projects told a gathering of Nigerian workers at the Oshogbo Rolling Mill that the workers must see the projects as their individual ventures which should not suffer any set backs.

The Federal Government, he said, was fully determined to deliver the economy of this country to the hands of Nigerian citizens through the successful achievements of the set objective of the iron and steel scheme.

As a result, all Nigerian citizens connected with the projects in any way must strive hard to put in their best and refrain from sabotaging acts like strike actions and laziness at work.

He appealed to workers at the project sites wherever they are located in the country to maintain industrial peace and always report directly any dispute to the project coordinators or his office in Lagos.

Malam Makele said in his efforts to speed up work on the project at Oshogbo rolling mill, ten million Naira had been made available by President Shehu Shagari for immediate work on the supply of water from a dam to the plant.

The minister who has just concluded a comprehensive tour of all rolling mills under construction described progress at the sites as "fast moving and encouraging.

He said: "reports from Ajaokuta, Katsina, Jos and Aladja Delta show significant forward push toward reality".

He said in the case of Delta Rolling Mill, many units have been completed while cold commissioning test were presently being performed and this indicated that the plant should be commissioned by the President towards the end of this year."

Commenting on the Oshogbo Rolling Mill, the minister said developments were also very encouraging with finishing touches being given to most units.

Speaking to the New Nigerian, the Site Manager for the Oshogbo plant, Mr. Brewer Abe said the main base plate for the steel structure has been completed.

According to him, 600 Nigerian workers were engaged on the construction work at the site. This include skilled and unskilled workers while a large number of others had been sent abroad for various training to enable Nigerians man the plant when it goes into full production. Currently, there are 60 expatriates mainly Germans working on the Oshogbo site.

BRIEFS

FOREIGN DEBT DISCLOSED--Lagos, 18 Sep (NAN)--The minister of finance, Mr Victor Masi, said in Lagos today that Nigeria's foreign debt stood at N5.2 billion. Mr Masi, who was answering questions from newsmen in his office, said that the amount included those incurred by the various state governments. He also disclosed that the country's external reserves stood at N5.2 billion while the monthly import bill stood at between N900 million and N1.2 billion. On the austerity measures introduced by the federal government, Mr Masi said that the government did not make a tight budget for the year. He said that the worldwide oil glut that had also affected the country did not mean that the country's economy had collapsed. The minister explained that the graph-flow of any nations' economy was never static, rather it fluctuates. Commenting on the over payment of states allocation account to states during the 1979/80 financial year, the minister said that a total of N1.2 billion was involved. He said that these over payments arose out of the previous revenue allocations procedure whereby states received cash advances from the federal government in anticipation of actual revenue receipts. Mr Masi explained that as things turned out, the 1979/80 projected revenue were not realised whereas the states had already received their money in advance of actual revenue receipts. KOREAN 'EXPERTS' ARRIVE--Nine Korean experts have arrived in Enugu to assist the Anambra state government in the execution of its agricultural program. The experts are to be joined later by 37 others. The Koreans will be involved in irrigation, the management of fish farms, the manufacturing of agricultural implements and the teaching of food production in the state's school of agriculture. HOUSE APPROVES PRIVATE AIRLINES--Lagos, 24 Sep (NAN)--The House of Representatives today in Lagos adopted a motion that private airlines be approved to compete with the Nigerian airways on domestic routes. The motion also urged the House Committee on Aviation to speed up action on a bill to amend the Nigeria Airways Act of 1949 which gave exclusive right to the airline on domestic routes. The motion was moved by Mr Mohammed Is'haq, NPN, Niger. He said that in view of the "unabated inefficient operations of the Nigeria airways as manifested by its inability to cope with domestic flights, the house should direct that private airlines be approved for domestic flights.["] The legislator said that the private airlines should be companies which should not attract any government participation. Mr Is'haq blamed the inefficiency of the Nigeria airways on the monopoly it enjoyed and pointed out that the airways would become efficient when other airlines were allowed to compete with it. Opposing the motion earlier, Mr Rowland Owie, UPN, Bendel, said that the airline's inefficiency "was due to the unnecessary show of power by some top Nigerians." According to him, many top government officials are in the habit of causing unnecessary delays of flight. Mr Owie therefore appealed to Nigerians to give the airline the opportunity to perform, adding that the house should allow the recommendations of the House Committee on Aviation "to materialise" before taking further steps on the Nigeria airways. OIL PRODUCTION FIGURES--Lagos, 23 Sep (NAN)--Nigeria produced a total of 23,899,281 barrels of crude oil in July this year, according to a monthly report just published by the Petroleum Inspectorate of the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC). The figure represented an average production rate of 770,945 barrels of crude oil per day. According to the report 19,840,492 barrels of crude oil were exported during the period and this represented an export rate of 640,016 barrels per day. The inspectorate stated that high-quality grades of crude oil sold at a posted price of N29.10 per barrel while medium-grade crudes sold at N28.13 per barrel during the period under review. Official selling prices were N26.24 per barrel for high-quality crude and N25.39 per barrel for medium-grades, the report said. According to the report, the prices remained constant despite what it called "the changing fortunes of oil in the world market." It added that the refineries at Port Harccourt, Warri, and Kaduna received a total of 5,664,316 barrels of crude oil during the month while a total of 292,042 barrels were supplied under the offshore refining agreement. COMMON CURRENCY--Nigeria has been warned against adopting a common currency with other ECOWAS countries. Speaking to our correspondent in Lagos, the secretary of the Lagos state government, Mr Olufunmi Bashorun, cited the examples of the European Economic Community and the NATO countries which, inspite of their cooperation, have not adopted a common currency. Mr Bashorun suggested that Nigeria should be more cautious now about any move which could jeopardize her economy. He said that Nigeria should continue with the protocol arrangements which, he said, the military rushed into but should not go beyond that. He remarked that the protocol agreement has exposed our economy to more hazards. [Text] [AB241650 Kaduna Domestic Service in English 1600 GMT 24 Sep 81]

NAVY EXPANSION--President Shehu Shagari has said that the present administration will continue to encourage the growth of the navy in terms of personnel and hardware. In a message to mark the 25th anniversary of the Nigerian Navy, the president explained that this will be done in recognition of the role of the force in the defense of the country's maritime wealth and territorial waters. He pointed out that the current 5-year development plan program contains plans to enhance the navy's mastery of the sea and its striking capability. The navy, as presently equipped, the president observed, is capable of defending the country's shores against any aggressor. In his message, the minister of defense, Alhaji Akanbi Oniyangi, remarked that the silver jubilee was being celebrated at a time when the nation's stand in international politics required solidified defense in every respect. He pledged that his ministry will continue to provide the navy with necessary support in the execution of its responsibilities and called on men of the force to rededicate themselves to set objectives. In another message, the chief of defense staff, Lt Gen Alani Akinrinade, stressed that need for the navy to rise to the challenges created by international development. The Nigerian Navy, he declared, must provide the (?lead) to African naval forces in developing a sound operational capability. Activities marking the anniversary begin today with the official opening of the naval college in Port Harcourt and will be rounded off by the end of the month. NAVAL COLLEGE--The naval college at Onehi in Okrika local government area of the Rivers State has been commissioned. In his address, the minister of defense, Alhaji Akanbi Oniyangi, said the college is part of the federal government's efforts to develop, modernize and strengthen the armed forces. He stated that the college was established in view of the inadequate number of naval officers. It will have an initial intake of 40 students. The minister had earlier inspected a guard of honor mounted by officers and men of the Nigerian Navy. [Text] [AB270904 Lagos Domestic Service in English 1500 GMT 26 Sep 81]

NEW POLITICAL PARTY--A new political organization known as the National Democratic Action Party (NDAP) is to be launched in Lagos today. She said it was improper to preach principles which are alien to the country's ideals. [Text] [AB270951 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 27 Sep 81]

FORGED CHECK LOSSES--Lagos, 28 Sep (AFP)--Commercial banks in Nigeria are losing at least seven million naira ($11 million) a month from forged cheques, the government-owned NEW NIGERIAN newspaper reported today. The paper said its investigations into 12 banks revealed that some bank officials colluded with customers in the frauds. The United Bank for Africa (UBA) topped the list of those which had been robbed. It reported six cases totalling some 2.4 million naira ($3.5 million) to the police, the NEW NIGERIAN said. Other banks reported to have lost huge sums of money were the Union, the Central Bank of Nigeria, the Mercantile, the Savannah, the First Bank, the National and the Societe Generale. The NEW NIGERIAN said that some arrests had been made among staff of all the banks affected, where cheques for huge sums of money usually drawn on other banks had been accepted for immediate payment without being properly cleared. GOWON'S BROTHER RELEASED--Kaduna, 2 Oct (NAN)--Eight beneficiaries of the amnesty granted some participants of the February 1976 abortive coup, in which the then head of state, General Murtala Muhammed, was killed, were today released in Kaduna. They are Major Iliya K. Abang, S. K. Dimka, former commissioner of police for Kwara State, Captain Peter Atemlong and Captain Christopher Wuyep. Others are Captain A. A. Maidodo, 2d Lt Augustine Welbe, WO-11 Emmanuel Izam and Captain Isaiah Gowon, brother of former head of state. Hundreds of relatives, friends and well wishers converged on the Kaduna Central Prison as early as 7.30 a.m. to await their release. At the prison gates to receive the men were Mr Peter Gowon, elder brother to the former head of state and his sister Mrs Martha Audu. [Text] [AB021305 Lagos NAN in English 1248 GMT 2 Oct 81]

PROPOSED CASTRO VISIT--The proposed visit to Nigeria of President Fidel Castro of Cuba attracts comments from the NIGERIAN STANDARD. The paper notes that the Cuban leader has never doubted Nigeria's leadership role in Africa and her contributions toward liberation struggles in the continent. The STANDARD also recalls Cuba's role in Africa's political developments, and sees the occasion of President Castro's visit as an opportunity for the two countries to examine possible areas where their commitments to the total liberation of the continent can be effectively aligned. President Castro, concludes the paper, is a friend of Africa, and is welcome anytime he steps down on the Nigerian soil. NEWSPAPER ON REAGAN POLICIES--The NIGERIAN STANDARD accuses President Ronald Reagan of the United States of carrying out policies that constitute a threat to international peace and security. For instance, notes the paper, the American Government is persistently aiding the racist regime in South Africa to carry out military incursions against Southern African states including the recent invasion and occupation of Angola. This, the STANDARD concludes, is in addition to various atrocities and crimes which the Reagan Administration has continued to support in different parts of the world. GUIDED MISSILE STRIKE SHIPS--Lagos, 29 Sep (NAN)--The minister of defence, Alhaji Akanbi Oniyangi, today at the naval base in Lagos commissioned three guided missile strike patrol ships, named the NNS Ekpe, the NNS Aug and the NNS Damisa. The minister said that the ships were fast-moving and capable of launching effective long-range attacks on enemy installations and targets. He said that in the next few months, the navy would receive three more ships, named the NNS Siri, the NNS Ayam and the NNS Ekun. These ships and a flag ship, the NNS Aradu, he added, would substantially enhance the striking capability of the navy. Also, as part of the week-long activities to mark the silver jubilee, Alhaji Oniyangi opened navy town at Ojo, along Badagry road. He said that with the opening of Navy Town, the federal government was fulfilling one goal in providing adequate accommodation for members of the armed forces. The minister also said that more houses for naval officers, would soon be built at Calabar and Port Harcourt. [Text] [AB300756 Lagos NAN in English 0743 GMT 30 Sep 81]

DISCRIMINATORY ADMISSIONS POLICY--It is now a law in Oyo State that all students in primary and secondary schools whose fathers fail to produce their flat rate tax receipts would no longer be entitled for admissions and registration into the state owned educational institutions. A special motion to this effect was unanimously passed in the state House of Assembly recently at a one-day emergency meeting of members summoned by the Speaker, Chief Mololade Gbolagunte. The House resolved that each headmaster and principal of primary and secondary schools in the state must obtain the receipt from the father of any child seeking admissions and registration. The new legislation is the latest on the issue of flat rate tax which has generated considerable controvery in the state since Governor Bola Ige announced the government policy, over the issue. The motion was sponsored and seconded by the House Majority Leader and Chief Whip, Mr Jide Windapo and Akinlabi Kuboniyi respectively. The motion read: "That in view of the total commitment of Oyo State Government to effect implementation of a huge free education and free medical and health services programme, I move that this honourable House endorses the stand of the executive to make production of tax receipt a condition for admission and registration of pupils and students in all educational institutions maintained and run by the state government with effect from the 1981/82 academic session." REQUEST: ABROGATE POLL TAX--Oyo State counil of the NPN has renewed its plea to the state government to abrogate collection of flat rate tax in the interest of those described as majority of citizens without stable sources of income. Chairman of the party in the state, Alhaji Olatunji Mohammed told newsmen at a press conference in Ibadan that the contention of NPN over the issue was that a refined order and relieve the people. He said his party was misunderstood by those in government in the statement and corrected the impression that the NPN campagined against the payment of tax. "We on this side observed the fact that payment of tax is a civil responsibility but the fact remains that most of those to pay such tax are too poor to be subjected to the rigour of searching for the 7.50 Naira." He said the Federal Goverment also realised the unfortunate economic positions of such citizens before it ordered that payment of flat rate tax must stop throughout the country. PDS ADMITS MEMBERS TRAINED IN LIBYA

[Text] Dakar, 7 Oct (AFP)--In a communique issued by the National Secretariat of the opposition Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS), the party admits that it has sent activists to Libya for training as bodyguards of the secretary general of the party, Abdoulaye Wade, in preparation for future elections.

Eight PDS activists, including a member of parliament, Doudou Camara, and two national leaders of the party have been charged with interference in state security following an accusation by Amadou Fall, a former officer who has been Wade's bodyguard since January 1981.

In its communique the PDS asserts that it sent activists for training as bodyguards because its secretary general had been a victim on several occasions of traps, attacks, death threats and assassination attempts by the ruling Socialist Party, and PDS activists had been assassinated.

The communique adds that the PDS is prepared to assume moral and political responsibility for this training aimed at strengthening its security and that of its leaders. It points out that Camara--who according to the Ministry of Justice admitted that he participated in a training course in Libya from 28 March to 27 May 1981 in intelligence, military security, sabotage, the setting of mines and traps, and destabilization--was put in charge of party security and that of the secretary general in particular.

In addition the PDS sees no offense or crime for a political party which feels threatened to prepare its activists to defend itself and to train them in certain fields in another country.

The communique also discloses that the investigators did not find any arms, contrary to what Amadou Fall said. According to a communique of the Ministry of Justice, Fall said during the investigation that cases of arms and ammunition had been brought into Senegal from Tripoli through Mauritania.

According to the PDS communique, Amadou Fall, who was arrested in August for fraud, was an intelligence specialist in the Senegalese Army. He left to work in Europe before being dismissed as an army officer.

The communique of the Senegalese opposition party ends by reaffirming that there is a plot to destabilize the PDS internally and to tarnish its image as a legal party as well as its ability to assume power democratically.

TIES WITH FRANCE--Paris, 8 Oct (AFP)--The president of the Seychelles, France-Albert Rene, declares himself favorable to the strengthening of cooperation relations with France, relations which according to him ought to be based on mutual respect and reciprocal interest. In an interview granted to the Third World weekly, AFRIQUE-ASIE, the Seychelles head of state stresses that his country is very well disposed toward France and states that the joint France-Seychelles commission meeting will come by the beginning of 1982 at the latest. The president also recalled that in order to strike a balance between the Creole, French and English languages, the place of the French language has been strengthened in the Seychelles, especially in the fields of culture, information and education. France-Albert Rene further indicates that attempts to destabilize his regime have not ended, and that he considers this to be a sign that the revolutionary process is still continuing in the Seychelles, and that it is upsetting certain people here and there. Talking about security in the Indian Ocean, the Seychelles president again stated that he was asking for the dismantling of foreign military bases and the withdrawal of all foreign forces in the region. DELAYS IN CASH PAYMENTS TO FARMERS SCORED

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 1 Oct 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Summary] Complaints from farmers in some areas of our country concerning delays by some agencies in paying for their crops are still being received. This newspaper has received letters from citizens who make complaints of this kind. A recent example is that from Namabengo village, Songea, Ruvuma Region, which we published in the Letters to the Editor section of our newspaper on Tuesday this week. The letter said that Ruvuma Region is now cultivating considerable maize but that the farmers are becoming discouraged by the delay in receiving their money when they sell their crops.

We are astonished that a situation like this has existed up to now. Cash payments to farmers have been speeded up and steps enabling cash payments to be made have been taken. For example, to make it possible for the National Milling Company [NMC] to purchase crops during the 1981-1982 harvesting season, the National Bank of Commerce authorized 1.210 billion shillings to be used for maize purchases. This money was to be sent to branches of the National Bank of Commerce in the regions and districts to be used by the NMC to purchase crops and transport them from villages to warehouses. The objective of this procedure was to make it possible for farmers to be paid cash when they sell their crops.

The question is: Has this money not yet reached the places where complaints continue to be made that the farmers are incurring delays in receiving their money? We doubt that the money has not yet arrived. Because when the general manager of the National Bank of Commerce, Pascal Kamuzora, mentioned the authorization of the above-mentioned funds, he said in the first week of July that this money was to be distributed throughout the country according to the quantity of crops produced. Therefore, it is obvious that not a shortage of money but other matters are causing the delay complained about by the farmers.

The agencies and administrators concerned should pursue more conscientiously the matter of paying the farmers when they sell their crops and make certain that the procedure for paying them cash at the place where they sell their crops is borne in mind and carried out. Because when farmers sell their crops and are told that they will be paid later, they may become discouraged and feel oppressed. And to discourage farmers is to endanger the whole nation.

VILLAGERS DISPLACED FOR CONSERVATION AREAS

Paris LE MONDE in French 22 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] One of our readers who recently visited northern Togo provides the following account of the effects of a recent "extention of the zones for wildlife protection" ordered by President Eyadema:

At the beginning of the rainy season, when the huts had just been rebuilt and reroofed, when the fields were ready for the approach of sowing time, several thousand humble peasants were quite simply thrown off the land, with no warning; with no indemnity, or assistance, or even the most elementary planning for their departure, without any directions of finding new land. It was so unorganized that some families were expelled twice within a matter of weeks.

And the conditions of expulsion! With armed men, paratroopers, as if it were an enemy country or a rebel-held area, shouting, "We mean business! We'll kill!" A fine boast, to be sure! In fact, only stock animals were killed, an act difficult to justify. Huts were burned, granaries destroyed, sheets of iron torn up with axes by the paratroopers when peasants were not moving fast enough to get away with them. The inhabitants of these villages could not believe their eyes: "Surely, our president does not know what his soldiers are doing...," but they finally had to recognize the truth. In one sector, the boats were confiscated to prevent people from going to cultivate their already planted fields on the other side of the river.

This is going to mean great distress in the months to come, and death for many, for life was already harsh and the people were already poor enough as it was. In another sector, the expulsion was carried out more peacefully, without the involvement of the army; but the situation is just as tragic: people without a roof to shelter them from the tornados, with no land to be sown. Old people, heads of families, who hide their tears from their children...who, in the midst of the most excruciating poverty, are selling the last of their possessions to hire a truck, evidently at considerable cost.

Many were indignant at such a monstrous injustice...but they kept their indignation to themselves. To my knowledge, there was not a single protest, not a single voice raised.

SECURITY SITUATION SAID WORSE THAN THAT UNDER AMIN

Ssemogerere News Conference

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2828, 15 Sep 81 p 19

[Article: "Ssemogere Hits at 'Savage Retaliation'"]

[Text] Kampala, September 12--Ugandan opposition Democratic Party (DP) leader Paul Ssemogerere has strongly attacked the Government's handling of security problems and said the current spate of killings and arrests are similar to those under ousted dictator Idi Amin.

"Scores of helpless civilians are killed in massive and savage retaliatory operations by Government troops," Mr Ssemogerere told a 90-minute news conference at his party's headquarters in Kampala yesterday.

"Soldiers on official duty go to villages and shoot indiscriminately at every human being in sight, looting extensively and raping both young and old women, as if sent there with a licence to commit all these atrocities."

The opposition leader said he had a list of 16 people killed by the Army during a weekend operation in Wakiso, 10 miles (16 kms) north of here, and that 18 other bodies were still unidentified.

Over 20 other civilians have been killed since last February by Ugandan Army soldiers in the nearby town of Kakiri, Mr Ssemogerere said. In his most bitter attack yet on President Milton Obote's Government's handling of security, Mr Ssemogerere added: "The savage retaliatory measures by the Army are made even before police start its investigations, making it impossible to know the real culprits and their motives.

"I feel only disgust and profound shock at the continued Government overreaction against the innocent people. I lay the blame squarely on the Government."

Serious deterioration...

He said there had been a serious deterioration in security since the general elections in December last year and Ugandans were now saying that insecurity in the country was worse than that which prevailed under Amin's dictatorship.

The number of detainees was higher now than under Amin, while the refugee population in Eastern Zaire and Southern Sudan was also higher than it ever was during the bloody dictator's rule, he said.

The opposition leader called for immediate measures to improve security and police morale.

These included ensuring that the Army was only deployed after police investigation of a situation, inquests into civilian deaths in Army operations and a commission of inquiry to look into recruitment, training, deployment and conditions of service in the Army. (A.F.P.)

Shootings, Arrests

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2828, 15 Sep 81 p 17

[Text] Nairobi, September 12--Two Kenyan lorry drivers were shot dead on Tuesday night at Kisenyi outside Kampala by armed men who stormed into their hotel, Kenyan papers reported here today.

Quoting informed sources in the Ugandan capital, the STANDARD and DAILY NATION English-language papers said that following the shooting five other Kenyan Somalis were rounded up yesterday and imprisoned at the notorious Makindye prison in Kampala.

The sources, which identified the slain drivers as Mohamed Hirsi Mohamed and Khalif Ali Samatar, disclosed that the Kenyan High Commission in Uganda was last night trying to get full details of the killings and the subsequent arrest of the Kenyan nationals in Kampala.

The sources described the situation as confused, with a large number of night raids, while looting was commonplace. The night the two Kenyans were shot armed men reportedly drove to a house near the Kenyan High Commission where they parked their vehicle for more than 30 minutes, and later drove off to raid and loot neighbouring houses. Soldiers, Police Clash

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 11 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] THE problem faced by Ugandan President Milton Obote's government in restoring security in the troubled country has been amplified, once again, by two small but significant incidents. On Wednesday last week, a group of men attacked Wandegeya police station, on the outskirts of Kampala, sending policemen scampering for safety. Three days later some people hidden in the bush fired on soldiers at Wakiso army camp, 22 kms west of Kampala, triggering an exchange of rocket and automatic rifle fire lasting for several minutes. In both cases, it was not another attack by dissidents waging an armed guerrilla campaign to overthrow the government. Rather, the attackers were, in both cases, army soldiers out to settle a score with policemen and other soldiers. And both incidents are a grim illustration of the state of government security forces, whose indiscipline does not only hinder their effectiveness, but also has made them a big liability in the government's efforts to win the confidence of the people.

The Wandegeya incident had been triggered by police attempt to enforce the law. Police had apparently caught soliders trying to loot civilian property. The police had tried to stop the soldiers who, however, failed to take heed. Police ended up shooting four of them. Other soldiers then drove in three army jeeps and attacked the police station with small arms and rocket-propelled grenades. The Wakiso incident was a result of differences among soldiers within the camp. But it later spilt beyond the camp walls and finally ended up with the looting of civilian property when more soldiers were rushed to the area, according to witness reports.

The indiscipline is not only causing rifts within the Ugandan security forces, but seems to have put a strain on relations between Ugandan soldiers and the Tanzanian policemen who are helping to maintain law and order, mainly in Kampala. The Tanzanian policemen have disappeared from roadblocks this past week in an apparent protest against growing army indiscipline. Several hundreds of these policemen, who remained in Uganda when Tanzanian troops were withdrawn in June, have been jointly manning roadblocks with Ugandan police, as well as escorting Ugandan soldiers on anti-guerrilla campaigns in urban areas to prevent looting. While they have long been dissatisfied with the state of the Ugandan security forces, they reportedly felt they must register their protest after the Wandegeya incident.

Nowhere has the indiscipline within the army been more keenly felt than in the West Nile Province, where government control has been pushed down to Arua by guerrillas. The soldiers started losing the grip when they reportedly mutinied. During the mutiny they massacred scores of innocent people at Ombachi Catholic Mission, an event that did not help the government's image internationally. With the morale at its lowest ebb, the soldiers could not resist former supporters of dictator Idi Amin, now fighting under the name of the Uganda National Rescue Front (UNRF), who drove them down to the southern outskirts of Arua. A government counter-offensive during the past few weeks has failed to dislodge the UNRF men still entrenched some 15 kms out of Arua, according to reports from the area.

The fighting, however, has claimed the lives of about 1,000 civilians, killed by both soldiers and guerrillas, displacing several thousands of others who have taken refuge in Zaire. How long the situation will go on may be determined from the attitude of those who have fled into refugee camps. "The people (refugees) are beginning to think that they must stay here for a few months or a few years," says Canadian John Tardzold, whose mission at the Zairean town of Arua, gives refuge to several hundred people from West Nile. It all depends on how the government can be able to instil discipline in its army. It is only a disciplined force that could be able to crush the rebels and win the confidence of the area's people. ■

Landmine Kills 20

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 14 Sep 81 p 16

[Text]

TWENTY civilians were killed yesterday when a bus detonated a landmine eight kilometers east of Kampala near Manambe Forest.

The announcement by Internal Affairs Minister John Luwuliza Kirunda on government radio said the government of President Milton Obote will take all necessary action to curb the activities of "bandits" in the Kampala area.

The Minister disclosed in the same announcement that nine civilians died on Thursday when their bus detonated a landmine 29 kilometres north of the capital near Bombo.

There were no further details on either of the incidents. But travellers arriving in Kampala said the latest blast occurred on Satruday afternoon along the main road from Kampala to the Kenya border. They said traffic was diverted off the main road while soldiers helped clear the wreckage.

Since February guerrillas trying to topple Dr. Obote have been attacking police and military installations and planting landmines on well-travelled roads.

Local residents said government soldiers rampaged through the village of Wakiso, 16 kilometres west of Kampala, last weekend and killed around 20 people.

Uganda's Minister for Internal Affairs, Dr. John L. Kirunda, has on behalf of the Uganda Government, expressed condolences to the families of people killed in the landmine incidents.

He said that people engaged in the killing had always claimed that their objective was to be in government irrespective of the will of the people.

The Minister said the bandits' political spokesmen were always quick in talking about human rights but would keep quiet when bus travellers were killed for no reason.

He said bandits had attacked police stations, killing people and stealing property but have never condemned any single act of violence committed by them.

Dr. Kirunda said the leader of the opposition, Mr. Paulo Ssemogerere, has always found it opportune to condemn the army and the police and say nothing about the criminal activities of bandits against the army, the police and civilians.

UK CORRESPONDENT ON TORTURE PRACTICES

PM121521 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 12 Oct 81 p 5

[Hugh Davies report: "Obote Foundation a Torture Centre in Uganda Worse Than Under Amin"]

[Text] The Milton Obote Foundation, a drab building in Kampala's industrial area, together with the Kireka Military Barracks, 45 miles away on the road to Jinja, are now centres for torture, according to evidence accumulated by Western diplomats in Uganda.

Reliable informants told me in Kampala last week that the people living in the vicinity of the foundation building in Fifth Street were becoming increasingly alarmed about the activities of its occupants, members of the ruling Uganda People's Congress Party.

A woman spoke of bodies being carried from a rear exist and dumped aboard a lorry late at night.

One of her neighbours said he often was forced to leave his house "because I was just unable to bear the sound of screaming from inside the foundation."

Firm indications that the Kireka army post is being used by government interrogators came from the father of a girl in her mid-twenties.

A shy and withdrawn man, he talked in a soft, sad voice of his daughter's arrest a month ago. The woman was picked up at the office where she worked in Kampala's main commercial district.

Three plainclothes men, who introduced themselves as "State security officers" told the office manager that she was being taken with another woman to the parliament building, where both President Obote and the Ugandan special branch have offices.

In fact, according to the father, an apparently sincere man, both women were driven by car to Kireka and held for seven days.

While the second woman emerged from the ordeal frightened but unhurt, the man's daughter had to be treated in the hospital for severe injuries.

She told her father of being taken alone to a small room and questioned about three men, identified by her interrogators as anti-Obote guerrillas. Two were raid to be operating in exile from Nairobi.

The daughter was grilled at length about the number of times the men were supposed to have visited her home. She denied even knowing them.

Her father said: "They hit her first with pangas. Then they used iron bars on her. They broke her right forearm and then the fingers of her left hand. Her backbone was also injured.

"She fainted and was taken to a cell which was so crowded there was hardly room to stand up. Twenty-three other people, including three women, were there.

"Four days later, guards took her back for interrogation. There she faced different men. My daughter told me she feared she would be killed 'for nothing'.

"However, her new questioners appeared to realise after a while that she knew nothing and ordered her release. There was no transport for her, so she had to stay in the cell another three days before being driven home."

The father was anxious to show me his daughter's injuries to substantiate his accusations. But on the day I was due to meet her, the Ugandian authorities deported me.

A few hours before my expulsion, President Obote, in icy exchanges with reporters, became enraged when asked about torture being used by his soldiers, two of whom, both army privates, have been charged with cruelty.

He said: "We are pursuing a programme of human rights in Uganda. Despite our difficult situation, I think we are doing it very well.

"Where there has been a breach of human rights, we have not spared anybody. Even leading members of my own party have been arrested.

"The very fact that you know that some soldiers have been arrested and taken to court should be a credit to us rather than a matter of vilification."

At the weekend, in a speech to mark the 19th anniversary of his nation's independence, Dr Obote told an audience of about 1,000 in Kampala: "I call on every citizen to respect above all human life."

He also appealed to those "who live in areas of insecurity not to fear security forces but to be open and let the authorities know who is disturbing the peace."

His call is likely to go unheeded if the experience of one man I interviewed is typical.

Joseph is a Bugandan and therefore no friend of the president, a Lango tribesman. But his story, told in a hut just off the heavily guarded Entebbe-Kampala road, about ten miles from the capital, seemed authentic.

He said: "I was here with my wife at about 7.15 a.m. last Tuesday morning (Sep 29) when two lorry-loads of special force policemen (Obote's new elite unit) drew up outside.

"Most of my neighbours fled into the bush. I stayed and watched as my home was torn apart. We have guerrillas in this area, but the searchers appear to be hunting for something else.

"I am a poor man and had hidden all my money, 4,000 shillings (34 pounds) in the pages of books on a shelf. They found half of it and the commander said he was confiscating the money. I was fortunate. They did no harm to me or my wife. All they took were my savings and some clothing in cupboards as well as sheets and blankets which they loaded onto a vehicle."

The man went on: "A neighbour was cycling on the road nearby. They didn't even ask him questions. One of the policemen just shot him.

"Another man was asked for his watch. He made a silly decision by refusing to hand it over. He was shot in his garden in front of his two wives."

Joseph said that times were different now under Obote. "They were bad under Idi Amin, but we people who had little money were safe. It's not safe now. Our lives are much worse."

Dr Obote's most outspoken critic in Kampala, Mr Paul Ssemogerere, leader of the Democratic Party, used similar words describing the security situation as "grave" with troops still out of hand.

He said: "The rate of killing, rape, looting and destruction of property far exceeds that experienced during Amin's days. Most people in Uganda feel unprotected. There is no respect for the rule of law by troops. I have evidence of a series of killings by the army involving officers and senior NCOs."

The worst was the notorious Ombachi Roman Catholic Mission massacre in July of 60 people in the West Nile where, according to the Democratic Party, 500,000 people have fled their homes to become refugees in Zaire.

Of the 126 MPS elected to parliament last December in Uganda's controversial elections, which President Obote insists were not rigged, the Democratic Party has 50.

Of these, four have been arrested--Al Haji Ali Serum-Jogi, an economics professor, Yoeri Kyesimira, for inciting hatred against the government; Yafes Sabiti for treason; and Elijah Kitaka-Gawera on a murder charge.

Commonwealth leaders, who according to Dr Obote were approached by his prime minister, "in the corridors" during the Melbourne conference, about a mixed military force of up to 100 men to help train troops, have been upset by a church report on the country's troubles.

The five-page document, signed by five religious leaders, talked of Uganda "bleeding to death," with army roadblocks becoming "places of torture."

The report said: "The dignity of our womenfolk has been abused. When you see the army men, and sometimes police, search women, it is very unhealthy and shameful.

"At gunpoint, they sometimes force the women to take off their clothes. They demand money even from children and old people."

In an interview at Jinja last Wednesday, Mr Peter Otai, minister of state for defence, said that in four hours of talks with President Obote on September 24, the Democratic Partyleader had said that indiscipline in the army was "not the only cause of insecurity."

The minister pointed out: "He also told us that there were acts sometimes committed by criminal and bandits."

Critics of the regime claim that well-organised forces are behind the unrest. After a secret meeting in Kenya during June, a merger was announced of the Popular Resistance Army led by Yoweri Museveni, one-time defence minister, and ex-president Yusur Lule's Uganda Freedom Fighters.

Also at the meeting was Andrew Kyiira, a former minister in the Lule government, who leads the Uganda Freedom Movement, and Brig Moses Ali, Amin's one-time henchman and finance minister.

Ali denies that he is a stalking-horse for Amin, who is now comfortably ensconsed in a hotel at Jidda, Saudi Arabia.

His followers in the so-called Uganda National Rescue Front are said to be well armed in the West Nile with anti-aircraft guns and possibly several Soviet-made Katyusha multiple rocket launchers.

Mr Otai said that Uganda's problems were "far less grave than those faced by British troops in northern Ireland with the terrorists of the IRA."

He alleged that guerrillas were disguising themselves as government troops to carry out attacks.

"Obviously it would be better for them to come wearing our uniforms and doing terrorist acts so that our soldiers are blamed for it.

The minister went on: "There is no problem in the army. If we had one, we could not remain in power. The army is inherited. We found it there. Dr Obote did not recruit it. But he is a man who understands the concept of division of power.

"Uganda has had an awful press. It is a press which though, we respect, we find to be inadequately informed. We allowed a BBC 'Panorama" team to come here. They did an awful job. "

Told that the Democratic Party was claiming that Uganda was worse now than under Amin, Mr Otai said: "That is a blatant lie. Our nation is now a million times better off than under Amin. We have a philosopher as a leader, who has a direction in which he is going. Everything he says is subject to discussion, debate and implementation only after cabinet decisions have been taken."

"That was not the case under Amin. Amin decreed. Our president operates by persuasion, the principles of the cabinet and responsible government."

Mr Otai said that in the wake of Amin's reign of terror, Uganda "certainly" had difficulties. "How many years did Germany take to recover after Hitler? How many years did Russia take to return to normality after the Second World War?"

I stressed that reports still persisted of military brutality, with people at Mutuga, 18 miles from Kampala, alleging a massacre by troops of 31 men, 12 of whom were executed by a firing squad.

Mr Otai replied: "If you think that what every villager says is true, you are at liberty to report it. We don't stop you from reporting it."

Actually 24 hours after our conversation, I was arrested and ordered to leave the country immediately.

KAMPALA WATER SUPPLY SITUATION CALLED PATHETIC

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 4 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] WATER, water everywhere and not a drop to drink!" The long epic poem by Coleridge the "Ancient Mariner" vividly describes the pathetic state in which Uganda's capital, Kampala, finds itself today. Although the capital is a stone's throw away from the second largest fresh-water lake in the world, Lake Victoria, its residents are suffering from the worst water crisis they have ever had.

The minister for lands, water and natural resources, Mr. Max Choudry, who hails from the arid famine-prone Karamoja, has stated that Kampala city will experience a serious shortage of water for at least another six months before the critical water crisis can be brought under control. With a grant from the European Economic Community (EEC), contractors are to carry out major repairs on the water reservoirs which feed the city from Lake Victoria situated at Gaba and Muyemba. The water works at Gaba would be shut down for long periods during the day to facilitate major works to be done to improve the water supply in the city.

The minister's public pronouncement was not news to residents of Kampala and its suburbs. The water in the taps of their houses has often not been flowing for the last seven years as a result of dictator Idi Amin's rule of murder and terror during which water engineers were replaced by "spanner boys". Amin largely used the country's foreign exchange to acquire military hardware instead of allocating some money for the purchase of water pumps and spares for regular overhaul of the water piping system.

The overnight promoted spanner boys seem to have lost the underground maps of all major water pipings or perhaps they could not decipher them. When the water boosters broke down due to lack of spares or non-availability of repair and maintenance engineers, underground waterpipes developed leakages some of which did not surface near where the pipes had burst. As a result very little water flowed during very low pressure so that the seven hills on which Kampala is built were not receiving water at all.

Makerere University and the national hospital at Mulago had to acquire water tankers to deliver water from Lake Victoria. They were also forced to dig makeshift pit-latrines in areas whose plans did not provide for them. Before the 1971 coup by Amin, local and urban municipal councils were responsible for the distribution and management of water and sewerage.

Since the ouster of Amin in 1979, a great deal of equipment and machinery has been imported by the National Water and Sewerage Corporation. But it did not work out as it should have. Promises have been made time and time again without any positive change. Recently, the authorities of the corporation promised that 19 new pumps would be installed at Gaba and Muyenga to step up water supplies to the residents of Kampala. Of these pumps, six high level and seven low-level ones would be installed at Gaba with the remaining six low-level ones being fixed in Muyenga. It was revealed that the new pumps were extremely powerful. Most of them are 390 horse power with some in the 400 horse range.

Six have already been installed.

The corporation will embark on the replacement of the main water pipes. Instead of the present 10 to 10½ inch pipes and between 16 to 18 inch pipes which dominate the system, the corporation intends to lay 24 inch diameter pipes. To expedite the early completion of the work, the corporation was considering putting the workers on a shift system to work round the clock. ■

NEWSPAPER STAFF ARRESTED--Kampala, 12 Sep--The Ugandan Government yesterday arrested executives of the CHAMPION newspaper, which on Wednesday reported that Kenya had imported 28 American F-16 jet fighters to help overthrow the Government of President Milton Obote. Ugandan radio said today that the government dissociated itself from the newspaper, which printed "lies and concoctions". The radio said there was no truth whatsoever in the report in the four-page weekly tabloid, which was owned by "people who do not support the Government". The radio did not give names or the number of those arrested. The Kenyan Government reacted angrily on Wednesday to the CHAMPION allegations, describing them as "malicious, provocative and unfounded". And Nairobi called on the Ugandan Government to institute investigations of those "disgruntled elements who are bent on destroying the peace and stability in the East African region". NEW 707--Uganda's national airline, has acquired a second Boeing 707 to operate on a new Bombay, Dubai, Cologne and Cairo route starting next month. Announcing the addition to the Boeing fleet in Kampala, Uganda Airline's general manager, G. W. Toko, said the new "707 Combi" will carry 63 passengers and 21 tons of cargo. The aircraft is expected in Uganda on October 5 and the inaugural flight to Dar es Salaam will take place on October 8. Col Toko, once director-general of the defunct East African Airways, said he was happy the "Flying Crane" was spreading its wings to new routes. From next month, Uganda Airlines will fly to Bombay through Dubai twice a week, and once a week to Cologne through Cairo. The airline is also expected to increase the frequency of its flights to London from three to four times a week and from one to two times to Rome and Brussels. EMIGRATION AN INCREASING PROBLEM

[Article by E. Pasquinelli]

[Text] Upper Voltan migration to the Ivory Coast is a very recent phenomenon; it began to grow rapidly starting in 1946. Three major factors are responsible for this development: the elimination of forced labor, the development of the coastal lowlands, and the rapid expansion of coffee, cacao, and banana plantations. Upper Voltan workers (especially the Mossis and Bobos) in many cases account for half the manpower on Ivorian plantations. Despite the absence of any control over the migratory movement and the inadequacy of the statistical data, as early as 1960 the number of Upper Voltan migrants living in the Ivorian rural zones was estimated at 200,000. Initially settling in the plantations of the south and east, they gradually spread throughout the forested parts of Ivory Coast, into the many wood-working factories, village and family plantations. The migrant population, long composed of seasonal or contractual workers, is tending to become a permanent fixture: in the countryside, there are entire neighborhoods of Mossi emigrants, the "Mossikro." Between 1960 and 1963, Upper Voltans who came to the Ivory Coast were systematically taken under the wing of an indigenous inhabitant, who then became his official guardian. The latter, in exchange for a little place to live, asked him to work one full day per week on his plantation. The cost of day-labor at that time was around Fr CFA 200 or 300 per day. This system gradually disappeared; the Upper Voltans broke with the guardianship of the natives and began to create and cultivate, for their own profit, fields of rice, Chinese yams, corn, millet, and even plantations of coffee and cacao. These lands were given over to them by their former guardians. In August 1975, leaders of the country's only political party, the PDCI-RDA [Democratic Party of the Ivory Coast-African Democratic Rally], asserted that Ivorian land belonged to whomever was putting it to work, without regard to race. The Mossis, who until then had hired out their labor, began to exploit land for themselves. Manpower to work for the big plantation owners became more and more difficult to find, because of the rural exodus and the obstruction of the Upper Voltan Government. By way of example, contract laborer who harvests 3 tons of coffee is only entitled to one-third of the harvest; after the clearing of undergrowth, harvesting, drying, and husking, his share is Fr CFA 150,000. If the coffee brings Fr CFA 150 per kilo, the proprietor's share in Fr CFA 300,000.

The Greatest Number of Migrants

Presently, the flood of Upper Voltan migrants is one of the biggest in Africa: the number departing Upper Volta per year is estimated at 70,000. There were 43,000 Upper Voltans in Ghana in 1975, and 726,000 in Ivory Coast, but they now number a record 1.6 million in the latter country. Foreign workers make a significant contribution to the Ivorian economy; the country gets the migrant labor at a minimal social cost. They are between 19 and 45 years old and do not require any educational outlays or family allowances. But the emigration is also beneficial to Upper Volta: it is equivalent to aid from the country of destination to the country of origin. This aid consists of the remittances of the earnings of migrant workers to their families and dependents who have remained home (estimated at Fr CFA 5 billion). Also, the Ivory Coast absorbs a sizable mass of Upper Voltan manpower, which helps reduce unemployment and underemployment in Upper Volta. This cuts both ways, however, since Upper Volta is deprived of a large portion of its most able-bodied citizens. According to Raymond Deniel, a sociologist with INDES (National Institute for Economic and Social Development) in Abidjan: "while offering its skilled people a relatively easy way to fulfill their most immediate, most urgent ambitions, the migration by the same token leads them to the resigned acceptance of their country's stagnation and diverts them from working at the economic development of their village; most of the migrants, moreover, have no awareness of this problem." One must also mention the importance of the words and actions of former migrants which contribute to the allure of Ivory Coast: the country has the image of being a land of "milk and honey;" money, radios, bicycles and beautiful clothes are the preeminent status symbols.

Clandestine Migration

Upper Voltan migrants stay anywhere from 2 to 6 years. But the most controversial aspect is the absence of any regulation of the migration. The 1960 convention signed by Ivory Coast and Upper Volta, to provide effective protection to the migrants, has never been implemented: because the great majority of Upper Voltans who emigrate to the Ivory Coast do not go through their country's recruiting and employment services; because Ivorian employers are reluctant to have foreign control over their workers; and because the Ivorian representatives have accepted the Voltans' conditions without argument. There are also divergent interests on the two sides: the Ivorians complain about the inability of the Voltans to control their own emigrants; while the Voltans cite failure to apply the convention and accuse the Ivory Coast of organizing "clandestine" emigration networks.

What should be done in the future is to develop an organized and joint emigration system in place of the present anarchic and uncontrolled situation; this would give Ivory Coast every year the labor it needs, and at the same time assure for the Voltan workers a stable situation and better conditions for their stay in in Ivorian community.

MOBUTU ASKS CHURCH TO STAY OUT OF POLITICS

'Render Unto Caesar...'

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2828, 15 Sep 81 p 22

[Text] Kinshasa, September 14--President Mobutu Sese Seko today warned the Catholic Church in Zaire not to interfere in politics.

Opening the third session of the ruling Popular Revolutionary Party, President Mobutu said he would no longer tolerate the Church in Zaire setting itself up as state censor.

To rub home his message, the President quoted the words of Christ in the gospels: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, unto God the things that are God's."

The warning followed recent strong criticism of the regime by Zairese bishops at a recent conference, taken up in church sermons which President Mobutu attacked as "political meetings in disguise."

His speech to the 110 delegates of the central committee of Zaire's only tolerated party also underlined the country's economic weakness and the need to bring the budget deficit below a ceiling of some 150 million dollars.

He called for measures to stop tax evasion and increase production by increasing support for small and medium firms.

Budget restrictions were more imperative with Zaire's need to refund by the end of the year 500 million dollars under agreements reached last June with industrialised countries on rescheduling the country's foreign debt, Mr Mobutu said. (A.F.P.)

Watch on Sermons

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2829, 18 Sep 81 p 24

[Text] Kinshasa, September 17--Members of the youth section of Zaire's sole political party are to be stationed in all places of religious worship in the country to ensure that sermons and prayers are not "reactionary."

The decision, reported by the ZAIRIAN NEWS AGENCY (AZAP), follows an attack by President Mobutu Sese Seko on the behaviour of the country's Roman Catholic clergy, whom he accused of meddling in affairs of the state. The country's mass media have at the same time launched an attack on the clergy. AZAP said in a commentary that "religion wants to run current affairs" and that "the country's parishes have been turned into political platforms." (A.F.P.)

NGUZA KARL-I-BOND REPORTEDLY CHALLENGES MOBUTU

London 8 DAYS in English No 34, 29 Aug 81 p 28

[Article by Shada Islam]

[Text] THE TWILIGHT world of Zairean exile politics has yet to produce a credible alternative to the chronically shaky, but surprisingly durable, regime of General Mobutu Sese Seko. Nguza Karl-I-Bond, until recently Mobutu's deputy but currently a leadership contender, is trying to fill this void.

Barred from political activity in Zaire itself, Nguza resigned as Zaire's premier last April and is currently in exile in Belgium. He refuses, however, to throw in his lot with the motley group of exiled Zairean 'opposition leaders' who have been struggling for over twenty years to loosen Mobutu's stranglehold on Zairean political and economic life. Beset by factionalism and tribal rivalries, their activities have irritated but never seriously worried the Kinshasa authorities.

Nguza sees himself as a credible rival and the only alternative to Mobutu. 'I do not want to become a member of a faction or set up a new one,' he said in an interview in his Brussels residence, adding that all groups opposing President Mobutu shared a 'common objective, that is the return of democracy.' But Nguza is better known, both at home and abroad, than any other opponent of the Kinshasa regime. He intends to use his reputation to draw attention to Mobutu's 'political intolerance, human rights violations and corruption.'

As the country's prime minister for almost a year (and previously foreign minister for almost four) Nguza has been a witness to some of Mobutu's 'most unbelievable acts of corruption'. He stresses, however, that he was 'never an accomplice' — and left the country when he did to avoid becoming a 'scapegoat' for Zaire's endemic economic ills. 'As prime minister I saw an unbelievable increase in corruption around and above me . . . I opted to leave because I could not live in peace when my people were being exploited,' he explained.

The past association with the president he so vehemently denounces today does not seem to weigh too heavily on Nguza. Nguza underlined that Mobutu's jealously of his rapidly increasing popularity at home and abroad — at a time when the president faced international criticism for his handling of the economy and the armed rebellion in the copper-rich province of Shaba — prompted him to accuse Nguza of high treason. Nguza was imprisoned, tortured and condemned to death in 1977. But then, two years later in 1979, he was released and reinstated as Zaire's foreign minister.

Given his awareness of the 'corruption' in the Mobutu regime, why did he accept the ministerial job — and later the premiership? According to Nguza: 'I was looking for a way to clear myself of the false accusations made against me by Mobutu, and felt that my rehabilitation by the very man who had accused me would clear me in the eyes of international public opinion and history.'

He was also clearly encouraged by the 'small signs of liberalisation' which Mobutu accepted under international pressure in 1979. For the first time in several years the newly elected parliament was allowed to actually question government action, and a number of exiles returned to the country following an amnesty by Mobutu. 'It was a new atmosphere,' said Nguza, 'and I believed until the last moment that I could bring about a change in policies from inside the government.'

This heady atmosphere of change came to an abrupt end on 4 February, 1980, when the president made it clear that 'as long as I live, bipartism and multipartism will never be allowed in Zaire.' The parliament's powers were drastically curtailed and the country, according to Nguza, returned to a situation of political immobility. 'These methods of government did not correspond to my principles and my conscience,' said Nguza.

In his recently published appeal to all Zaireans to overthrow — through non-violent means — the Mobutu regime, Nguza mentioned just some of the social problems affecting his country. The 27m people of Ziare live in one of the world's potentially wealthiest regions, rich in commodities such as cobalt, copper and coffee. Yet they face 'famine and malnutrition' because of agricultural mismanagement, he claims, suffer diseases such as cholera and malaria because of lack of government spending in the health and sanitation sector, and search in vain for employment (only 100,000 jobs have been created in the country in 21 years). 'The peple live in misery,' claims Nguza, and have reached a point of despair where they are ready to 'explode'.

Zaire's economy is bleak. Personal control by Mobutu over the Central Bank of Zaire, the Gecomin Copper and Cobalt Mining Company and the Sozacom Mineral-Exporting Firm has undermined the impact of any economic reforms requested by the IMF, notes Nguza. He also accuses the president of being responsible for the disappearance of some $100m from the state coffers in 1980 and of $26m in the first quarter of 1981. Zaire's international debt currently stands at $5bn.

Zaire is ripe for an uprising, warns Nguza grimly. This could take the form of a popular revolt, a military coup, or even an armed uprising in the province of Shaba. 'Let's not forget that the Katenga soldiers currently seeking shelter in Angola and Zambia have at least twice before created very serious problems for the Zairean army. It was the French and Moroccan military aid for Mobutu which stopped the Zairean army being completely routed.'

While Nguza stresses that he is 'a peace-loving man', he makes it clear that if there is another armed revolt he will not intervene to stop bloodshed as he has done in the past. 'I will be behind my people and assume my responsibilities to the bitter end,' he warns.

Through its continued support for Mobutu, the West is in fact, 'preparing the ground for communism in Zaire,' says the avidly pro-Western Nguza. He makes it clear, however, that he would like friendly relations with Ziare's leftist neighbours and that all political parties would be given the right to operate in the 'national reconciliation' government he intends to set up.

'The change is coming,' he predicts with confidence, 'and it is time the West realised that the best way of defending its interests in Zaire is not through supporting Mobutu.' Nguza recognises that he will be unable to return to Zaire without the 'understanding of the West,' but stresses over and over again that 'it is the people who will really be responsible for the change that is coming in Zaire.'

MOBUTU SUES DISSIDENTS--President Mobutu Sese Seko is suing a group of Zairean dissidents in the Belgian courts following a demonstration at his private house in Brussels. The action relates to an incident in which demonstrators protesting against the release from a Belgian prison of Jean Foster Manzikala, former Governor of Zaire's Shaba Province, surrounded General Mobutu's house. The complaint, which General Mobutu's lawyer lodged with the Public Prosecutor, states that the protestors trespassed on and damaged his property. The Zaire Committee, the dissident grouping which organised the demonstration, said that General Mobutu's action was unfounded. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No. 3346, 14 Sep 81 p 2152]

FINANCE MINISTER OUTLINES POSITION ON FOREIGN LOANS

CA101108 Salisbury Domestic Service in English 1600 GMT 9 Oct 81

[Text] The government does not intend to nationalize industries in the country unless they are strategic to the nation. The minister of finance, Senator Nkala, said this at a news conference in Salisbury today following his visit to the Commonwealth finance ministers' conference in the Bahamas. However, he said, this should not be taken to mean that the government is outrageously capitalistic, even though the government will continue to participate in joint ventures in industry. Comrade Nkala stated that the government is determined to see that the masses have a fair share of the fruits of their labor. He disclosed that the most stringent economic measures will be introduced to control the flow of cash in the economy. Comrade Nkala said that these measures are aimed at helping the government achieve a lower gross domestic product, GDP, in its efforts to curtail inflation.

The minister also disclosed that while overseas he approached the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank for a loan to help Zimbabwe meet foreign currency requirements. However, Comrade Nkala would not be drawn into revealing details of the loan, saying that negotiations are still underway.

The minister strongly accused the foreign press of distorting and exaggerating the current political and economic developments in Zimbabwe. He said that the overseas press only highlights the problems in the country without mentioning the government's impressive achievements in the short period it has been in power. Comrade Nkala expressed serious concern over the unholy alliance between the foreign press, the Republican Front and the puppet political (?factions) designed to discredit the government and discourage foreign investment in the country.

STORMY FUTURE FOR BATAWANA LEADER PREDICTED

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 16 Sep 81 p 2

[Text]

Saturday September 12 was a great day for the Batawana when their 40 year-old new regent chief, Kgosi Mathiba Moremi was installed by the Vice-President and Minister of Local Government and Lands, Mr Lenyeletse Seretse. Kgosi Mathiba succeeds his late brother, Kgosi Letsholathebe II who died after ruling his people for 17 years. Kgosi Mathiba has a lease of at least 10 years before handing over to 12 year old Tawana Letsholathebe 11 son of the late chief. But Kgosi Mathiba is a man of his own character who claims that members of the Tawana royal family had been trying to isolate him all along. He even doubts if the royal uncles will work with him. The Acting Editor of the Daily News KEBOELETSE NKARABANG gives you words from the horses mouth.

THE NEW regent chief of the Batawana, Kgosi Mathiba Moremi appeared after only a few hours of his installation on Saturday, to be headed for a stormy future in his leadership.

There was a clear indication that the new leader found himself in a new era of life - he has to learn to work with members of the Tawana royal family, whom he said had all along been trying to isolate him.

The regent chief, who by physical appearance seems much older than his 40 years told me in an interview that he was disliked by his uncles (borra-ngwanaa kgosi). When asked if he would work cooperatively with his uncle and deputy, Kgosi Montsheki Mogalakwe, he answered: "I doubt very much."

It would appear that the regent, if it were possible, would not hesitate to reshuffle the Tawana local administration, because according to his own words: "I have some distant uncles whom, I would be happy to work with," he said.

Kgosi Mathiba, who speaks Setswana with a heavy South African Sotho accent, is not a gregarious person. But he seems to go along with the proverb: Action speaks louder than words. He has clearly demonstrated this at least on two occasions. He did not attend the luncheon hosted in respect of his installation ceremony by his sister in-law, the late Kgosi Letsholathebe's widow and failed to see the Vice President off to Gaborone on Sunday.

The Vice President and invited guests had to wait, looking at the food for more than 20 minutes at the luncheon at which the new regent chief was expected to receive the guests.

The wait was later abandoned, in tune with a Setswana saying: "Tau ha e seo ea bo e seo le meno a yone" when a lion is absent, it is absent with its teeth.

The chief was later found somewhere in the village and summoned to a three-hour meeting, which was attended by the Vice President, as well as the Maun District Commissioner, Mr A.T. Chilume, Borra-ngwanaa kgosi, royal uncles and baimane-ba-kgosing (chief representatives).

But the meeting which according to reliable sources was to counsel the regent, appeared to have borne no fruits because the chief failed to see the Vice President off the following day.

Interviewed in the garden of the Riley's Hotel after the meeting, Kgosi Mathiba who appeared set for the interview told BOPA he did not attend the luncheon because he had been invited to a separate lunch by "my friends."

He denied that the lunch he went to had any connection with his installation. He explained further that he did not attend the official luncheon because "I would see myself associating with new people I never associated with before," he said. He was referring to members of the Tawana royal family.

Answering to another question, he said , however, that he would start introducing reforms in his relationship with the royal family and more especially with his deputies.

Making a postmortem of himself, Kgosi Mathiba said that he did not expect any difficulties in his leadership since he was brought up as a leader. He was very much appreciative of the Batawana's decision to elect him as their leader.

Many people have expressed pessimism on the future of Kgosi Mathiba as a regent of Batawana. Mathiba is the second regent after his mother Mohumagadi Elizabeth Pulane Moremi who ruled for 17 years before handing over to her son, Kgosi Letsholathebe II, who also ruled for another 17 years before he died in March this year.

Kgosi Mathiba has a lease of at least 10 years to rule Batawana depending on his ability before he hands over to the 12 year old Tawana Letsholathebe II, the son of the late chief. BOPA

BNF, BPP RELATIONSHIP DETERIORATES

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 8 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Tarcisius Modongo]

[Text] THE HARMONIOUS relationship between the Botswana National Front (BNF) and the Botswana Peoples Party seems to be deteriorating despite the recent negotiations between the two parties to unite and form a strong opposition party.

This came to light during the recent Botswana Peoples Party's political rallies over the weekend in Lobatse when the President of the BPP Mr Kenneth Mosei Nkhwa spoke openly that BNF has now become their enemy and emplored it to stop "scandalising my party's name in order to win the forthcoming elections."

Mr Nkhwa, also Member of Parliament for North East mentioned that the BPP was surprised as to why BNF President was "not firm in his political trend." Mr Nkhwa together with his party members told their audience that "we had thought the opposition parties were working towards the same goal - that of taking over from the ruling Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) but we are surprised when the BNF has now become a puppet practising nepotism, tribalism, sectionalism and regionalism," they further alleged.

Mr Nkhwa told BOPA reporter afterwards that "we have been giving chances to the BNF where we know there have candidates but from now onwards we are going to penetrate into their "stronghold" Kanye and oppose them."

He asserted that even if they were going to work against two rivals the BDP and the BNF there was likelihood for his party to have seats in Parliament after the 1984 elections.

The Botswana Peoples Party called on the BNF to stick to its policies and leave preaching "cheap politics." They mentioned that they had thought that politics in Botswana had gone to a high standard but were surprised to see the BNF lowering the standards.

The BPP members said that at the time Batswana were beginning to know what politics were the BNF was starting to confuse them.

They urged their audience to always call on political parties to tell them about their policies but not to attack other political parties at the freedom squares.

Several speakers, among them the Vice President of the Party Mr Gadibulelwe Podlephatshwa called on the revival of the culture. They mentioned that what Batswana produce in handicraft reflects a lot of their background and talent which should not be left to die a natural death.

They mentioned that there should be scientific and technical orientation in primary school so that Botswana should not be faced with the problem of shortage of skilled manpower.

The BPP claimed that if they took over the government they would improve the education system by introducing kindergarten, labour production and adult education.

The speakers mentioned that they were having some ideas towards the production of food in the country and claimed that when they take over they would subsidise the farmers to buy tractors and said that the use of donkeys in the Arable Land Development programme was a "primitive method".

They told the audience that they would have state owned farms and fields which would be aimed at producing more food for the country. And secondary industries would be established which would create employment for the people, they further promised.

The BPP stated that the introduction of the Tribal Grazing Land Policy is to widen the gap between the poor and the rich and in the long run there will be no land for the future generation because the reserved land would have already been used by the present generation.

The Botswana Housing Co-operation BHC and Self Help Housing Agency (SHHA) came under heavy criticism during the Botswana Peoples Party meetings.

They alleged that in Francistown some people who have acquired loans from the SHHA have had their houses repossessed by SHHA because they were unable to repay the loans.

Turning to the BHC they described it as "satellite of imperialism," and called on the local authorities to be given the power to run those houses. They mentioned that the local authorities would be able to control the continuous increase of rentals.

The BPP also accused the ruling party of corruption. They alleged that many private projects have been undertaken by some people who used public funds under the pretext of carrying out a national project.

The three meetings held by the BPP were attended by a handful of listeners. This led to some of the speakers saying that the people seem to be having no problems because their reluctancy was the sign of happiness. BOPA

PRESIDENTIAL ECONOMIC COMMISSION ANNOUNCED

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 24 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] THE OFFICE of the President announced on Tuesday that the President, Dr Q.K.J. Masire has appointed a Presidential Commission on Economic Opportunities.

The Chairman of the Commission, according to a press release is Mr P.S. Mmusi, M.P. and the members are Mr D.N. Magang, M.P., Kgosi K. Gaborone, Mr L. Mulder, Mr J.J. Tebape, Professor S. Lewis, Mr S.T. Ketlogetswe, Professor M.A. Oomen, Mr P. Taylor, Mr L.G. Nchindo, Mrs Grace Peterson, Mr P. Tlhaodi, as well as the Director of Industrial Affairs and Commissioner of Labour.

"The Commission will assess the effectiveness of existing policies in providing growth of employment opportunities for citizens and recommend the necessary changes in policy, legislation, regulations or administrative practices in order to ensure that Batswana have adequate opportunities for establishing or expanding their own businesses in both the rural and urban areas," explained the announcement.

The Commission is required to submit its report to the Government by May, 1982.

The Commission's terms of reference are as follows:-

To assess the effectiveness of existing policies in promoting the growth of employment opportunities for citizens, and in particular will review:

a) i) the progress made to date in all areas of citizens participation in economic development in Botswana with special reference to:

ii) opportunities for employment and self-employed, and the extent of training, advancement and promotion achieved by citizen employees;

iii) acquisition of business, entrepreneurial and technical skills by Batswana;

iv) ownership of economic assets (such as land, buildings and business enterprises) and access to Credit facilities by citizens;

b) existing laws, regulations and administrative practices of Government and assess the extent to which they promote or hinder the most desireable contributions by both citizens and non-citizens to overall economic development in Botswana;

c) the development incentives available to investors and assess the extent to which they promote investment by both citizens and non-citizens;

d) the desirability or otherwise of permitting public officers to participate in business.

In light of its findings and in light of the relevant experience of other countries, recommend such changes in policy, legislation, regulations, or administrative practices as may seem appropriate to:

a) Promote maximum benefits from economic development for all Batswana; and

b) Ensure that investors are contributing to the achievement of Botswana's Planning Objectives.

KGOSI MATHIBA INSTALLED NEW REGENT OF BATAWANA

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 15 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] KGOSI MATHIBA Moremi was last Saturday installed the new regent chief of the Batawana in Maun following the death of Kgosi Letsholathebe II last March.

The regent chief was installed at Maun kgotla by the Vice President and Minister of Local Government and Lands, Mr Lenyeletse Seretse who advised the regent before a crowd of about 5,000 to be very vigilent during his term of office.

Kgosi Mathiba was told that the ingredients of effective leadership were intelligence, toughness and wisdom - the qualities which were attributed to his predecessor, the late Kgosi Letsholathebe II.

The regent chief was also urged to during his leadership respect those who brought him to the rank of leadership through the process of democracy and that his leadership should therefore be devoid of oppression.

The Vice President also urged the Batawana, especially members of the royal class (borra-ngwana-a-kgosi) to work cooperatively and help guide the new leader.

The regent chief was cautioned to follow in the right footsteps of his predecessor which brought significant progress to the Batawana land. Mr Moremi, said the Vice President said the new leader should work for the meaningful continuation of the development carried out so far in Ngamiland.

The regent chief was also showered with warnings and advice from several other speakers who participated during the talks at the installation ceremony.

Earlier, the Vice President noted that the Government was nowadays very much aware of the consequences of some chiefs who had been brought to leadership for heritage's sake.

He said that the Government wanted quality leadership and would not hesitate to intervene if any leader is not seen to be meeting the aspiration of his people and the nation at large.

"It is one thing for the tribe to appreciate the necessity of cooperation and unity, but it is quite another for the leader not to know what it is expected of him as such," said Mr Seretse.

He continued: "A leader's role is essentially to lead and I have always identified the basic ingredients of effective leadership as intelligence, toughness and wisdom."

Turning to the Batawana, the Vice President told them that without the cooperation of the tribe, the achievement related to the late Kgosi Letsholathebe II's rule would not have been realised. He said disunity amongst the people destroys the very fabric of society and retards development of any kind. Unity, he said should be achieved both at the national and local levels.

He pointed out that it was necessary therefore that Batawana should strive at all times to give maximum co-operation to the new leader because they have given him the mandate to rule them.

The mandate, he said should be followed by a significant show of confidence and faith in the regent chief during his term of office.

Kgosi Mathiba was appointed the new regent to Batawana chieftaincy by the President Dr Quett Masire a week before his installation following his election at a kgotla meeting by his tribesmen. BOPA

SETBACKS FOR ALDEP OBJECTIVES SEEN POSSIBLE

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 18 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Jerry Masete]

[Text] THE ARABLE Land Development Programme (ALDEP) which recieved a lot of support at its inception a few years ago from Parliamentarians and farmers now seem to remain in balance in the Ngwaketse area with favourites and critics running neck to neck over its advantages and disadvantages.

At their annual general meeting held over the weekend in Kanye, some members of the Ngwaketse Farmers Association expressed their concern that the programme does not seem to auger well for small farmers.

One of the farmers, Mr Dingaan Mokaila said, ALDEP, who's objective was self-sufficiency in food production, would have serious set backs if donkeys, which he describes as extremely difficult to maintain, were given priority to support it to the exclusion of cattle and tractors.

He called on Government to subsidise farmers without any form of discrimination and also urged small farmers to form syndicates through which they could jointly buy tractors to speed up food production.

In support of Mr Mokaila's criticism of ALDEP, another prominent farmer Mr G.A.T. Gare suggested that a farmer who produces for example more than 10,00 bags of sorghum annually should be subsidised if he is to increase his production.

"It is disappointing to note that farmers who could whole heartedly support Government's efforts in food production are heavily taxed for producing more crops and cattle," Mr Gare said.

Mr Gare, who explained the seasonal loans from the National Development Bank (NDB), urged farmers to take advantage of these and to order things like disiel, fertilizers and seeds to facilitate work at the NDB.

Several other farmers supported ALDEP. One samll farmer appreciated the ALDEP donkey scheme, saying that donkeys earned him several heads of cattle.

"If donkeys were to be taken care of as other domestic animals they could surprisingly be beneficial and productive," he said.

He said Government should develop the donkey industry on similar lines as the cattle industry. There are many donkey lovers who would like Government to achieve its goal through them, he said.

The NDB activities in the Ngwaketse area were also discussed. After the Kanye based NDB Senior Project Officer, Mr Kgosidintsi had outlined the activities of the bank, farmers contended that certain contractors who won tenders for drilling boreholes did not care or ensure that water was found at agreed depth and yet they demand payment.

They charged that some agricultural demonstrators spent their time drinking "Khadi" instead of supervising the contractors and reporting any anomalies to the NDB.

In response the Southern Regional Agricultural Officer Mr Felix Mmopi said it was rare to find demonstrators drunk during working hours, adding that they were however faced with transport difficulties in executing their duties.

He also assured the farmers that he would do all he could to ensure that his officers worked not only closely but also friendly with farmers.

On the question of borehole drilling, Mr Mmopi said the Department of Water Affairs was the most appropriate to approach but remarked that it could not cope up with the volume of work as required by the farmers throughout the country.

He said, his department unlike contractors does not cease drilling water untill these commodity was found at unspecified depth.

MINERAL RESOURCES COOPERATION WITH ROMANIA REPORTED

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 23 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] THE possibility of co-operation in the investigation, development and exploitation of mineral resources in Botswana and sending Romania experts to work for the Government of Botswana was one of the issues discussed when the Minister of Mineral Resources and Water Affairs, Dr Gaositwe Chiepe was in Romania.

Dr Chiepe, accompanied by her Deputy Permanent Secretary, Mr C.M.T. Lekaukau and Dr N. Lock a geologist of Geological Survey Department arrived home this week from an official visit to Romania, according to a release from her ministry.

She had been invited by the Minister of Mines of the Socialist Republic of Romania from September 14 to 18.

While in Romania, Dr Chiepe had discussions with the Vice Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Trade and International Co-operation, the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Mines.

Their discussions were in connection with the promotion of co-operation between the two countries in geological and mining fields, the release says.

According to the release, Dr Chiepe's programme included a visit to several mines in Romania. She visited the Slanic Salt Mine, the Tirgu Jiu Mining Complex, the Valea Jiului Mining Complex and the Deva Ores Control.

These mines, the release says process salt, lignite coal, gold and coking coal. At Uricani mine, which is an underground coal mine, Dr Chiepe and her delegation were taken underground to a depth of 320 metres and walked 900 metres in the shaft.

In another development, the Permanent Secratary in the Ministry, Mr M.C. Tibone left the country on Sunday September 20 leading a delegation of senior government officials which included the Permanent Secretary Finance and Development Planning Mr B. Gaolathe and the Attorney-General, Mr Moleleki Mokama to discuss various matters.

This week they will be attending a BCL meeting with Amax and Anglo who are major shareholders. Then they will proceed to the United States to discuss the Central Power Station and the coal project.

They would finally return to London around the week of October 12 to attend a diamond marketing meeting at the Central Selling Organisation.

Mr Tibone is expected back around October 16.

INDIA AGREES TO PROVIDE MANPOWER

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 25 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] From Lebang Raditladi in India

INDIA will supply Botswana with manpower on a long and short term basis.

In an agreement signed between the two countries this week in New Delhi it was agreed that the Government of Botswana shall inform the Government of India of its requirements for experts, technicians and other personnel in various fields.

The agreement was signed by the Secretary of External Affairs, Mr Lebang Mpotokwane and the Indian Foreign Secretary, Mr R.D. Dathe.

Mr Dathe indicated terms to be offered by the Government of Botswana to the personnel recruited from India. These also covered the procedures for deputation of the personnel, weighing out the general terms to be offered by Botswana and the mode of selection as well as allowances and reimbursement of cost of travel for interviews.

The two countries also signed a Memorandum of understanding which would assist Botswana in the establishment of comprehensive structure for the development of small scale industries.

The Memorandum, signed by Mr Mpotokwane and Mr S.M. Ghosh, Secretary in the Ministry of Industry, requires that the Indian Government send to Botswana a team of experts to equip a model industrial estate.

This team, which will be drawn from the small-scale industries development organisation, would help the Botswana Government to provide training facilities in the managerial as well as technical fields.

But another requirement of the memorandum is that the team prepare a detailed report for establishing more industrial estates, commissioning of projects.

The experts would also prepare feasibility studies for setting up industries for the manufacture of footwear, Bio-Gas, hardware implements, bicycles and materials for the mining industry.

The two sides will decide upon the terms and modalities involved in regard to these proposals after due negotiations.

However India has agreed to consider Botswana's request for further credit support including government to government credit.

Meanwhile President Dr Q.K.J. Masire and his delegation flew to Varanasi and visited the diesel locomotive works on Wednesday after which they flew to Agra where they spent the night.

The President and his party spent the best part of the morning visiting the sights of Agra, the Taj Mahal and the Fort. The party later left for Madras, where the Governor of Tamil Nadu hosted a dinner on their honour.

Tomorrow the President and the Botswana delegation will visit the Integral coach factory and Guindy industrial estate. After which they will leave for Bangalore where they will visit the Hindustan Machine Tools LTD, the Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd and the Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd. BOPA.

SPOTLIGHT ON NATIONAL ECONOMY FEATURED

Privileged Group Benefits

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 10 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] Participants of a three-day seminar on "Botswana's Economy Since Independence" in Gaborone have been told of a big, but unsustained economic growth, of which at least one third accrues to foreigners.

Presenting a paper documenting the trends in income and asset distribution in Botswana and examining who got how much of what from economic growth, Mr M.A. Oommen argued that "even among the Botswana citizens, a selected privileged group stand to benefit more than the rest."

Mr Oommen maintained that the Basarwa, the poor peasants and most working class seem lie to outside the process of growth. The ranks of the unemployed, he said, are on the increase. He added that spatial inequalities and class and group inequalities are on the increase.

Continued Mr Oommen, "The agro-pastoral formations are yielding place under the dynamic forces of the law of the capitalist mode of production. Capitalism did not fall like a blot from the blue at independence.

The colonial administration, through its tax policy demanding cash from every household (hut tax) and the creation of the land settlements for the whites (Gantsi, Tuli and Tati etc) heralded the beginning of capitalist mode of production. The need for cash drove many to wage labour in South African mines whose number, from a trickle in the 1920's rose to well over 23 000 today."

After independence, he said, the capitalist relations of production have been fostered and development by national capitalist interests in collaboration with foreign interests. The livestock development and the TGLP programme, the manufacturing and mining developments seem to proclaim this story, he maintained.

Mr Oommen went on, "The wealthy and educated are the key decision-makers of the system the dynamics of which works in their favour."

Mr Oommen recalled that the two consultants who recommended commercial ranching for the country and made a study of the working of the economy conceded that "the present legal, administrative and economic system has a strong built-in bias in favour of those who are already better off while neglecting and impending others."

Those who are better off are able to establish themselves with boreholes, exploiting the communal tenure system to obtain free and virtually exclusive access to grazing, while those with smaller herds are confined to overgrazed areas where each man competes with his neighbour for a diminishing resource....."

AGRICULTURE

Mr Oommen had earlier noted a decreasing share of total agricultural and increasing share from manufacturing and services, which he said, is considered by some economists as an index of structural change. But, he maintained, the share of agriculture in GDP, which was 45.3 per cent in 1968/69 declined to 17.5 per cent in 1978/79, while that of mining rose from a negligible 0-4 per cent to 23.8 per cent during the same period.

The share in manufacturing did not show any appreciable change in that period, said Mr Oommen, adding that the service and infrastructure sectors registered significant growth.

While noting that the overall performance of agriculture has been poor, Mr Oommen, observed however, that Barolong farms often referred to as the "granery of Botswana" increased its crop output a thousand fold in less than 15 years.

He however noted "a significant trend of class differentiation and polirisation between agricultural labourers and capitalist farmers of the area.

He said in the overall, previous project assistance went largely to the better-off and more progressive cattle and sheep farmers to the general disadvantage of the poor in adjoining communal areas who did not benefit significantly from either Livestock Development Project or its SIDA-funded sister project - the Village Area Development Programme."

Those who are better off are able to establish themselves with boreholes, exploiting the communal tenure system to obtain free and virtually exclusive access to grazing, while those with smaller herds are confined to overgrazed areas where each man competes with his neighbour for a diminishing resource.

MANUFACTURING

"While mining expanded, said Mr Oommen, manufacturing did not make much progress, though the strength and resiliency of a growing economy should have been derived from this."

The profile of the formal manufacturing sector shows that the industrial base has been narrow and small in size - over 91 per cent being foreign owned and 95 per cent concentrated in few urban centres.

He said the performance of manufacturing has been largely a single unit show of the Botswana Meat Commission (BMC) accounting for 70 per cent of gross manufacturing output in 1973/74 and 58 per cent in 1978/79, even after five years.

A direct consequence of the poor performance of manufacturing is to make the country a perpetual appendage of South African market. This may be seen against the paradox of heavy rate of saving and excess liquidity of the economy, he said.

INCOME DISTRIBUTION

Turning to income distribution, Mr Oommen noted what he described as "the disturbing findings," that 45 per cent of the rural households in 1974/75 were below the poverty line and that the richest 10 per cent households had 42 per cent of the total income.

"If we look at the spatial distribution of poverty, it is highest among free hold farm labourers.

About 45 per cent of the rural households did not own the most important asset - cattle - and about five per cent of the top rural households, which was equivalent to 10 per cent of all cattle owning rural households, owned 50 per cent of all cattle," he disclosed. He added, "clearly there is a sign of marginilisation of the peasantry who are increasingly being driven to the category of workers or unemployed.

Mr Oommen further disclosed that "At least 36 per cent (and possibly up to 47 per cent) of the total urban populationof 90 000 live below the effective level of subsistence in the urban areas.

The poorest 50 per cent of the households have only 19.4 per cent of the total income.

He attributed part of this to the country's lack of self-sufficiency in food production arguing (in fact qouting 1. Schapera (1940) pp. 114-115) that "Botswana was self-sufficient in food output before independence and she even exported some crops."

Mr Oommen warned that capitalism be "consciously tamed to hasten the process of a society where man does not exploit man, however weak or illiterate he may be, adding, "that involves planning and hard decisions. Otherwise growth will be without equity."

Reliance on Diamonds

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 11 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] DELEGATES to the three-day economic seminar have been given something to work on: Botswana must diversify its economy if the country is to avoid trouble.

The warning follows the fact that nearly 40 per cent of Government revenue last year came from one source: diamonds. "When the diamond is in trouble, Botswana is in real trouble," the delegates were told.

The warning was summed up in a report 'Fiscal Policy in Botswana, 1966-1981' delivered to the seminar on Botswana's economy, which has been taking place at the University College of Botswana.

The report is by Mr S.R. Lewis, Jr., and Mr D.N. Mokgethi, who are Economic Consultant and Senior Planning Officer, respectively, in the Ministry of Finance and Development Planning.

In the section of their report which deals with future problems and porospects of the fiscal policy of the Government, the two observe that Mineral revenues account for virtually all of the recurrent budget surplus which is used to finance the investment of the parastatals as well as the domestic portion of Government's development budget.

"This high degree of vulnerability to one source of revenue has led many countries into serious problems. Botswana must take steps to reduce this problem in the future, which requires two related developments," they advise.

First, they advocate for the economy to be diversified into activities other than diamonds and beef, so that a less vulnerable productive base is established.

Second, they call for the Government to ensure that "the new diversified sectors of the economy contribute their share to Government revenues.

"Thus, while the government may wish to assist new ventures in becoming established through the use of public funds, there should be a clear expectation that once the new ventures are founded they must pay their share."

MONEY-MAKERS

Earlier, the report reviewed the developments in public revenue and expenditure, as well as aspects of the unusual features of Botswana's fiscal management.

The warning and call for economic diversification formed part of the lessons for the next decade.

In this respect, the report notes two important factors. First, the two largest money-making sources of Government - Customs Revenues and Mineral Revenue, in economic terms - have no discretionary element. Both sources are set by negotiated agreements which cannot be unilaterally changed.

"Thus," the authors note, "provides both a security and a risk." In both cases, it must be assumed that Government took account of the risk inherent in giving up its discretion when setting the rates of revenue which it agreed to accept.

"Second, both sources of revenue are heavily influenced by the same sector, mining."

The point being emphasised here is that money from customs comes from imports which in turn are generated in large volumes by the demands of the large mining projects. Thus, money from customs tends to be relatd to mining developments. And so, the manner in which Government handles its money, relates closely to the developments in the mining sector for both the Customs and the Mineral revenues of the Government.

The Report outlines Botswana's 'startling' revenue growth rate, which came in two phases. There was first, a re-negotiation of the Customs Union revenue sharing formula, effective with the fiscal year 1969/70.

> "... When the diamond is in trouble, Botswana is in real trouble

Following the re-negotiation, Botswana's revenue varied almost directly with Botswana's imports. So, when the rate of economic growth began to accellerate in the late 1960s and early 1970s with the Orapa diamond mine and, especially with the construction of the Shashe copper-nickel project, revenue from customs duties began to grow very rapidly."

The report goes on: "In the second phase of revenue growth, the revenue from the mining of minerals, principally diamonds, began to growth with the increase with the value added and exports in the mining sector."

In the six years from 1974/5 to 1980/81 mineral revenues increased in real terms by an amount equal to the entire non-mineral revenue of the Government in 1974/5, adds the report.

INTERESTING DEVELOPMENTS

The report on Fiscal policy in Botswana, is altogether, most interesting reading, especially as one observer puts it: "Both the authors are in Botswana, looking from the outside in."

The report is especially more interesting as it points out that at independence in 1966, Botswana's public sector was in the same sorry financial state as the country itself and depending on grants from the UK to balance the recurrent budget.

"The record, looking back after fifteen years, however, presents perhaps as stark a contrast as may be found anywhere in the world. Recent World Bank data place Botswana seventh from the top in measured per capita income among 39 sub-saharan African countries."

That is not all. It adds: "The growth rate of GDP (Gross Domestic Product) over the past twenty years is the highest among that group of countries, and is more than five times the weighted average rate of growth for the region as a whole.

> Recent World Bank data places Botswana seventh from the top in measured per capita income among 39 sub-Sahara African countries

"The growth rate of public consumption, which roughly measures recurrent Government expenditures, was fifth highest in the group of 39 during the 1960s, and second highest in the 1970s. In the past decade, it was more than three times the average for the region."

With statistics like that, it does give something to think about. BOPA.

TLGP Initiated Land Use Planning

MR AMBROSE Masalila, a Senior Official in the Ministry of Finance and Development Planning, has argued that it was only through granting exclusive landownership rights that Batswana ere encouraged to increase agricultural productivity and improve livestock management skills.

Mr Masalila, who disclosed that 119 ranches had been established in six districts under the Tribal Grazing Land Policy (TGLP), was speaking at a three day economic seminar held at the University Campus this week.

He said that a major point in the TGLP White Paper was that land boards were to decide how much land to allocate for commercial development, taking into account the need for communal and reserved ranches.

The Tribal Grazing Land Policy was launched in 1975 and the policy states that in order to achieve the aims of increasing productivity and reducing the income gap between the rich and the poor, the land would be divided into three zones.

The three zones are commercial, where groups and individuals are given exclusive rights under lease hold tenure, the communal where the traditional system of land tenure would not be changed but stock control would be implemented. Reserved ranches or land would be set aside to ensure that land would still be available in the future.

The policy on Tribal Land Grazing has been extremely useful in that it has initiated land use planning in Botswana and more attention was now being paid to wildlife, employment creation and ranch assessment than was the case prior to 1975.

Mr Masalila said that although people appreciate what the Government was trying to do, there was genuine concern about whether commercial ranches would benefit the majority of the people, who do not have sufficient resources to invest in commercial farming.

However, he noted that a Ranch Management Training Centre has been established at Ramatlabama to assist in training ranch personnel, and that Agricultural Extension Officers were working in TGLP ranches throughout the country.

Mr Masalila indicated that 54 per cent of the TGLP ranches were allocated to individual farmers while the remainder was taken by syndicates.

According to the official, about 20,000 people reside in areas designated as commercial zones under the TGLP scheme.

A major issue which croped up during the course of TGLP implementation, Mr Masalila said, was compensation of those people whose land has been allocated to commercial farmers.

The Policy on Tribal Grazing land has been extremely useful in that it has initiated land use planning in Botswana and more attention was now being paid to wildlife, employment creation and ranch assessment than was the case prior to 1975, Mr Masalila added.

He continued to say that the policy had gone a long way to provide a framework for rural development in Botswana, and while admitedly the policy's objectives are yet to be achieved, a start has been made on critical issues such as how best to manage livestock and how to increase employment in rural areas. BOPA

Botswana Tops Urbanisation Rate in Africa

"Botswana has had the highest urbanisation rates in Africa," the three-day seminar on "Botswana's Economy Since independence" heard this week.

Presenting his paper diagnosing dependent development in southern Africa, Mr Christopher Colclough added that in fact "since independence over three quarters of public investment has been directed to the towns."

New formal job opportunities have thus occurred mainly in the urban centres, and this has in turn accelerated rural urban migration, said Mr Colclough. He added that urban unemployment has emerged as a major problem particularly for Botswana, Swaziland and Zambia.

He said even though widely spread development is a stated aim of the governments of these countries, the proportion of public expenditure going to rural investment remains small. Urban facilities, once established, tend to have growing, rather than constant or declining needs for financial servicing and upgrading, he said.

Mr Colclough made an argument that governments in southern African independent states often find it difficult to avoid favourable response to the demands of urban dwellers, since the latter are usually amongst the most educated, articulate and poweful members of the community.

In this group of countries, Mr Colclough found it difficult to categorise Zimbabwe's strategy in terms of urban/rural development, but noted Prime Minister Mugabe's pronounced commitment to social justice through national reconciliation, and a transition to socialist relations of production.

Nevertheless, he said, the strength of common interest among these countries to reduce domestic poverty and therefore dependence on South Africa is substantial.

"... The national distribution of income has tended to become worse over time: the richer groups have been increasing their incomes faster than the poor (less so in Lesotho and probably Malawi than elsewhere)"

One of the unintended effects of development policy, in this group of countries, said Mr Colclough, " is that the national distribution of income has tended to become worse over time: the richer groups have been increasing their incomes faster than the poor (less so in Lesotho and probably Malawi than elsewhere) "

Mr Colclough further said that the national formal sector development has tended to benefit disproportionately a small number of nationals and often significantly so, the international interests supplying the capital on commercial terms.

In the absence of effective income policies, local elites have replaced the outgoing expatriate colonial and post-colonial groups with little resulting change in the overall distribution of net earnings.

These new groups, he said, now have strong vested interests in preserving the status quo, thereby making significant shifts in the focus of development very difficult.

Continued Mr Colclough: Whereas Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland are completely dependent (with over 80 per cent of imports purchased from South Africa) and Namibia, Zimbabwe and Malawi heavily so (between 33 and 60 per cent), South Africa could stop all its purchases from the region at very little cost to itself because it imports only one twentieth from the region, most of which things it still could get from the world market. BOPA.

BRIEFS

COAL MINING--A representative of the Charbonnage De France International Botswana, a French company licenced to drill a coal mine at Mmamabula in the Central District has said preparations for such work were now underway. Addressing a kgotla meeting in Mahalapye this week, Mr Potter Mike, who is a consultant Geologist, announced that a k37 kilometre track to be used by machines to and from the site has already been cleared. He appealed to tribesmen to render much assistance and cooperation when the actual work starts on the project within three weeks time. He however told them that at this stage no one would be adversely affected by the project. Mr Mike said the project followed the discovery of a rock which showed the possibility of coal deposits in the area. If enough coal was found, which could require the establishment of the mine, the project would automatically grow and thereby affect cattleposts and ploughing fields the owners of which would be compensated, he said. He however pointed out that the question of compensation could come out after a period of five years when the actual drilling of the mine had taken shape. He further said that if the project does not materialise, the site would remain the property of the Land Board. He said his company, which is a subsidiary of the French National Coal Board, has been granted three licences on three areas in order to prospect for coal, and Mabule was one of them. BALETE'S NEW REGIMENT--The new Balete regiment has been given a name, they are the Mafitlhakgosi. The name was announced by the Balete Kgosi Kelemogile Mokgosi last Wednesday at a ceremony held at the kgotla. This means that the young men are now recognised as mature men in the village. Asked about the significance of the name, some village elders told BOPA that since the course had to be postponed last year because of the death of Sir Seretse Khama, the name seemed fitting. Their course had to be postponed so that they could mourn for the late President, explained one old man. Kgosi Mokgosi however added that the name was picked from one of the names of the regiments of the past. "It is because it fitted the time, that we decided on it." he said. PREMIER'S BULGARIAN, YUGOSLAV VISIT

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 610, 19 Sep 81 p 8

[Article by Bertin Ossenza]

[Text] From 21 to 28 September 1981, Comrade Louis Sylvain-Goma, prime minister and head of the government, will make an official working visit of friendship and cooperation to the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in response to the invitation of those two governments.

Concerning the makeup of the government delegation, one can already have an idea of the diversity of dossiers that will be considered in the meetings and the conclusions that will culminate this working visit to the two friendly countries.

In fact, in addition to Comrade Louis Sylvain-Goma, prime minister and head of the government, the delegation will include comrades Moundele-Ngollo Benoit, minister of public works and construction; Mouambenga Marius, minister of agriculture and livestock raising; Yoka Emmanuel, minister-delegate to the Office of President in charge of cooperation; and Nzoungou Alphonse, secretary general of the government.

In recent decades, cooperation between the Congo and Bulgaria, on the one hand, and between the Congo and Yugoslavia, on the other, has tended to grow because of the many exchanges between the highest levels of our respective governments. One should recall the recent visit of Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso to these two friendly republics in May at the time of his official visit to the USSR. During his different stops, Sassou-Nguesso, chairman of the Central Committee of the Congolese Labor Party, president of the republic and chief of state, and president of the Council of Ministers, met with his Bulgarian and Yugoslav counterparts.

Many factors lead one to think that the official working visits that Comrade Louis Sylvain-Goma will make to these two friendly countries will help to further solidify the very good bilateral and multilateral cooperation relations that have always existed between our respective countries, in the interest of the progress of our different peoples.

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIZING PRICES OF SOME GOODS

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 610, 19 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Dominique Mbango]

[Text] On Tuesday afternoon, 15 September 1981, the conference room of the Brazzaville City Hall was the scene of a very important meeting.

Presided over, on behalf of the government, by Comrade Hilaire Mounthault, member of the Central Committee and minister of transport and civil aviation, who in turn was seconded by Comrade Gabriel Emouengue, member of the Central Committee, political commissioner and deputy mayor of the city of Brazzaville, and a group of officials from the Ministry of Commerce, the meeting was essentially attended by the chairmen of the district party committees, chairmen of the party cell committees and members of market committees scattered throughout the six districts in the capital. The local press was also well represented in the conference room.

In our preceding issue and in an article entitled "Explicable Measures," we urged merchants not to give way to uncontrolled price increases.

We are returning to the subject once again, encouraged by the remarks made Tuesday evening at the Brazzaville City Hall by Comrade Mounthault Hilaire, who represented the government.

Judging by the very responsible remarks made by representatives of the market committees in the debate that followed, the speech, which was simultaneously translated into the local Munukutuba language by Comrade Gabriel Emouengue, convinced the audience.

Fitting into the framework of the principle of a close relationship between the rank-and-file and the summit, this meeting of a government representative with market committee officials, in the presence of the chairmen of the district party committees, shows once again that the political leadership is constantly concerned with going to the rank-and-file to engage in discussions for the purpose of clarification.

A meeting with the market committees was in fact essential because, using the excuse of the announcement of an imminent increase in the price of bread, cement and Lina-Congo rates, some merchants have unilaterally and anarchically supported price increases. The People's Republic of the Congo, a country organized and led by an avant-garde party, cannot be one vast market in which the merchants make the law.

The government has been forced to accept increases in certain prices, naturally. We have explained at length that such increases are a result of the financial and economic unrest that currently affects the world and whose effects never spare countries such as the Congo with an outward-turned economy.

While it is true that our price policy is upset by a whole series of parameters that we do not yet control, the Congo is nevertheless among the countries which, at great cost, subsidize merchants in order to contain prices. Consequently, when the Congolese buy bread for 20 francs, the government contributes another 15 because the real price of bread weighing 130 grams is 35 francs.

Do people realize that when one buys a ton of cement for 38,000 francs (retail price in Brazzaville), that the government has added 15,170 francs, since the price of a ton of cement sold in Brazzaville is in fact 53,170 francs?

Moreover, when a traveler takes a Lina-Congo Brazzaville-Pointe-Noire flight and pays 19,700 francs, he must realize that that price is far lower than the real, realistic price that should be applied in order for Lina-Congo to become profitable. In order to enable the traveler to pay 19,700 francs, the Congolese Government had to give up the TCA and the TIT [expansions unknown], which were not negligible for our Treasury.

An analysis shows that the increases announced were relatively minimum.

They could have been catastrophic, even fatal to the purchasing power of the Congolese if it were not for that social policy of subsidizing prices. If one looks more closely, one quickly realizes that through this price subsidization policy, the Congolese Government is literally killing itself because the bill is increasingly heavy and national resources do not yet allow us to hope for a definite accumulation.

Political leaders are perfectly aware of this situation, but the interest of the masses wins out.

On Wednesday, 9 September, the government had to announce the increase in the prices of bread, cement and Lina-Congo rates in a press bulletin. The announcement came only after a day of howling debates during which members of the government made a complete review of the relationship between the cost of living and the purchasing power of the Congolese people, mainly workers and peasants.

It was reported to us that Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso was particularly sensitive during the debate to the burden represented by any price increase, however minimal.

Furthermore, on that day, the subject of bread, cement and the Lina-Congo rates was not alone on the Council's agenda. There were nearly 30 others. The government stood up to the pressure and froze the other prices. How long will they remain frozen? That is difficult to say because world inflation has all governments by the throat and it is difficult, even impossible, to indefinitely freeze the prices of food products and imported articles.

What is certain is that the government will see that the voracious merchants do not unilaterally increase prices. They do not have the power to decide, "just like that," arbitrarily, unilaterally, on the backs of the people whom they are already crushing.

An appeal to vigilance is being issued to the masses to see themselves that they are not being bled white.

Our masses will be everywhere, at the markets and in the stores and shops, to say "No!" to the spiraling prices.

ETUMBA will open its columns wide for reports and personal accounts concerning uncontrolled increases. Party cells and district and market committees will also report to us for publication on the way in which they are organizing in order to thwart the gluttonous appetites that might appear.

SOVIET AGREEMENT TO BUILD HIGHWAY REPORTED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 3 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The USSR is going to aid Madagascar in the construction of a 225-kilometer section of highway along the eastern coast of the island. NOVOSTI has just made this announcement to the world, following the recent meeting of the Soviet-Malagasy joint commission.

This is a concrete project that will please all friends of the USSR in Madagascar. The following APN article concerns the USSR's cooperation with African nations, including Madagascar.

Moscow (ANP)--Guided by the principles of proletarian internationalism, the USSR has always contributed and continues to contribute its multifaceted support to the Ethiopian revolution, Mengistu Haile Mariam recently said. He has greatly appreciated the aid of the USSR and the work of Soviet specialists in the different sectors of Ethiopia's national economy. The visit of the Soviet government economic delegation to Addis-Ababa and the joint documents signed during the talks have become an important element in the implementation of the provisions of the treaty of friendship and cooperation. The new Soviet-Ethiopian protocol on technical and economic cooperation provides for the future granting of multifaceted aid to Ethiopia in order to strengthen its economic independence.

Ethiopia's example is not unique. Today, Soviet-African economic cooperation is marked by industrial projects as important as the gigantic metallurgical plant being built in the Nigerian city of Ajaokuta, an aluminum factory in Algeria, the bauxite complex in Guinea, energy projects in Libya, and so on. During the first year of the 11th Soviet 5-year period, a new boost was given to the development of economic contacts between the USSR and Madagascar, Angola, Mozambique, the Congo and other countries on the continent.

Prospects of developing Soviet-Mozambican relations are defined by the long-term economic and commercial cooperation program for 1981-1990. According to the program, prospecting will be done for coal, copper, bauxite and gold and there are plans to build coal mines and other enterprises to extract useful minerals. The Soviet specialists participate in the execution of the overall program aimed at applying the terms to the Limpopo Valley, the construction of an agricultural machinery and tractor assembly plant and the creation of agricultural equipment repair centers.

Agriculture is an important orientation of cooperation between the USSR and Angola. The USSR is helping to set up state wheat and cotton farms. With Soviet aid, we have rehabilitated and put back into operation two cotton ginning plants. There are also plans to build a 350-kilometer-long pipeline that will link Luanda to oil deposits in the north. The Soviet specialists are giving important aid for the restoration of railroad and automobile bridges destroyed following the aggression of the Republic of South Africa.

Highway

Economic ties between the USSR and Madagascar are also growing closer. In Antananarivo, a radio transmitter has gone into operation and in Antsirabe, a training center has been set up for agricultural equipment mechanics. The first class has just graduated. Soviet technicians will participate in the construction of a 225-kilometer section of highway on the eastern coast of the country. Following the work of the second session of the joint commission recently held in Antananarivo, prospects for bilateral cooperation are good.

"The Soviet Union's determination to develop broad international economic cooperation remains unchanged," stated Tikhonov, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR at the 26th Congress of the CPSU. The USSR is for a policy of principle reflecting, in international economic relations, the main line of Soviet diplomacy, aimed at safeguarding peace and at furthering detente and understanding between peoples.

MAHATMA GANDHI INSTITUTE PLANS TO OPEN NEW CULTURAL CENTERS

Port Louis THE NATION in French 3 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The official opening of a Mahatma Gandhi Cultural Center in Rose Belle on Thursday, before a full audience mainly made up of young people and women from the Rose Belle area, was a cultural event whose long-term impact cannot be underestimated.

We have learned that the Mahatma Gandhi Institute has plans to open 12 more centers throughout the island in order to be closer to the masses. When questioned by THE NATION about the need for such centers, Prem Benimadhu, an institute official, told us: "For me, it is obvious that the Institute, which has a cultural role to play as stated by law, cannot become an ivory tower for a certain elite group. In making the decision to decentralize, our director, Dr K. Hazareesingh, is finally orienting the institution toward the people, as it must be. Moreover, the enthusiastic reception that the Rose Belle people gave us proves the need for such centers."

Actually, some 500 persons were present at the opening of the center, which has a library beginning with 300 books. A series of lectures on culture, languages and linguistic problems in Mauritius has been planned for the center. Lecturers from the Institute and linguistic experts from India will come to the center each week. In addition, the School of Music, headed by Shreekanda, will give courses to over 100 students already enrolled.

In his speech given in Hindi, Dr K. Hazareesingh traced the historical background of the cultural problem in Mauritius and said that the official opening of the Rose Belle center fits into the framework of the dissemination of culture in Mauritius. He added that the role of the Institute in the cultural evolution depends to a great extent on its direct presence by means of regional centers. Dr Hazareesingh emphasized that there is room in Mauritius for the harmonious development of all cultures that must be integrated into our national heritage.

In his speech in Hindi, the minister of education and cultural affairs congratulated the Mahatma Gandhi Institute for having decided to set up cultural centers throughout the country. For Sir Kher, who recalled the long struggle of our ancestors to preserve our culture in the colonial period, the new cultural centers will now play an important role in the spreading of the Eastern culture among all Mauritians. Sir Kher said that the island of Mauritius "is in a privileged position compared with many countries, insofar as Mauritius is a meeting place of several civilizations and cultures."

In his speech of thanks, Gopee, president of the Mahatma Gandhi Institute Cultural Center, noted that Rose Belle has long awaited the establishment of such a center and he said he was convinced that the inhabitants of Rose Belle and the neighboring villages will benefit from the facilities of the centers.

NEW NATIONAL YOUTH ORGANIZATION FORMED

Port Louis THE NATION in French 7 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] Free Youth, which up to now has been an organization whose activities were limited to young people, has become a national people's organization endowed with modern structures. It is totally independent of political parties and the government administration. This announcement was made yesterday morning by Raffick Nabee, who was accompanied by several members of the group.

Thus, young people from various backgrounds decided to set up a National Mauritian Youth Movement, which will be known as Free Youth, the name of a movement which has done valuable work in the past in a regional framework and which now disappears to make way for a national Free Youth.

In order that its voice may be heard at all levels, Nabee said, Free Youth mainly needs a solid base, a force that will truly encompass all Mauritian young people. Consequently, Free Youth seeks a vast audience among the Mauritians in general and among young people in particular. The support of any Mauritian, any young person, particularly students, unemployed persons or workers, feeling capable of assuming responsibilities and sympathizing with our action, whether or not affiliated with other organizations, is sought. Free Youth also appeals to all persons of good will in the country to cooperate in the task it has undertaken.

In order to better assume its role, Free Youth has also set up a center on the Saint Paul Road in Phoenix, near Sangram Hall, which will soon be buzzing with activities and which will be called upon to serve as a place for meetings, dialogs, reflection and the confrontation of ideas.

Nabee added that important work remains to be done with respect to political training on a systematic basis. At the present time, two out of three young people have a rather vague notion of politics. Many would be incapable of defining certain terms commonly used in the political language of every day.

Free Youth therefore proposes to undertake political training action first of all and beginning in September, will begin a course of introduction to politics, whose purpose will be to outline the role of the country's institutions, sum up the different political systems and define the political terms most commonly used on the local scene.

We should also like to emphasize, Nabee continued, that Free Youth aspires to a cordiality that would link all youth organizations doing positive work on several levels.

For his part, Ram Nookadee indicated that various committees have been set up, among them education, culture, unemployment and jobs, population and sexuality, leisure activities, and men and women's rights.

All those interested are asked to contact Nookadee, secretary general, Route St. Paul, Phoenix, or to telephone 6-3502. The initiation fee is 10 rupees and monthly dues are 2 rupees for students and unemployed persons. Those working pay 5 rupees.

ECONOMIC DISASTER IN RODRIGUES DESCRIBED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 24 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] The economic situation of the island of Rodrigues is deteriorating. With the steady decline in agricultural production and increasing dependency on Mauritius for food, Rodrigues has reached the point where it imports products worth 75 million rupees from Mauritius a year, while its exports to Mauritius do not exceed 5 million rupees.

This situation is totally abnormal. A few years ago, Rodrigues was fairly self-sufficient with regard to food. The people consumed much corn which they produced themselves, a fair amount of fish (with a surplus even exported to Mauritius) and a number of head of livestock sold to Mauritius, while it imported certain essential commodities. There was a slight imbalance in its balance of trade with Mauritius. In the 1970's, that tendency was dramatically heightened.

Corn production fell because of repeated cyclones and droughts. Planters deserted their fields to become relief workers (over 43 percent of all workers are now employed by the government). The rather low price obtained for some products has discouraged production.

Consequences

The volume of imports from Mauritius has steadily grown. From 19 million rupees in 1975, it reached 31 million in 1976, 48 million in 1977, 60 million in 1979 and exceeded 75 million rupees last year. The value of Rodrigues' exports to Mauritius remains the same: 3 million to 4 million rupees a year. Consequently, Rodrigues is forced to import over 20 times more than it exports. This deficit has been made up by the government through its regular budget and its development budget.

The number of head of Rodrigues cattle shipped to Mauritius has dropped alarmingly: from 834 in 1975 to only 80 in 1979 and 400 in 1980. Salted fish exports are also declining: 60,000 kilograms in 1975 to scarcely 25,000 kilos in 1980.

At least 20 percent of all imports are tobacco and alcohol (14.7 million rupees for this item out of a total of 75 million rupees in 1980), and manufactured items (miscellaneous goods) account for 15 million rupees, compared with 2 million 5 years ago.

Is this a consumer society? Is Rodrigues sliding down the same slope as Mauritius (which now has deficits totaling in the billions)? It would appear that this is true. The island's political parties and associations attribute this situation to the bad weather, naturally, but also to a Mauritian policy of "relief work" that is causing the same effects in Rodrigues as in Mauritius, with every individual turning to the central government for a permanent job instead of cultivating the land.

GOVERNMENT MOVING AHEAD WITH ETHANOL PRODUCTION PROJECT

Port Louis THE NATION in French 19 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] The government has no intention whatsoever of modifying the objective of the 1981-1982 Plan concerning the creation of 22,500 jobs. However, the period initially established to attain the objective might be extended. Nevertheless, the determination to create the maximum number of jobs retains top priority. It was on this note of optimism that Sir Rabindrah Ghurburrun, minister of planning, spoke of the creation of jobs yesterday in presenting the latest "Economic Review 1977-1980" to the press. Sir Rabindrah took advantage of the opportunity, in responding to THE NATION's questions, to affirm that the government definitely plans to move ahead with its plan to set up an Ethanol Corporation and that the Indo-Mauritian joint commission will very likely meet in October.

Concerning the objectives of the plan, Sir Rabindrah admitted that "most of these conditions have not been met." The difficulty in creating jobs, in particular, has been a major factor and mainly has to do with domestic problems such as the drop in productivity, the lack of investments on a national level, the budget deficit and the delay in carrying out major development projects.

On the international level, international inflation, the declining expansion of world trade, the increasingly protectionist trend, the rise in import prices and international monetary instability have greatly influenced economic performance, which means that "most of these conditions have not been met," the planning minister said.

Reviewing the job situation from 1977 to 1980, Sir Rabindrah said that it went from 172,814 in September 1975 to 196,641 in 1980 in the large enterprises. He estimated that employment in small enterprises amounted to 94,000 in September of last year.

The total number of jobs on the same date [sic] was about 291,000, compared with the revised objective of 303,600.

Turning to the ethanol production project, the minister maintained that the government has decided to move ahead with the establishment of an Ethanol Corporation, but such a project will depend on financing. Aside from the African Development Bank (ADB), which has expressed its intention of supporting the project, discussions are also underway with the European Investment Bank (EIB), which has demonstrated great interest in investing.

With regard to the Indo-Mauritian joint commission, Sir Rabindrah pointed out that the meeting will be held in October. However, this will depend on the schedule of Indian Minister of Foreign Affairs Narshman Rao, who will come to Mauritius.

In addition, the minister of planning said he was "satisfied" with economic performance over the past 3 years. He emphasized that there is no disagreement within the government concerning the rural reconstruction program. Even the World Bank has been conciliatory on many aspects of the program, considering the many difficulties within the framework of its execution. Sir Rabindrah announced that in September, he will head a delegation for discussions with the World Bank.

Sir Rabindrah also made certain clarifications concerning allegations that a number of officials in his ministry are reportedly unsatisfied with appointment and promotion procedures.

CHEMICAL FERTILIZERS COMPANY BUILDS LIQUID AMMONIA STORAGE TANK

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 4 Aug 81 p 5

[Text] Forges Tardieu is now building a liquid ammonia storage tank with a capacity of 5,000 tons for Mauritius Chemical Fertilizers, Ltd. (MCFI). The tank now in service, with a capacity of 10,000 tons, was built in 1973, at the time of the establishment of the plant. Forges Tardieu built the plant in 20 months, but lacking the technical knowledge, it had to use subcontracting for the tank. Two facts are the reason for the MCFI's decision to have a new tank built: 1 -- The current tank requires maintenance and verification. 2 -- The importation of larger quantities of ammonia makes it possible to save on freight charges.

At the present time, the MCFI is forced to charter ships with a capacity of 13,000 tons to carry 8,000 tons of liquid ammonia. One load will arrive at the end of the month and will last until early next year. The MCFI therefore hopes that the new tank will be completed before the end of the year in order to transfer the few thousand tons remaining at that time to it.

Thanks to the technical knowledge acquired in 1973, a welding team from Forges Tardieu, operating under Denis de Speville, is setting up the tank. These welders were chosen by experts from Lloyds acting as supervisors for the MCFI. Given the extremely serious nature of the work, every weld is examined with X-rays. The tank itself rests on a base built by the Mauritius Building Company. Placed on the base are several layers of insulation (glass, sand, and so on), which will help maintain a low temperature.

It should be recalled that liquid ammonia is stored at under 33°, whence the need to completely insulate the tank in order to reduce temperature losses. The tank itself will be equipped with a compressor that will operate automatically as soon as the pressure within reaches a certain threshold. It will then once again transform the gas produced by the increase in temperature into liquid ammonia. It should also be noted that the freighters are equipped with the same time of equipment.

Forges Tardieu is working using plans from the French firm Tissot. As for the access tower, it will be built by Taylor Smith. Thanks to the experience gained with the old tank, the insulation system will be different and less vulnerable to cyclones. The transfer of the ammonia to the new tank will also make it possible to repair the insulation layer of the old tank, which was damaged during successive cyclones.

BRIEFS

LABOR PARTY MANIFESTO--The new election manifesto of the Labor Party will be presented in October to a major party congress for approval, according to an announcement by party president James Burty David and carried in this morning's LE MAURICIEN. In addition, the party is drafting two other documents, the first to be ready on Monday and in which Labor leaders reply to their detractors on the major issues dominating the political debate in Mauritius. The second document will contain an analysis of the government's achievements during its current mandate. Concerning the Labor Party manifesto, we have learned that a proposed program will be submitted on Monday to a drafting committee, which will in turn propose it for ratification by the executive committee before final approval by the full party congress in October. At the same time, the Labor Party will soon circulate a document containing a detailed report of all achievements of this government. David states that the idea is to make the public in general aware to what extent the Labor Party has respected its commitments made in the last election manifesto. Finally, the third document being prepared will be circulated at an explanation congress to be held on Monday. The document will contain a series of responses and clarifications on major current issues such as foreign policy, Diego Garcia, the government's economic policy and fraud and corruption. MMM SUSPENDS J-C BIBI--Jean-Claude Bibi, MMM deputy, has been suspended by his party's Central Committee. He was accused of leaving the country at the beginning of June, at a time when the budget was being submitted to the Legislative Assembly, and of not following an order from party leaders asking him to postpone his departure. As a result, Bibi will not be able to participate in party activities for 3 months. The suspension of the deputy is somewhat surprising. It will in fact be recalled that after he was referred to the Reagan administration and to Madagascar, a spokesman for MMM leaders hinted that the deputy was guilty of a certain lack of discipline and that sanctions would be taken, but nothing of the kind occurred. It would perhaps be fitting to emphasize that for failing to participate in a vote because he was directly involved, Vijay Jundoosingh was expelled. For defending this fundamental right of a member of Parliament, V. Venkaasamy was also kicked out. Certain facts must be remembered. [Text] [Port Louis THE NATION in French 31 Aug 81 p 1] 11,464

NEW POWER PLANT GENERATORS--The first of the two Pielstick generators recently installed at the St Louis plant within the framework of the third CEB [Central Electricity Board] development phase is now being tested. Actually, it has been operating on a semi-industrial basis since 23 July. The second generator will be operational in September. Purchased from Alsthom Atlantique (St Nazaire) for the sum of 53 million francs, the two generators were installed in a new building at Plaine-Lauzun. The new construction cost 6 million rupees. SEAL'S RO-RO OPERATION ENDS--The "Norefjord," the last SEAL [Scandinavian East Africa Line] ro-ro freighter, arrives in Port Louis today with a large volume of goods for Reunion and Mauritius. With the arrival of the "Norefjord," SEAL's ro-ro operations to Port Louis come to an end. These avant-garde operations began in May 1981. The experimental period lasted 4 months and in the light of the results obtained, SEAL decided to halt ro-ro operations for the Indian Ocean and East Africa. However, SEAL has decided to replace these ro-ro freighters with multipurpose ships that will continue to serve Port Louis with the same 21-day rotation. These ships will go directly to Pointe des Galets, Reunion. [Excerpt] [Port Louis THE NATION in French 25 Aug 81 pp 1, 4] 11,464

SEAL REPLACEMENT--Is this the end of the Port Louis transshipment operations? The general impression that the arrival at the end of the month of the Scandinavian East Africa Line ro-ro freighter will put an end to the transshipment episode at our port is totally unjustified. If one goes by the hopes being harbored in Mauritius itself, the success of a future resumption of the project is always possible. Two foreign companies: the OOCL [expansion unknown], represented by Rogers and Co., Ltd., and the AEL [expansion unknown], whose agent in Mauritius is the firm ABC [expansion unknown], are studying the suitability of taking over for the Norwegian company, however, without claiming to compare with the latter in terms of the volume of goods to be transshipped. DETAILS PROVIDED ON INCREASED TRADE WITH USSR

[Text] Trade between Mozambique and the USSR has been increasing steadily in recent years. The total value of trade in goods for 1980 came to 19.6 million rubles, compared to 5.9 million in 1977. A considerable portion of that amount represents goods that the Soviet Union furnishes to our country in the form of machinery, equipment, and transportation equipment, chiefly tractors, trucks, automobiles, means of air communication, medicines, chemical products, and ordinary consumer items. Mozambique responds with exports of nonferrous metal concentrates, sisal, and tea.

In the field of economic and technical cooperation, the USSR helps Mozambique carry on geological prospecting work, takes part in the construction of large-scale building projects in the port of Maputo and in the ship repair enterprise, provides technical assistance in the training of agricultural cadres, and participates in fishing operations through the MOCAPESCA enterprise, which is a company jointly operated by Mozambique and the Soviet Union.

Economic-commercial and technical-scientific ties between the USSR and the People's Republic of Mozambique are based on the Friendship and Cooperation Treaty signed between the two countries under the terms of the agreements reached in 1976 in the fields of trade, technical and scientific cooperation, fishing, and air transportation. That is also the framework for the agreement providing for preferential treatment based on the principle of world trade prices and payment in freely convertible currency.

All of the above was recently explained by B. Borissov, chairman of the Presidium of the USSR Chamber of Commerce, during an interview concerning Soviet participation in the Maputo International Fair (FACIM

B. Borissov said during the interview that "Soviet participation in the FACIM-81 international fair will enable Mozambican officials and businessmen to become better acquainted with the export possibilities of Soviet foreign trade enterprises." The Soviet leader emphasized that his country's Chamber of Commerce now has some degree of experience in expanding its working contacts with the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique].

Borissov stressed the fact that his country has already participated in FACIM twice--in 1978 and 1980--and he announced that there is a possibility that the USSR will become a permanent exhibitor at that fair.

The Soviet foreign trade enterprises will be represented at FACIM through business organizations such as AVTOEKSPORT, TRAKTOREKSPORT, TEKHMASHEKSPORT, MASHPRIBORINTORG, and SOVEKSPORTFILM, as well as at stands sponsored by the USSR Ministry of Light Industry, the INTURIST company, and the USSR Chamber of Commerce.

At this fair, those organizations expect to exhibit about 1,000 samples furnished by more than 60 Soviet enterprises, among them MTZ-50 Super, MTZ-80, and K-701 tractors, the Ural-4320 truck, the KVZ-30 motorcycle, and several models of industrial sewing machines that can be used in small workshops.

Also to be exhibited are radios; television sets; cameras and filmmaking equipment; Poliot, Seava, and Thaika timepieces; and fishing and hunting equipment. A special section will be reserved for exhibiting ready-to-wear fabrics, textile goods, and leather goods. These will be exhibited by the USSR Ministry of Light Industry.

JOINT FRELIMO-PORTUGUESE SOCIALIST PARTY COMMUNIQUE

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 16 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The FRELIMO Party and the Portuguese Socialist Party [PSP] have condemned the invasion of the People's Republic of Angola by the racist South African Army and the backing of that act by the current U.S. administration, according to a joint communique signed by the two political parties.

The PSP delegation that signed the document visited our country from 9 to 14 September in response to an invitation from the leadership of the FRELIMO Party.

Jorge Campinas, member of the Permanent Commission, and Manuel Alfredo Tito de Morais of the Political Commission were granted an audience with Marshal Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the FRELIMO Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique. On that occasion, they delivered to the Mozambican leader a personal message from Mario Soares, secretary general of the Portuguese Socialist Party.

In the talks held between the two political organizations, the FRELIMO Party delegation was headed by Julio Zamith Carrilho, member of the Central Committee and minister of public works and housing. The conversations included mention of the ties of friendship that have linked the two parties since the armed struggle for national liberation and the struggle against fascism.

The document was released yesterday. It says that the delegations exchanged points of view and information concerning the internal situation in their respective countries. Other topics discussed were the activities engaged in by the two parties, the international political situation, and the development of bilateral relations between states and parties.

The PSP again condemned South Africa's aggressive policy toward the People's Republic of Mozambique as expressed in acts of direct armed aggression, a heavy concentration of military personnel on the frontiers, and infiltration by groups of bandits who engage in acts of terrorism against the inhabitants.

For its part, the FRELIMO Party delegation expressed its solidarity with the struggle being carried on by the Portuguese people and all the democratic forces of Portugal, specifically the Socialist Party, to insure the irreversibility of the victory won against fascism on 25 April 1974.

ROLE OF SAMARIA IN DEVELOPMENT COMPANY, SECURITY NOTED

Niamey SAHEL HEBDO in French No 285, 14 Sep 81 p 7

[Article by Abdoulaye Boureima: "The Same Ideal of Progress"]

[Text] At a time when our country is beginning the second phase of the establishment of the development society, it is entirely normal for the Nigerien youth in the Samaria to call a temporary halt for reflection, among other things, on the activities it has pursued, examining its potential and equipping itself further with determination to engage resolutely in the battle for development. After all, if the national bureau in the Samaria has held its first meeting to make contact and obtain information in Maradi, it was to shape its commitment in the image of this city in which dynamism and initiative are characteristic of the more than exemplary economic reality.

Moreover, the demands of development make the contribution of such dynamic factors necessary.

The best qualified speaker did not conceal this fact: "The demands of development dictate in fact that we achieve a society in which participation will not be limited to passive acquiescence, but a society in which it is reflected in meetings and discussions, in joint undertakings and decisions. This active participation must be voluntary, or otherwise it will be only a caricature, and enthusiasm, which is essential to development, will always be lacking."

The truth is that President Seyni Kountche, as a man of dialogue, has always believed that only agreement on all levels can help the members of a community focus together on the complex problems of collective development.

Above all in a society such as ours, in the midst of change, a society which already, just following the events of 15 April 1974, bore within the marks of its own change, the major outlines of which were based on the liberation of our economy from natural factors, the establishment of a development society, and the search for economic independence.

In opting for these goals the achievement of which augurs happy prospects for our country, government authorities know that the wager, if it is to be won, requires of all participation with cohesiveness, perseverance in the effort and unflagging determination.

The task is not an easy one because our country is now more than ever embarked upon an irreversible historic movement toward the overall transformation of our society, which arouses jealousies and envy on all sides. Because very simply, we have decided not to "cry with the pack," and as a result to model our society in the image of its people, their philosophy and their creative genius.

The development society based on the Samaria, on the task of encouraging development and the vanguard production cooperatives is designed moreover to give priority to those factors which alone can lead man in Niger to conceive by and for himself the outlines of a kind of development which can satisfy his needs and aspirations.

Now, in order to eliminate dependence, to eliminate the subsistence economy and to pursue a policy oriented basically toward self-sufficiency in food, health, energy, water resources, etc, it is necessary to produce.

In fact, if we realize that in the food sector, grain production in the developed sector accounts for only 40,000 tons, one can assess the full scope of the governmental activities which must be designed to free our economy from the vagaries of the weather, giving priority in particular to a policy based on hydroagricultural development.

This policy is the more necessary since Niger is a landlocked country, and in addition, being on the edge of the Sudanese-Saharan belt, has suffered the consequences of a damaging drought which in its time has destroyed its economy and its environment.

"Experience is the best teacher," as the saying goes.

That is why the CMS [Supreme Military Council] and the government have made production the keystone of our development, in which the young people are without a doubt the spearhead. Our country, in which the young people currently account for 60 percent of the population, plans to lay the foundations within the development society for the future of this youth by using them, channeling their energy and their dynamism toward the same ideal of progress within peace, unity and concord.

Now, when we realize that certain turncoats in our society are quite resistant to the nature, the direction and the destiny of the development society, we cannot but demand greater vigilance from all, while closing our ranks to maintain and strengthen the security essential to the well-being of the people who, as the harvest approaches, are entitled fully to enjoy the fruits of their hard labor in peace and tranquillity.

The Samaria, which should be in the vanguard of this security, must also guarantee, on the strictest possible basis, the protection of our courageous peasants, who are so often in this food products marketing season the victims of the speculators to be found on every side.

PREHARVEST RAINFALL, CROP SITUATION DESCRIBED

Niamey SAHEL HEBDO in French No 285, 14 Sep 81 pp 8-9

[Article by Abdourahmane Alilou: "Update on the Situation"]

[Text] The agricultural season in our country up to the month of August 1981 was characterized mainly by rainfall which was not abundant, a delay in planting and attacks by various predators, which for the most part were mastered as soon as they developed. The situation is not worrisome, the assistant director of agriculture told us, although he added that the crops are in need of abundant rainfall.

Generally speaking, he went on to say, the precipitation situation in Niger from the beginning of the season to date, compared with the normal situation, reveals a heavy deficit for the entire country, with the exception of some zones around Gaya, Loga and Bankilare. Also, numerous pockets of drought are to be found scattered here and there in all departments, and in Zinder, Diffa and Tahoua, in particular.

The drought pocket in Zinder is located in the Mirriah district (the area including Moa and Zarmuskie, Est Damagaram, Takaya and the area formed by the Efadalen-Gouna-Diney triangle. This pocket extends to Baban Tapki).

In Diffa, Mr Naino Souley, assistant director of agriculture, told us, inadequate rainfall has led to some withering of crops over a large part of the department, in the district of N'Guigmi (Blabrine and Kabelawa regions) in particular. The drought pocket in Tahoua is located in the Illela region. However, he told us, proper rainfall distribution has allowed various crops to complete their cycle in desirable fashion in a number of areas.

The rains, as we have mentioned, have not been abundant this year. "Precipitation in 1981 has been below that in 1980 from the point of view of quantity, and substantially equal (to that in 1980) where the distribution of the rainfall over the season is concerned," Mr Naino Souley said. By way of indication, the city of Niamey had had 411.8 mm of rainfall by 31 August 1980 and 342.9 mm this year. In Matameye, 403 mm was recorded last year and 380 mm this year.

On the subject of the situation of the crops (which are in the main dependent on rainfall), the assistant director of agriculture said that generally speaking, the situation is quite satisfactory. "But," he went on to say, "there are many zones in which the crops show a certain growth lag, due to numerous replantings or drought pockets." "We can only hope for an extension of the rainy season until 20 or 30 September, or even the first week of October," he went on to say.

Planting, it should be recalled, began at the end of April and in early May in the department of Dosso and in the second half of May over the greater part of the departments of Niamey, Dosso, Tahoua, Zinder and a part of Maradi. In June, plant growth was in general lagging and irregular, except in the department of Dosso, where it was satisfactory overall.

In the month of July, according to a report by the agriculture department office, the situation was satisfactory in general for the department of Dosso as well as the southern part of the department of Niamey, mediocre and mixed in the rest of the country, with numerous lagging zones, frequent in the north, and also occasionally in the center and even the southern part of the crop zone. In some small zones, millet which failed to germinate even had to be replaced with sorghum or [niebe]. The report went on to say that the rainfall at the end of the month, fortunately, contributed to the improvement of the crops, which also suffered from drought in the middle of the month.

During the first half of August, the crop situation, which was satisfactory in the majority of areas, was very middling and sometimes bad in the zones which suffered from the drought (early August) and the local development of parasites, mainly in the northern part of the department of Niamey, the northeastern part of Dosso, the northern parts of Maradi and Zinder, and certain areas in the department of Diffa.

In connection with the plant health situation, the 1981 season has been characterized above all by flower-dwelling insects (Coleoptera) over almost all of the country's territory. These insects attack millet when it is in flower. It is difficult to combat these insects, Mr Naino Souley told us, because they are not visible during the day but come out at night. "We advise the peasants to light fires at night to attract the insects and then to treat them with the HCH powder we give them," he said, "but they are often reluctant to do this."

This year there have been very serious grasshopper plagues in the northern part of the departments of Maradi and Zinder. In this connection, the assistant director of agriculture said that treatment is the more difficult because of the existence of fallow land infested with grasshoppers which invade the treated fields. In the Tanout region, the problem has gone beyond the capacity of any land-based methods. As a result, two airplanes have been there for some time for treating the infested zones. Such attacks occur, but to a lesser degree, in the northern part of Goure, the Bambey sector (Tahoua), the southeastern and northern parts of Bouza, the eastern part of Konni, the Sanam region (Filingue district), and the Chetimari and Komadougou cantons (Diffa district).

Agricultural agents guide the peasants and teach them, Mr Naino Souley told us, and provide them with pesticides with which to combat the grasshoppers. There has also been a problem with seed-eating birds in the department of Diffa and in the Goure district. The OCLALAV [Joint Anti-Locust and Anti-Avarian Organization] wages the campaign against these birds. The method used is to destroy the nests, the location of which, however, is difficult. As to the caterpillars which appear in the drought pockets, the assistant director of agriculture told us that they are found in the departments of Filingue and Doutchi. Since these caterpillars attack the millet grain in the corning stage near maturity, the peasants are advised to harvest it.

The plant health situation this year is, however, a calm one in relation to other years, Mr Naino Souley told us. For example, in 1978, 323,000 hectares had to be sprayed by aircraft. The following year (1979), the total was 66,600 hectares, and the total for last year was 248,700 hectares. Up until 15 August of this year, 40,000 hectares had been so treated, including 15,600 in the Filingue district. For the time being, it is not yet known what areas have been treated in the northern part of Zinder and Maradi.

SENELEC TO BE NATIONALIZED EARLY NEXT YEAR

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 7 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Cherif Elvalide Seye]

[Text] By the beginning of next year, the electricity sector, following on the heels of water, will be totally controlled by the Senegalese Government. SENELEC [National Energy Production Company], 50 percent of whose shares were still held by the French firm EEOA [expansion unknown], will be nationalized with the purchase of those shares by the government.

This is the final step in a process that began in 1972 with the creation of SENELEC and the Senegalese Electric Company (EDS). In the initial phase, the government set up the EDS, which owned all the facilities, and SENELEC, in charge of the production, transport and distribution of electricity. The EDS was totally Senegalese. On the other hand, SENELEC was only 50 percent owned by the government. Louis Alexandrenne, new chairman of the board of SENELEC, explains that the complexity of the energy sector worked in favor of maintaining links with the mother company.

A loan of 6 billion francs was contracted and the contract to buy back the shares from the EEOA provided for the reinvestment (2 billion) of the indemnification in Senegal. The loan was paid back and the reinvestment completed. The Coumba Castel residence, LOCAFRIC [expansion unknown], shares in the SEIB [Baol Industrial and Electric Company] and the Hotel Teranga are the fruits of the reinvestment.

Nationalization of SENELEC will put an end to the existence of two distinct companies. They will be merged.

However, the nationalization will not take place under the best auspices, coming at a time when the company must face growing difficulties. Last year already, the company had a large deficit for the first time. This year, results will apparently be poor. There are various explanations for these difficulties. First of all, there are the back debts. Neither the government nor enterprises and private parties always pay their bills on time. At the present time, arrears amount to over 2.5 billion francs.

The production of electricity, generated solely from fuel, is also experiencing difficulties. In 1972, heavy fuel cost 4,800 francs a ton and Senegal was importing 114,000 tons. In 1980, the same ton cost 33,000 francs and consumption was 195,000 tons. Moreover, there is always a delay between the time of the increase and the time when it is passed on to subscribers by SENELEC.

Fuel went up in July. It showed up in billing in August and payment will not come until September.

SENELEC has also had to meet additional wage burdens with the increases decided upon by the government. At the same time, the company's social climate has deteriorated, Alexandrenne said, resulting in losses of working time and reduced productivity.

Evoking this social climate, characterized by sporadic strikes in recent years, Alexandrenne said that there has been tension. While stating that he was approaching the matter without prejudice, the chairman of the board of SENELEC emphasized that SENELEC is very advanced socially. By way of example, he cited the program of 50 developed lots, the Health Insurance Institute, the pilgrimage, resort colonies, and so on. In conclusion, he promises to examine all problems submitted to him. He pledges to resolve problems within the framework of existing laws.

Are all the difficulties mentioned the sign that the nationalization has gloomy prospects? Not at all. An investment program spread out over the period from 1981 to 1988 and amounting to 28 billion CFA francs has been drafted. It includes maintenance, expansion of the electrification of districts and neighborhoods, new power plants in regions and within the framework of decentralization, means of production through the creation of new development pools. Reduced dependency vis-a-vis thermal power is also sought. A first 20-kilowatt solar plant is already operating in Diakhao and a second with 100 kilowatts is to be set up in the river region. A third 25-kilowatt photovoltaic plant unlike the first two thermodynamic units will be set up in Dahra. This program, joined with a resumption of economic activity in the country, would mark the end of SENELEC's difficult times.

ARMY DESERTIONS ALLEGED BY FORMER SOLDIER

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese No 569, 6 Sep 81 pp 37-40

[Interview with Bilc Anderson, member of the Committee to Resist the South African War, by Iain Christie in London; date not specified]

[Text] Drafted into the South African Army by law, Bilc Anderson took part in the 1975-1976 invasion of Angola and in operations against SWAPO's guerrilla fighters in Namibia. The brutality of the racist army's operations and the internal repression carried on by the Pretoria government's police machine led him to leave his country, and the same thing is happening with many of his compatriots.

Today Bilc Anderson is in London, where he belongs to the Committee to Resist the South African War. It was in that European capital that he granted an interview to Iain Christie. In it he discussed various aspects of the resistance to the regime of apartheid that is occurring within the racist army.

Question: Bilc, a few years ago you donned the uniform of the South African Armed Forces. It did not last long. Can you tell us why?

Answer: I was forced by law to join the South African Army in July 1975, and after 5 months of training I was sent to Angola, against my will, during the South African invasion of 1975-1976. I remained there for 3 months and then spent 4 months in northern Namibia, participating in operations against SWAPO's guerrilla fighters.

The experiences I had during the operations by the South African Army--the brutality of its operations--led me to the conclusion that I could not remain much longer in South Africa, where I would have to continue fighting. So I left the country. A great many people left the country at the same time, many of them because of the invasion of Angola and the police repression in South Africa's urban areas in June 1976. That is how resistance groups began to appear in several countries in 1976.

Question: You are now a member of the COSANR--the Committee to Resist the South African War. Can you explain to us how and where that committee was established and the kind of work it is doing?

Answer: The committee was established in 1978 through a group of war resisters and other South Africans to carry out a limited number of tasks. First of all, to help resisters who were fleeing South Africa and needed support in finding asylum and settling in another country. But the most important thing was to win international support for those resisters who were still in South Africa and facing growing repression and persecution by the armed forces.

We have been trying to win as much support as possible for those comrades of ours in the resistance who have remained in South Africa.

Question: Are there many South Africans in the group of resisters and deserters who come to Great Britain?

Answer: It is difficult to estimate the total. There are approximately 100 cases needing asylum every year. In addition, however, there are a few thousand more who leave the country but who may settle in other countries on scholarships or by using British passports, for example. The result is that there are currently thousands of resisters here in Great Britain.

Question: What kind of reception do they get? Are you able to help those contingents of resisters when they come here?

Answer: Yes, provided that they have their conscription card and can prove what they are, or what they were, we can usually help them obtain authorization to remain in this or some other country.

Question: You mentioned war resisters inside South Africa. Can you tell us something about that?

Answer: Yes, I think that is a very important way of carrying on resistance inside the country. And it is interesting that South Africa's Directorate of Military Information Services predicted last year that more than 5,000 people would abandon their posts in 1980. This has been a growing phenomenon in recent years. That kind of resistance occurs at several levels. In the first place, the churches, the various student organizations, and other organizations have been reiterating their moral support for those struggling against a system that is viewed internationally as a crime against humanity, and some individuals have been adopting very courageous attitudes by publicly expressing their opposition to military service. And they have remained there--in the country. I think there is a growing feeling in the progressive group that it should remain in the country and not flee. They know that by being there, they have a role to fulfill.

In particular, there is a young man named Chardes Yatos who is currently being compelled to spend a year in prison--in a military jail in Pretoria--and at his recent trial, he gave a very clear testimony by saying that he would refuse to fight for an unjust system. Because of that, he refused to serve in an army that is illegally occupying Namibia and continually engaging in acts of aggression against free and independent states. At the moment, he is being very badly treated in the jail by the military authorities, and we are also trying to mobilize an international campaign on his behalf. He was not the first person to adopt such an attitude, and he will not be the last.

In a broader sense, however, I feel that there is a growing movement among a number of South African whites who are not very clear as to the political realities or the morality of the situation, but who see it purely in terms of their personal interests, seeing that most of South Africa's young whites now face the prospect of spending a major portion of their lives in a military force.

The way things stand now, they will have to spend 2 years initially in military service, and that is immediately followed by another 2.5 years. And after that, they will be called up at least 3 times a year for operational duties. The military services are not what they were 6 or 7 years ago. Most of the people going into the army do not adjust to it easily and they scatter. By going in now, they will have to fight, and a growing number of people are dying. People are beginning to ask: "Well, for whom are we fighting?" They look around them and see growing massive protests by the people of South Africa. And they reach the conclusion that the side they are on is doomed to failure and that it is not in their interest to continue to risk their own lives for that system.

There have been a number of interesting incidents among the military--the most recent of which was the desertion by 96 soldiers at a camp near Pretoria. Their complaints were very simple: they did not like the way they were being treated, they did not like the food, and they were demanding facilities in the camp. But behind all that (looking at things from their point of view), we can say that military discipline is very strict, and the decision to leave a camp is not made lightly. But it reflects growing alienation and disaffection in a broad sector of South African young people.

Question: You were in Angola with the South African Armed Forces during the invasion in 1975-1976 and fought against the people of Angola. But you found out that you were coming back to Angola this year. Can you tell us something about the circumstances of that visit and how you were received?

Answer: I represented our committee as a delegate to the International Committee of Inquiry looking into the crimes of the regime of apartheid. The conference was held in Luanda at the beginning of this year. While I was there, I had the opportunity to visit the war zone in southern Angola, where the South African Armed Forces are engaging in daily acts of aggression against the Angolan people. It was an emotional experience for me. When I was in the South African Army, I had been fed for days and days on doctrines concerning the cruelty, barbarity, and savagery of the "enemy" that we were fighting. And returning to the country and meeting my so-called enemy was for me a very important experience. Because I met humanity: I met a dynamic society such as I had never seen before and one that certainly does not exist in South Africa.

During the time I spent with the Angolan Armed Forces, I found a spirit of mutual help and a spirit of certainty concerning victory that they had developed during the war to liberate their country and a determination to defend those gains. And so, while I was impressed by the seriousness of the war in southern Angola and the brutal actions by the South African Armed Forces, which bomb and kill the local inhabitants indiscriminately, I nevertheless returned with a spirit of optimism. Having spent some time with the Angolan Armed Forces, I am certain that the South African Army will not establish a firm position in the country, at any point or at any stage.

Question: But you are a former member of the South African Armed Forces, and you are white. How were you personally received by the Angolans, and particularly by the Angolan Armed Forces?

Answer: I was warmly received. I think that I have begun to understand more clearly that the forces struggling against South Africa within South Africa itself are struggling against the system of racism and apartheid and not against the whites as such. I know there are many people in the South African Army who are not racists. They are actually victims of the system. They are not there in their own interests. Many of them ought to go to Angola and have the experience I had. And many of them would be surprised to see the reception they would get.

DETAILS ON NATIONAL ARMY GIVEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Oct 81 pp 9-18

[Selections from special feature entitled "Army Review" compiled by Keith Atkinson and Gareth Willard]

[Excerpts] We must see that our army is united and strong enough to defend the nation said the main who has been given this vital task, the new army commander, Lieutenant-General Rex Nhongo.

General Nhongo was officially appointed commander in August, having played a leading role in the military world since 1978, the year he joined ZANLA.

In 1976 he was appointed to the ZPA high command, and in 1977 was elected to the central committee of ZANU (PF) as deputy secretary of defence.

At the time of Lancaster House he remained in Mozambique to look after his men and with the ceasefire, General Nhongo led the first group of men to arrive in Salisbury.

Until his recent appointment he served on the ceasefire commission and was head of the ZANLA delegation at Joint High Command.

General Nhongo said it was important for the people to rest assured that the army was capable of defending them.

"It must also be a productive force and not an army that sits in its barracks and eats," he added.

Plans are being formulated to ensure that the army is able to feed itself by growing crops and vegetables.

On the training side the general felt it was essential for the country to eventually have all its own instructors, and plans to implement this were going ahead.

Asked about the day to day problems of running an army, General Nhongo said:

"We are dealing with human beings, not a system that can be switched on and off, so if there are five people there are five problems. But I am satisfied things are going well."

The Personal Side

"THIS is the branch that never sees the end of the tunnel," said Major-General John Thompson, chief of staff for army administration.

"The Administration branch looks after the personnel and personal side of the army and with an army of this size, I have a very large staff."

General Thompson mentioned just a few of his areas of responsibility, which included the welfare and comfort of all soldiers.

He has been in the army since 1966 and was the commander of 1 Brigade from 1977 to 1979.

He was appointed chief of staff at Joint High Command and with the establishment of a single command structure in August this year, was appointed to his present rank and position.

"What has happened in this country is unique. The integration of the three armies was a remarkable exercise, and the problems encountered were overcome," said General Thompson.

"This week we start on the demobilisation exercise; the speed of which will depend on how fast the Ministry of Labour and Social Services can absorb the men into the community," added the General.

All Out To Be One of the Best

MAJOR-GENERAL Josiah Tungamirai is one of the army's new chiefs of staff, and he is hoping "to develop one of the most perfect armies in the world".

General Tungamirai said his task is to ensure that the army is efficient and capable of fighting on any terrain and in any climatic conditions. With the exception of the North Pole, he added with a smile.

One of his major responsibilities is the development of the research department. The department will study numerous problems with the aim of making the army not only self-sufficient in food, but also training and weapons.

"A priority is the technical field which may necessitate recruiting personnel from outside the country. We plan to make our own weapons from the largest to the smallest."

On the training side the general hoped that one day the ZNA would be able to offer training facilities to personnel from other countries.

The army must also be a productive army and help the people as was done at Tongogara camp where the men assisted in cotton picking.

"There will be some drastic changes as before the army was involved in fighting 80 percent of the time. Now that time must be spent on being productive," said General Tungamirai.

The general added that tremendous progress had been made in the national army, particularly as they were faced with a unique situation where, "all the armies had won".

The Man Who Keeps the Wheels Turning

AN army depends on its logistics to keep it in operation, and it is Major-General Jason Masoko's responsibility to command this branch of the Zimbabwe National Army.

As Chief of staff (Q), General Masoko procures any equipment or supplies that the army may need. He works hand in hand with the Services Corps and the Corps of Engineers.

General Masoko said that with the integration exercise drawing to a close, the army would move on to phase two by providing permanent accommodation for the battalions. They would also develop some existing sites by building married quarters and other amenities.

"The integration exercise was a complete success and has given us the will to achieve even more in the future," said General Masoko.

The Men Behind the New Image

MOST Zimbabweans know of the work of the national army's public relations directorate through army displays and exhibits at shows throughout the country.

But there is a lot more to the unit than that. The directorate, headed by Lieutenant-Colonel Clemence Gaza, has five sections: administration, publications, photographic, research and image promotions, and shows and displays.

For the past few months Colonel Gaza and his men have been setting up the army's advertising agency, hiring staff for the sections and generally gearing up to create a new image for the new army.

And the work is not just directed at the public: the men and women of the army are themselves a target of the small group of experts.

"The soldier must know he is a servant of the people and the people must realise the army is their army," said Colonel Gaza.

"My job is not just to publicise the army, it is to look into ways we can help the people. For example, in the Inyanga area troops are involved in school rebuilding. They do this because they are part of the community, not something separate from society."

But the people also had to realise the role of the soldier in protecting their country.

The army would soon have two magazines, with articles in all three major languages, to bring soldiers closer together and allow them to see how their comrades lived and worked.

No Blueprint for Success

NO blueprint in history existed for the kind of situation that the British Military Advisory and Training Team (BMATT) faced when it undertook to help integrate three divided factions into a united Zimbabwean Army.

"It was a unique situation in history. Mostly, there are only two sides in a civil war and one is an outright winner.

"But here there was no blueprint of experience to draw lessons from," said the man commanding BMATT, Major-General Patrick Palmer, formerly of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, who has seen service in 10 different countries, including campaigns in Suez, Cyprus, Borneo, Aden and Northern Ireland.

The team is one of a number of training teams around the world — in Ghana, Nigeria, Kenya and the Sudan, to name a few — but the Zimbabwe contingent is by far the largest.

Mounted at a cost of $5 million to the British Government to date — more than $1 million of this being spent in foreign currency by the team in Zimbabwe — BMATT has taken on the mammoth training task of shaping a largely guerilla-orientated force into a conventional army.

General Palmer could report only "very minor adjustments to the developing situation over the last 18 months" since the team was installed.

"One of the reasons we were asked to help was that the framework of the national army is derived from the British system, like every other army in the Commonwealth."

The majority of instructors were serving a six or nine-month unaccompanied tour of duty, detached from their regular units around the world, and they had been able to adapt and adjust to the different situation very easily.

"They get on with people and can be of help," he said.

General Palmer summed up the team's role and value: "Where we have been of value, perhaps, is in being of reassurance to the factions, in being a catalyst in the process of integration, and a neutral element."

This was fully endorsed by the Prime Minister in an interview with International Television News on June 17. Mr Mugabe said:

"I don't think we would have done as well as we have managed to do (in the integration of the national army) if we had not had British assistance. I think it had a double effect — one, the presence of the British in the country generally gave the population — especially the white sector — some degree of confidence, and at least an assurance that they would not be attacked by us."

Mr Mugabe went on to say that, even more importantly, the British military presence "gave us an element in the army that could be relied upon by all parties".

BMATT, working in close co-operation with ZANLA, ZIPRA, the former army and air force, has helped train more than 14 000 men and women of the Zimbabwe National Army in the organisational and specialist skills required by the army, and it has also been involved in beginning the basic training of some 39 battalions.

General Palmer is satisfied with the rate of integration. He said everybody had wanted the integration process to go "very much more quickly" but the restraints had been primarily to build an army to a sufficient standard.

Stumbling blocks had been encountered in administration and logistics rather than in training, he said, and the integration process had been carried out "as quickly as it could have been without putting unbearable strain on the administrative process".

"A considerable amount of training has yet to be done before one can say that the army is efficient," he said. Up until now, much of the training had been pushed ahead to catch up with the political imperative for a unified army.

What, then has been BMATT's contribution to the integration process?

Established at the request of the Zimbabwe Government, the team has expanded from 30 officers, warrant officers, and non-commissioned officers to 150 over the last 18 months.

It has a number of tasks.

Said General Palmer: "The most important is to assist in the training of the leadership element of the new battalions at the Military Academy and the School of Infantry and then to progress the training and administration of those battalions by the provision of training and assistance teams at both battalion and brigade levels."

In addition, BMATT has provided a wide variety of specialists and instructors in skills required by parachutists, commandos, artillerymen, armoured soldiers, combat engineers, signal technicians and military police.

General Palmer said that it was "not just a question of replacing skills" that had been drained of: by the emigration of large numbers of the former army personnel. It had also been necessary to produce "a level of expertise."

In this regard the training of logisticians is particularly important, he said. Men are needed as quartermasters, supply and ammunition technical specialists, transport managers, vehicle mechanics, armourers, instrument technicians, pay accountants and catering managers.

There is also a training team at the Zimbabwe Staff College under Colonel Mike Thomson, which trains staff officers — first, junior officers and, in the future, more senior officers on longer four-month courses.

Last year, British military assistance included specialist courses in the United Kingdom, visits and attachments to British units and training establishments by Zimbabwe officers and NCOs and consultancy visits by British Army specialists.

A certain number of people are still being sent for training in Britain, but fewer are being paid for by the British Government, General Palmer said.

"I am sure that as it becomes more and more impossible to identify which army people originally came from, and as it becomes more and more irrelevant, then I think there will be an even greater sense of unity," he said.

Training has obviously, been adapted and adjusted to suit local conditions. "There is no point in teaching people how to run a brigade which only applies to the British Army in West Germany," he said.

But BMATT has tried to develop a broader understanding and practice of all-round military professionalism so that the integrated national army "should be an army in the life of the nation".

Commanders had gone to great efforts to ensure that political arguments had not interfered with military aptitude and training, he said.

General Palmer admitted there had been initial "mistrust and suspicion" from all sides in the incipient national army. "But I hope that people have come to realise that we are here as professional soldiers who are anxious to help the stability of the country and in creating a united army, because the country was born at great speed — under our tutelage, if you like."

The response from the rank and file had been "enthusiastic", he added. "Generally speaking, we have an excellent relationship with all elements and I think we are trusted."

The 60-65 000 people now in the army were "more than the country needs and can afford", he said.

But he said the Government would have to review the size of the army in terms of what it could economically afford and in view of the perceived threat from outside the country.

He applauded the Government's "imaginative" scheme to demobilise soldiers and absorb them usefully into civilian life through education and training in skills.

"This should ensure that you do not get disgruntled soldiery running around the place."

"The smaller army of the future will become a much closer unit and professionally efficient. I think Zimbabwe will require some additional assistance from us but in due course I see no reason why Zimbabwe should not be capable of running its own affairs without significant outside assistance."

The Zimbabwean Army, he added, had every prospect of becoming one of the most efficient in Africa.

And what of the British team's role in continuing assistance after the integration exercise is completed by the end of this year?

General Palmer believes that there will be a role for the team. "I hope that we will continue here as long as the Zimbabwe Government feels we can perform a useful function and as long as the British Government can keep us here."

Local Units Become Part of the Local Scene

Militarywise, the whole of Zimbabwe is divided up into brigade areas, the only exception at the moment being the huge and sprawling Midlands area which comes under the 4 Brigade Headquarters in Fort Victoria for administrative and operational purposes.

However, this is to change, most probably by the end of the year, when what is now the Midlands District, with its HQ at the drill hall in Gwelo, will become a brigade area in its own right.

There are a number of units in the Midlands District which, because of the distances involved, cannot be controlled satisfactorily from Fort Victoria.

Such as the School of Infantry at Guinea Fowl, the Military Academy in Gwelo, 5 Engineer Support Squadron at Redcliff, and four infantry battalions including Connemara. Another battalion is to be established west of Shabani.

The OC of the Midlands District until he began the process of handing over to his successor, Colonel Charles Munyoro, has been Colonel Trevor DesFountain, who is 35.

He said the sole reason the Midlands did not have its own brigade area before was because of staffing problems. "Qualified and experienced staff officers to man a brigade HQ are not found overnight" he said. "If they could be found then we would be a brigade area overnight."

The Midlands District controls several thousand infantryman and the Academy, the School of Infantry and the engineers, have about 700 men on their staffs.

Of the army integration exercise which started in April last year and is due for completion in November or December this year Colonel DesFountain said it had gone extremely well.

"The British officers involved with the battalions have all been pleased with their units" he said.

"For an exercise that was fraught with inherent dangers it has come out remarkably well."

The soldiers had been made well aware of the complications of joining an amalgamated army and of the dangers of fighting and quarrelling within the infrastructure.

"They know full well that if they disintegrate then the country is in danger of disintegrating as well" he said.

Colonel DesFountain said there was a good and willing spirit among the troops. Some of the battalions had built their own assault courses and weapon training areas and they had whitewashed their barracks and built up roads and the like.

"In exchange block, three battalions live within 800 m of each other and it is amazing what they have done there" he said.

"They have built soakaways and built up the place in terms of a bit of pomp and splendour. Some have made company insignias and they have created drill competitions among their own companies. They have volleyball and football teams and challenge each other and the locals. The spirit is there."

RIOT CONTROL

Apart from ensuring the security of the Midlands area — be it dealing with normal criminals if the police ask for help, be it riot control, discipline or operations — the new brigade will have another important role to play: helping the local population.

In the Gokwe area they have helped the locals to make cattle and water troughs and dips, and have done thatching and cane cutting.

Said Colonel DesFountain: "They have also helped the local butchery, grocery and the hotel in terms of their profits.

"Gokwe is going to become a very big growth point in the near future and we are putting a permanent battalion site just outside the village. . . 1 300 men times their monthly salary equals several million dollars a year ploughed into Gokwe village."

He added: "Our object is to create a stabilised presence in an area of trained and disciplined men who are under control . . . It is important that we show the local man on the ground that the guy in uniform is a stable and disciplined guy."

Colonel Munyoro, the new OC Midlands District, is 31 and is married with two children. Born in Sipolilo, he did his primary schooling there and later went to St. Albert's School in Mount Darwin for his secondary education. He worked as a salesman for commercial concerns until 1969 and in 1971 left for the revolution.

The Signals Must Get Through

THE one unit essential to any modern army that must function at optimum efficiency at all times is the Corps of Signals.

In times of crisis there is always a certain amount of flexibility in choosing which unit should handle an operation, except when it comes to communications. Here there is no room for mistakes and Signals must do the job.

Corps commander Lieutenant Colonel Ross Clarke said the main role of the unit is to provide all forms of communications at unit headquarters level.

"We must also train all signalmen, repair signal equipment, make technical appraisals of all new equipment, allocate frequencies and secret codes and co-ordinate electronic warfare," added Colonel Clarke.

On operations a signalman always accompanies a reconnaissance party to ensure a base is chosen that is suitable for good communications.

In overall control is the signals directorate, with a regimental headquarters and three squadrons under its command.

There is a signal squadron at each brigade and a special signals troop that can assist units such as I Parachute Battalion.

The School of Signals comes under the directorate, and is responsible for training aspects. It is based in Bulawayo.

Integration of the former guerilla forces is a priority in the unit. To date 26 officers and 206 male and 15 female other ranks have been integrated.

In the last 12 months the unit has had three officers and 10 other ranks attending courses in Britain. These courses range from telecommunications engineering to radio technicians training.

Colonel Clarke said: "Integration has been perhaps a little slow in the unit but this is due to the fact that for the first four to five months, the corps was tasked with training all signalmen for the nine new infantry battalions."

The unit has also been running regimental officers courses and training at company level began in January.

"Training has to be kept in phase. There must be a balance in the number of operators, technicians, signals dispatch riders and tradesmen who are trained," added Colonel Clarke.

The unit was the first to run its own Officer Selection Board for integration purposes, and this is followed by a 14 to 16-week course. Due to the specialist nature of the work a very high standard is maintained on the course.

Retraining has taken place and reassessment to ensure standardisation in the unit.

The history of the Corp goes back to the beginning of the Second World War. Its antecedents lie in I Company Southern Rhodesia Signals formed in September 1939. This was followed by the Southern Rhodesia Signals Corp formed in 1942 and disbanded in 1956.

In the following year the Rhodesia and Nyasaland Corps of Signals was formed on February 8. This is the corp's traditional anniversary date. In order of precedence the unit ranks fifth behind infantry, armour, artillery and engineers.

The unit badge is a figure of Hermes on a globe, with the motto "swift and sure" underneath. Hermes was the messenger of the Greek gods, and according to legend he made the first musical instrument, the lyre.

With this background it is perhaps natural that the unit has the renowned Corp of Signals Band. The band has played at every conceivable occasion from the first Independence celetrations, to garden parties and the Salisbury Show.

The director of music is Major Frank Hayes. In 1979 the corps adopted a new quick march called "Kukurumidza ne Chokwadi", literally translated as swift and sure.

In 1980 Major Hayes wrote a new corps slow march called "Through" after a famous First World War signal painting.

Back on the operational side Colonel Clarke illustrated the importance of his unit. They have established an extensive command network and communication centres in Zimbabwe. These have exclusive telephone and teleprinter links which enable a commander to contact any other commander on a secure means when the need arises.

2 Brigade 'Best of Them All'

"TWO Brigade is the finest of them all." Not surprisingly this statement was made by the 2 Brigade commander, Brigadier Ian Stansfield.

Two Brigade is responsible for the entire north-east of Zimbabwe, and is representative of all the brigades in terms of its experiences since independence.

The brigade's headquarters are in Salisbury and its area of command stretches from the Mozambique border in the east to Kariba in the north-west.

The brigade has 10 battalions under command. Brigadier Stansfield said it was intended to consolidate these into three battalions within three years, which was the reasoning behind their present base siting.

A wide range of units come under the brigade's control, including a boat squadron at Kariba.

One unit of which the brigadier is particularly proud is his engineering squadron.

"These men have been doing a tremendous job building the camps for the new battalions. They have slaved away for months, no sooner building one camp when another is needed."

The unit has the construction down to a fine art and can erect a temporary battalion barracks in six weeks, said Brigadier Stansfield.

The brigade has a signals squadron, which provides communications back-up and trains certain personnel. A maintenance company looks after ordnance requirements, transport and vehicle repairs.

The military police company has a wide range of tasks. These include duties within urban Salisbury, traffic control and crime investigation. They have also handled some fairly tricky operations in the early days of integration.

The brigade is training a defence company to be a mechanised unit, and Brigadier Stansfield said the company had been very successfully integrated, and he was most impressed with them.

Turning to the battalions in the field the brigadier said as a whole problems had been of an individual nature.

He believed a strong feeling of unit spirit and enthusiasm was being built up. He singled out for particular mention a 23-year-old battalion commander. Despite his age the man had built a great team spirit, and "he works so damn hard he's sure to have a heart attack".

Operationally the brigade maintains internal security and border control. As the brigadier said, there may or may not be any problems in Mozambique, but it is our duty to ensure no potential conflict spills over into Zimbabwe.

Questioned on integration, Brigadier Stansfield said it was all a question of trust. The men at his headquarters had gone out on a limb to provide assistance in training and administration.

"I have been lucky with the officers under my command. We communicate well and we have established a basis of trust, built on mutual respect and hard work."

"At first everyone was worried about the scene, but within a short period the men settled down. I now have battalions."

Crime in Camouflage Just Does Not Pay

IT takes 900 men and women who form the ranks of the corps of Military Police to ensure that crime in camouflage does not pay in the Zimbabwe National Army.

And each one has to have a hide as hard as the metal shell of the white helmet that makes the military policeman stand out from all other soldiers. For popularity is not one of the rewards of the job.

"If the military police are popular there is something wrong somewhere," said the deputy director of the corps, Lieutenant Colonel Bob Reith.

"We don't do our job by being popular and it is right that we should be regarded as a discomforting factor by those doing something they should not be doing."

The corps operates on lines similar to that of any civilian police force, having its own version of the Criminal Investigation Department, Criminal Records Office as well as the uniform branch.

But unlike the civil police, the corps sometimes executes punishment, especially when defaulters are sentenced to a term in the detention barracks in Bulawayo.

It could be that this task of providing the guards at the detention barracks is mainly responsible for the unpopularity.

During the days of the Rhodesian Army the detention barracks gained a bad reputation through the complaints of prisoners about brutality by guards and inhuman conditions.

But the reputation was quite unjustified, said Colonel Reith. "If anyone thinks it is tough in the Bulawayo detention barracks, he should see some of those I have seen, such as the stockades in America and Canada.

"It is all part of human nature, I suppose, that some youngster who has been in the detention barracks and acted like a lamb throughout his sentence should come out and shout his mouth off about how tough it was.

"But as a result of these complaints we introduced a visiting system in which three civilian observers go to the detention barracks regularly. They are free to speak to any soldier under sentence and to visit any part of the barracks.

"In addition, there are visits by chaplains and we are constantly pulling in army welfare to assist prisoners. So far there has been not one complaint since the system was introduced."

As the National Army has grown in size with the integration of the former guerillas so has the military police, and there is always a squad of 300 recruits being trained at the school of military police, also in Bulawayo.

"Most of the recruits who have entered the ranks recently have been ZANLA and ZIPRA personnel," said Colonel Reith. "By necessity, the military police got the integration exercise going faster than any other element in the army and former guerillas now account for about 75 percent of the corps

"A staff officer from ZANLA and one from ZIPRA interviewed people in the assembly points. They were looking for mature individuals with common sense and a good command of English, and in the main they chose the right people."

A major task of the military police these days is to keep a close check on army vehicles which have been involved in many serious accidents in the past year.

"With more vehicles on the road, you are going to get more accidents, but this does not apply to the army alone," said Colonel Reith.

"Not all army drivers have been at fault in accidents involving army vehicles. And army drivers are under much closer scrutiny than civilian drivers. They have all the civilian police and the military police breathing down their necks.

"We have road patrols which can stop military vehicles to find out if it has the authority to be where it is and if it is roadworthy.

"If it is unfit to be on the road because of a mechanical defect, the military police have the authority to impound it and at present our headquarters are full of impounded vehicles.

"When equipment arrives we will be setting up special traffic sections which will operate speed traps."

More than any other soldier, a military policeman is expected to be highly disciplined and any one who transgresses is in deep trouble.

"When it comes to punishment he gets hit harder because of the breach of trust," said Colonel Reith.

Many of the plain clothes military policemen of the Special Investigation Branch, the equivalent of the CID, have a civilian police background and come from Britain, Canada and America.

They work in co-operation with the civilian police on cases involving drugs, fraud, theft and serious traffic offences.

They prepare dockets for the courts and are often called upon to give evidence in civilian as well as military courts.

Colonel Reith, who served 16 years in the military police in Britain, took command of the Rhodesian Army's military police in 1974. Recently he was appointed deputy to the new director, Colonel Patrick Nhamo, who commanded the ZIPRA military police in Zambia.

Colonel Reith is philosophical about being relieved of command after seven years. "It is Government policy and I understand it and in some ways sympathise with it," he said.

"There is a job to be done and it does not matter who is in charge."

Professionalism Is the Watchword

"MY ambition is to produce the best professional soldiers. The integration programme has been very successful. Former combatants are eager to learn and become part of one National Army.

"The Prime Minister's reconciliation policy is doing wonders. There is a realisation by all of us that, we belong to one country and that we cannot work without each other. The only way to make progress is to work together."

With these words the newly-appointed commandant of Shaw Barracks, the No. 1. Infantry Training Depot at Balla Balla, Colonel Richard Dube, sat back in his chair.

Looking through the window in Colonel Dube's office one could see platoons of the 13th Battalion swinging their arms as they marched in perfect unison under the blazing sun. The soldiers were on a two-week training course. They had been taken from the assembly points and were being integrated into a battalion.

FROM SCRATCH

The 13th Battalion had 939 men. A battalion is supposed to have about 1 050 men, according to Colonel Dube. This meant the assembly points were drying up. The integration programme was nearing completition, Colonel Dube noted.

"We are building a battalion and have to start from scratch. The battalion has to operate as one unit. The training is meant to make men have the spirit to work together."

"As time goes on this exercise becomes more successful. The spirit is willing. The morale is good. All of us realise we have to work together," said the OC for Training at the 1 ITD, Lieutenant W. H. Lattin, as he moved from one platoon to another inspecting various training programmes going on simultaneously.

The commander of the 939 - strong battalion, 23-year-old Major Esau Chiadzwa, also toured the platoons with Lieutenant Lattin and the Press.

"I trained at the Zimbabwe Military Academy and I came out with high grades. That is how I got appointed as the battalion commander," said Major Chiadzwa in a soft-spoken voice.

Training at the 1 ITD included weapons training, physical training, NCO and signals training.

"We keep them very busy. Starting at 5.30 a.m. with PT the training goes on until 4.30 in the afternoon. But the men are so enthusiastic that sometime they go on training after knocking off time. By 8.30 p.m. all is quiet in the barracks — everyone is asleep," Lieutenant Lattin said.

BRITISH HELP

Courses are conducted by 23 officers helped by two members of the British military unit in the country.

The weapons training course includes stripping and assembly; magazine filling; loading and unloading; aiming and holding; firing from cover and from other positions. In all these the G3 rifle is used.

The physical training programme includes strength training; battle PT; PT table; volley ball, basketball and football. The Signals programme trains soldiers in the operation of the B22 radio.

Part of the weapons training includes the stripping and assembling as well as loading and unloading of a machinegun.

NCOs have their special training programmes. "We teach the officers how to drill their men after they leave this place," Lieutenant Lattin said.

With the integration programme running down the 1 ITD would revert to training junior officers in specialist courses, Lieutenant Lattin added.

Army's Seat of Learning

THE Zimbabwe Military Academy in Gwelo, formerly known as the School of Infantry, is now and always has been the seat of learning of the Army.

All the officers are trained there and all the courses they take throughout their careers are done there. Without the Academy the army wouldn't function.

So says Lieutenant Colonel Bryan McDermott, the 2 IC of the Academy, who added that the young soldier who is selected for the regular officer cadet course there and who succeeds has attended "one of the finest officer cadet courses in the world — and that includes Sandhurst. Our standards are the same and we produce a practical young officer who is able to leave here and take immediate command of his troops".

The Academy's main function is to train junior officers and the first all black course there started in July. The officers' selection board chose 65 of whom 24 started on the course. Already their number is down to 21 and it is expected that about 12 of these will eventually become officers.

The commandant of the Academy is Colonel Gibson Mashinganze (30), who took over about two weeks ago. Both he and Colonel McDermott said that since the amalgamation exercise started last year about 8 000 people have passed through the Academy's hands.

"Surprisingly enough we didn't find too many problems," said Colonel McDermott. "Initially there was mistrust between everyone but that was soon overcome because everybody realised they were working for one thing — to produce a national army."

The amalgamation courses will be completed by November and the Academy will then run continuation courses. Those already integrated will return there at intervals throughout their careers.

Colonel McDermott said of the Academy: "We get the best people here because you have to have the best to train other people. We virtually select our own instructors and have right of call to get them here. It is a prestigious posting to be sent to the Academy to instruct because it is where basically the whole training of the army is organised."

He added: "Our role is to train and run courses for officers and other ranks of the national army, to train officer cadets and fit them for their role, and to liaise with other training establishments to ensure that what we teach is mirrored there so that it is a standardised thing. But it all starts here."

The 21 cadets still on the regular cadet course were out on the rifle range with their course officer, Captain Wilton Rensburg, who comes from Selukwe.

He quickly selected the three "best shottists on the course so far" for us to photograph — OC P. H. Masarira from Bikita, OC T. Shoko from Shabani, and OC N. Mangwende from Fort Victoria and told us that another cadet, OC G. Mataswa, completed a month's training with the others and was then sent off to complete his course at Sandhurst.

"We selected the best we had," said Captain Rensburg.

He said he was pleased with the progress of the cadets, "we are doing well so far and they all get on fine".

New Intensive Training Plans

WITH the integration programme nearing completion what future plans do the training depots have?

Lieut-Colonel O. Atkinson, in charge of the No. 2 Infantry Training Depot at Llewellin Barracks, said the depots could now start on the intensive training courses for junior and senior NCOs.

"Next year we will have more intensive courses which will cover the general requirements of a soldier. We will organise soldiers as a unit.

"It will be different, challenging and new. It will be creative in the sense that we will be training individual soldiers to do their job properly and take their place in the army," Colonel Atkinson said.

He was referring to the new courses scheduled to begin next year.

Looking back at the heydays of the integration programme Colonel Atkinson said there were difficulties in the beginning.

"But it became easier later as everybody now knows what is happening."

The integration effort has been a success in a way, he said, despite the Entumbane shoot-out early this year.

Important Role of the Sapper

A SAPPER — a soldier trained in military engineering — plays an important role in troop mobility and the effectiveness of any military strategy.

"The engineer's task, is to help the soldier to live and fight. The engineer's knowledge is used in the furtherance of the infantry's battle plan," said Major John Barlow, Commandant of the School of Military Engineering.

The school, based in Bulawayo, teaches combat engineering subjects to soldiers who will become part of the Zimbabwe Corps of Engineers and Infantry Units.

Subjects taught at the school include cordage, steel wire rope, blocks and tackles, field geometry, levelling, anchorages, winches, field machines, roads and tracks, improvised bridging, Bailey bridging, obstacles, field defences, water supply, demolitions, booby traps and mine warfare.

Each course takes in 36 students, and basic courses last 10 weeks.

"After 10 weeks we select the best students or those who have shown a flair for engineering. These are brought back for a further nine-week course. We are also training 18 officers selected from the Officer Selection Board," Major Barlow said.

The school has four officers and 30 instructors as well as four BMATT soldiers (British Military Assistance Training Team).

Commenting on the training, Major Barlow said initially students who were not academically better equipped to understand the instruction tended to do poorly. But after "the rusty minds have been cleared and oiled" results improve a great deal.

"After training as a sapper one becomes a far better citizen of the country. Many things he has learned here can apply to his life and will help him in his home.

"For instance we teach them how to use hand tools. This itself is groundwork for anybody. We teach them how to put things straight, and how to read a level." the Major added.

The school has plans for more upgraded courses. The scheme is to train the students in bricklaying, carpentry, electricity, plumbing and get them to be fully indentured like their civilian counterparts.

A significant aspect of the school's training programme was the combat engineering course involving the building of Bailey and improvisation bridges.

The Bailey bridge, an 80-foot iron framework, was set up in 90 minutes. A member of the BMATT said for a fully trained engineer such a bridge could take between 45 minutes and one hour.

It is used to assist in troop mobility in times of war as well as creating emergency bridges for civilian purposes, he said.

While the Bailey bridge was made up of prefab steel girders, the improvised bridge was essentially made of materials a soldier could lay hands on in the vicinity to put up a bridge, he added.

They're Fighting Troops as Well...

ARMY engineers are more than specialists: They are also first rate fighting troops and their commander is determined they will stay that way.

"When all the engineers met after the ceasefire we found it had been the same in all three armies," said the director of the Zimbabwe Corps of Engineers, Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Roseveare.

"Commanders would send you out to do difficult jobs with little or no infantry support. You were on your own and had to look after yourself. So we are determined we will be able to do so."

Army engineers were also sometimes in the font of the frontline, clearing mines and other obstacles before other troops could advance.

The corps was divided into squadrons with an engineer squadron attached to each brigade plus one at headquarters which could help out where needed.

The squadrons had responsibility for all military engineering in their areas, including the building of barracks and the clearing of mines and other explosives when necessary.

The huge minefields laid during the war still existed and were likely to be around for a long time, said Colonel Roseveare. Remote controlled removal machinery was used to find and lift them.

Certain areas had already been cleared, plus all roads that had to be used, but the corps would never guarantee unconditionally that a particular area was safe.

The corps was also responsible for rendering safe bombs and explosives.

"We have people on 24-hour standby to move at the request of the civil police or military authorities and deal with any items of ordinance."

It was the corps which had to render safe Inkomo Barracks ammunition dump after heavy explosions rocked the area in August. Outside experts had complimented the corps on the way the problem was handled.

But the corps had a lot more to do than build bridges and barracks and blow stuff up.

The boat squadron on Lake Kariba, "the Zimbabwean navy", patrolled the vast lake performing all the functions the army was called upon to do in that area.

Support squadron contained the specialist elements of the corps, including heavy plant and equipment. The works troop consisted of skilled journeymen in several fields including building, plumbing and mechanical and civil engineering, while the dog section housed the Labradors used in mine detection.

The corps also boasted a band of bugles, pipes and drums. A diving school was being established at Kariba to train all the army's divers.

The Cog of the Army

THE Services Corps is the cog which keeps the national army machine moving.

Divided into four sections — engineers, ordnance, transport and catering — the services corps has the daunting responsibility of keeping the army fed, clothed, equipped, and mobile.

The corps operates from two area headquarters in Mashonaland and Matabeleland.

The base workshops and ordnance supply depot are at the HQs.

There are also training centres in Salisbury and Bulawayo.

The Salisbury depot trains various levels of workers in the automotive trade, from journeymen to the semi-skilled.

In Bulawayo, all types of corps training is undertaken, from driver instruction to catering.

At the area HQs an overall command structure exists. Here the cadres of the men are planned to ensure each person is given the best chance of advancing in his trade.

The corps director, Colonel Tony Rogers, said a high standard for prospective tradesmen has been maintained.

Insisting on an "O" level education or equivalent ensured that a man had a good chance of becoming an A grade tradesman.

At the moment the corps suffers from a shortage of lower and middle management as it takes a number of years to train such people.

Colonel Rogers said: "We are desperately short in the electrical mechanical and engineering fields. However the British training team have helped considerably in running courses."

Colonel Rogers added that many of his men had practical experience but were lacking on the theory side.

It is intended to modify the trade tests to give these men a chance of showing their abilities.

Once trained, corps members are detached to the four brigades. They are responsible for supplying the brigade in the field with rations, ammunition and fuel, transport and general repairs.

Corps Training Covers Many Different Fields

ONE of the biggest institutions within the army support services is the Army Services Corps. The training school runs 48 different courses with varying frequency throughout the year, according to the corps commandant, Lieut-Colonel H. Burns.

It has five training wings, namely, the HQ, Regimental, Ordnance, Transport and Catering.

The regimental course is a familiarisation programme for service officers.

The ordnance includes officers' and instructors' courses.

According to Colonel Burns, ammunition technician courses will be introduced following the blasts at Inkomo Barracks recently.

The courses take an average of 12 students.

Low profile courses have bigger intakes than high profile courses. Explaining this Colonel Burns said a class "must have a reasonably sized class in order for the instructor to be able to give personal attention to each student.

"The role of the Services Corps is wide and varied. We are responsible for the procurement of weapons, vehicles and other stores for distribution to the consumers.

"We are also responsible for the workshop side — the repair and maintenance of vehicles at all levels," Colonel Burns said.

Lately considerable attention has been paid to the driving section of the ZASC as a result of road accidents caused by army vehicles.

The head of the training wing, Officer Fred Cathro, said the military test had become one of the strictest driver testing programmes.

Drivers must pass eye tests, and train for two weeks before they can be granted even a provisional licence. Other stringent tests included solo and tests on a simulator.

Testing in the urban areas was preceded by practices in less crowded roads like in the outer limits of the city, he said.

Road accidents involving military vehicles were often a result of the military drivers relaxing after their tough training.

To rectify this, master drivers will be introduced to make a follow up of the driving habits of the soldiers.

"These master drivers will show up anywhere in the country unannounced and will pick any military driver to check on his driving," Officer Cathro said.

Part of the driving courses include cross-country driving over all types of terrain, night driving as well as driving four-wheel drive vehicles.

The courses lasted for 12 weeks but were reduced to nine weeks because of the Mechanical Testing Battery simulator which can tell whether a particular soldier will make it or not.

The Catering Wing runs courses in junior management, senior management and basic bulk cooking.

As an average, 12 students are admitted to each course which runs for up to three weeks.

A catering instructor, Staff Sergant G. Gudza said some of the upgraded courses were not being held at the time because of shortage of classes.

AFRICAN-MALAGASY COFFEE ORGANIZATION MEETS IN ABIDJAN

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 1 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Hien Solo]

[Text] The 86th ordinary session of the OAMCAF [African and Malagasy Coffee Organization] completed its work Friday, concluding that "the negotiations for the 1981-1982 quotas should guarantee equitable distribution and be based on the available stocks and real export capacity of the member countries."

Moreover, the most recent market figures justify the OAMCAF in thinking that this goal can be readily achieved "if all the parties involved are motivated by a sincere desire to cooperate, and above all, if the deficits anticipated, which should be on the same level as those in September 1980, are distributed in accordance with the rules of the agreement."

After noting that the 1981-82 campaign will be the second and last governed by the 1976 Coffee Agreement, the OAMCAF expressed the belief that under the circumstances, an extension of that agreement for a period to be determined would be more desirable than overall renegotiation of it.

Another point in the discussion on which the attention of the participants was focused had to do with the situation of the Robusta variety worldwide. As a result, with a view to further promotion of this variety, the OAMCAF proposes to meet again very soon to reach some decisions. It believes, in fact, that the role coffee plays within the group's member countries, evaluated above all in terms of jobs, export income, contribution to the gross national product, social calm and political balance, is such that very special attention should be devoted to the prospects for the development of this product.

All of these results of the 48-hour session merited praise from the secretary of state for agriculture of our country, who spoke at the closing ceremony.

Mr Gilles Laubhouet expressed the hope that these results will lead to an increasing awareness on the part of the OIC [International Coffee Organization] in connection with the distribution of quotas for the coming season.

After criticizing the inefficiency of the quota system as it functioned in the course of last season, Mr Laubhouet expressed confidence that the desire voiced by the 86th session of the OAMCAF "to see the delegations from our member countries represented on sufficiently high levels will be realized, so that we will be given every chance for success."

The secretary of state for agriculture, speaking on behalf of Minister Bra Kanon, who is currently away in Brazil, and the chief of state, went on to praise the spirit of solidarity evidenced at this meeting.

Let us note that the board of directors of the OAMCAF approved the budget for the 1981-1982 fiscal year during this meeting in Abidjan, providing its bodies with the means of pursuing their activities within the framework of the goals set.

It also reelected as president His Excellency Henri Raharijaona, the ambassador of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar to France, and Messrs Daniel Assoumou (director general of the Stabilization and Equalization Funds in Gabon) and Guy Darlan (director general of the Farm Products Stabilization and Equalization Fund in the Central African Republic) as first and second vice-presidents, respectively.

REMOTE SENSING EXPERTS MEET ON USE OF REGIONAL CENTERS

Bamako L'ESSOR in French 12-13 Sep 81 p 3

[Report by L.D.G. Traore: "CAT Experts' Mini-Conference: To Develop Joint Action on Regional Centers"]

[Text] On Tuesday morning at 1000 hours, in the conference hall of the Transportation and Public Works Department, Djibril Diallo, president of the African Council on Remote Sensing [CAT], opened the mini-conference held by the EAC at the request of the technical experts of the five management committees of the CAT.

The conference, described as a coordination and synthesization meeting, gathered together the technical experts and the EAC representative, Mr Olujumbo. His remarks related primarily to the mission entrusted to the committee of experts (at the 3rd CAT conference last March in Bamako) which is to direct joint action at the Regional Remote Sensing Centers.

"This, gentlemen, is a far-reaching mission, the accomplishment of which will require adequate time," concluded Djibril Diallo, as he summed up in his brief address the various tasks entrusted to the committee of experts.

"Within the framework of the mission entrusted to you as defined in Annex 10 of the report on the conference held from 3 to 5 March in Bamako, you should:

Gather information on present courses, seminars, and workshops, and establish an inventory of the contents of training programs in existence in the various Regional Centers;

Examine the contents of these courses, seminars, and workshops, to identify gaps, weak spots, and possible dual-use areas;

Suggest ways of strengthening and improving existing programs; develop new programs to promote overall, coordinated training activities to meet the goals of the African Remote Sensing Program;

Revise the goals of the Remote Sensing Regional Centers to make sure that they correspond to the present and future needs of member nations with respect to food production, land use, the problem of the Sahel and increasing desertification, and recommend necessary and desirable changes to meet these needs;

Rough out short-term (4 to 5-year) training plans at the Regional Center level for feasible actual integration into present plans in existence in member states."

During the short opening session, the presence of the ministers of agriculture, cattle raising, water and forests was noted, as well as that of the secretary general of CAT, Kabiema of Zaire.

The session was adjourned after a speech by the EAC representative, who particularly congratulated the president of the CAT for his dynamism in the service of this regional organization.

MAPE PROJECT: PROMOTION OF NATIONAL LANGUAGES ASSESSED

Bamako L'ESSOR in French 12-13 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by Malick Kante: "International Literacy Day: MAPE: an Important Landmark in the Promotion of National Languages"]

[Text] On the occasion of International Literacy Day, L'ESSOR published last year at this time an article on experimental classes in Mali, in which instruction was given entirely in the national language Bambara (or Manding). This experiment is moving along steadily without serious problems at the moment and seems likely to arrive at a beneficial outcome with regional dimensions in our continent.

Indeed, with the Manding-Peuhl Project (MAPE), seven countries in West Africa hope to fulfill a dream "in order 10 years perhaps": adopt unanimously Manding and Peuhl as the languages of instruction in schools.

We are publishing below the historical background of this project, and despite a few difficulties, fortunately overcome, we offer you an assessment of the implementation of the MAPE project.

There are grounds for thinking that in less than a decade, two national languages (Manding and Peuhl) will be the transmitters of knowledge in West Africa. At least if one refers to the state of progress of the MAPE project which involves Upper Volta, Ivory Coast, Niger, Senegal, Guinea-Conakry, Mauritania, and Mali.

The Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency (ACCT) was behind this project. In December 1976, at Yaounde (Cameroon), it held an international conference devoted to the promotion of African national languages. At that time, the Commission of West African Member States presented to the ACCT a regional project (MAPE), the goal of which was to promote two of the most important languages in the area.

The following year, the work of this commission was picked up by the agency entrusting the coordination and preparation of actions to the National Administration for Functional Literacy and Applied Linguistics (DNAFLA) in Bamako.

From 27 to 29 November 1979, the project was launched in Bamako during a meeting among Upper Volta, Ivory Coast, and Mali. An assessment was made of the status of linguistic research, and the two languages were selected, after establishment of the regional priorities for their promotion, leading to specific national requests.

It was then decided, after the meeting in Bamako, to involve MAPE in 1979, and to integrate into it the states not represented at the meeting.

Since then, coordination missions with the task of establishing an alphabet and a lexicon in the Manding and Peuhl languages that would be useful for all of West Africa, have had DNAFLA experts crisscrossing the seven countries involved. At the same time, they were supposed to gather texts belonging to the oral tradition.

The basic document for achieving better harmony in the phonetics and writing of both these languages throughout various countries in the region is the alphabet invented and accepted by the Organization for African Unity. It is also known as the Niamey alphabet. Its appropriateness will be evaluated from 17 to 20 next November at Nouakchott in Mauritania, where delegates from the seven countries will meet to collate the results of their work in research and elaboration of systems or instruments aimed at making of the Manding and Peuhl languages a vehicle of knowledge, such as Chinese and Japanese, for example, have become.

To this end, at this meeting, the seven countries --and ours in particular -- will present a language manual, a grammar book written in both languages, and many other teaching instruments already being used in the experimental classes.

However, despite the progress of the project, it would be premature at the moment (although this is the goal) these two languages as already instruments for promoting a regional culture.

But here and now, we can note that in Mali the experimental classes are in their third year, while in Guinea teaching is taking place in Manding at the university.

On the other hand, other countries, like Mauritania, are showing a certain delay in experimentation. Only this year will they open experimental classes with teaching offered in the national language.

In Mali, a conclusion is not expected to be drawn definitely on the success of the experiment until 3 years from now, when the experimental classes will have reached the level of the sixth year of traditional education.

But in fact it would be no exaggeration to say that it will probably be necessary to wait a full decade to observe the true impact of this ambitious project.

BRIEFS

FRENCH DIPLOMATIC CHANGES--Paris--Jean-Pierre Cot returned from his first African tour (Cameroon, Ghana, Senegal) definitely persuaded of the need for a change in the heads of the Aid and Cooperation missions (MAC), the major diplomatic shift on which Claude Cheysson, for his part, is working, and which sooner or later will affect the majority of the posts to the south of the Sahara. In the spirit indicated by the new French minister of cooperation, as well as the new chief at the Quai d'Orsay, it is not, barring most exceptional cases, a question of penalizing anyone. However, impressed by the policy of Gaston Deferre with regard to the prefects in the mother country, he believes that by changing capitals and thus interlocutors, these heads of mission will be in a better position to implement the changes in direction he intends to promote in the policy of his department. Some electoral concerns can also, however, be perceived in the background of these announced changes. The Higher Council of French Citizens Abroad is to be renewed at the beginning of next year. The new officials in charge of the French African policy hope to put an end to the exclusive control of this body by former colonial dignitaries. To this end, and for the first time, the members of this council will be elected by universal suffrage, with all French citizens registered with the consulate participating, rather than being coopted by associations controlled by these dignitaries. But in order to ensure the election of the largest possible number of supporters of the new majority, it will be necessary to get a rather conservative but naturally "pro-legitimacy" electoral body persuaded that times have changed. This will require that the former official zealots of the Jacques Chirac or Valery Giscard d'Estaing school themselves begin to change their methods diplomatically--which it is believed they can do more easily by changing their place of residence and social environment first of all. Those in charge of the French socialist sections unofficially established in the capitals involved in recent years are convinced, in any case, that the promoters of the electoral committees of the old majority, also concerned with their careers, will follow in line and prove more cautious, and not in the cooperative environment alone, moreover. OAU MILITARY SUPPORT CONSIDERED LIKELY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Antonio Makwala (AIM [Mozambique Information Agency])

[Text] Intense military activity followed the Front Line States summit meeting held in Lagos last week, which appealed to all the member states of the OAS to give maximum aid to Angola, particularly military aid.

It is believed that Angola is now negotiating this kind of military aid and it is in this persepctive that observers are considering the trip of Finance Minister Ismael Martins to Libya as a special envoy of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos.

President Jose Eduardo dos Santos said at a press conference before the Lagos summit that many African countries have offered military aid to Angola, and it is believed that Libya is one of those countries.

The visit of Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere to Algeria is also considered as having military implications.

Both Libya and Algeria have modern air forces; if a contingent of their MiG-25's were sent to the south of Angola with pilots, that could make a considerable difference for the war in that the South Africans would lose their air superiority.

In fact, the MiG-25 is now considered the best fighter in the world, even by U.S. pilots.

According to observers, other countries such as Nigeria, Tanzania and Mozambique will offer military aid to Angola. It is believed that this aid will be offered in the form of contingents of troops and possibly some artillery units. This support, however, will not take the form of the inter-African military force which has been mentioned.

The People's Republic of Angola will maintain control over military operations inside its own territory and will have the final word in the choice of what offers of aid it will accept.

DELEGATION OF NORTH KOREAN JOURNALISTS WELCOMED

Cotonou EHUZU in French 27 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpts] A delegation of Korean journalists made up of four persons has been visiting our country, the People's Republic of Benin, since Monday.

Headed by Comrade Kim Ki Ryong, deputy editor in chief of RODONG SINMOUN, the organ of the Central Committee of the Korean Labor Party, the delegation paid a visit yesterday to the National Printing Press and Publishing Office (ONEPI). The delegation was welcomed by the deputy director general of that office, Comrade Ekue Maurice.

The head of the delegation, Comrade Kim Ki Ryong, said in response to a question from the director of publication that the purpose of the visit to Benin is to inform the Korean people about the great victories won by our people under the enlightened leadership of our great comrade in struggle, President Mathieu Kerekou, in the difficult process of building the new society, the socialist society.

He added that this is the first time such a delegation has visited our country. He then expressed his satisfaction with the fact that our national daily is contributing effectively through its articles to the struggle for the peaceful and independent reunification of the Korean fatherland. "The importance of a newspaper does not depend on the number of its pages, but on its content," the head of the Korean delegation commented. "Its importance also lies in its capacity to serve as a vehicle and to publicize the policy and the general line of the party." In conclusion, the Korean journalists expressed the hope that our two press organs can develop their exchange in order to carry the struggle of our two peoples for social progress to a successful conclusion.

This delegation of Korean journalists, which is to visit other points in the interior of our country, will leave Cotonou next Monday.

DEVELOPMENT, ROLE OF GOVERNMENT IN SUGAR INDUSTRY DISCUSSED

1981 Production

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 29 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] As of 22 August, sugar production for this season had exceeded the figure for the corresponding period in 1979, a year regarded as "notable" by the sugar industry, whereas 1980 was characterized by storms. In fact, as of the mentioned date, 231,418 tons of sugar had been produced, as compared with 225,310 tons in 1979.

The average rate of extraction for the island, established at 10.32, is still regarded as below the normal rate, which is generally much higher at this season of the year. In 1979, the average for the island as a whole was 10.37. On the regional level, the lowest rate of extraction reported was 9.98 in the east, and the highest, 10.87 in the west.

The extraction average for the island as a whole thus reveals a decline in the sugar yield per arpent, which was 3.3 tons as of 22 August as compared with 3.9 for the corresponding period in 1979.

The total tonnage of sugarcane milled as of 22 August was 2.2 million (2.1 million in 1979), including 808,830 tons for the planters and 1.4 million tons for the mill owners. The sugarcane area belonging to the mill owners harvested as of that date came to 43,845 arpents. A total of 617 61 708 [sic] tons of cane belonging to the plantation owners remain to be harvested.

Transfer to Government Urged

[Text] The prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, told the press yesterday that in his opinion the sugar industry should "voluntarily transfer 30 to 40 percent of the industry to the government." At the same time, he explained that this would "permit resolution of another problem: that of the nationalization of the industry, which is demanded by certain political parties."

The prime minister said that this would avoid the need for the government "to sit down with the leaders of the sugar industry and find out what is happening therein, and would put a stop to demands for draconian changes, nationalization in particular. Such governmental participation in the industry would "be in the interests of the entire population and would make it possible to resolve many of our problems," the prime minister said.

In response to a newsman who commented that the minister of finance had stated publicly that the government favored appointing a commission to investigate the sugar industry, Seewoosagur Ramgoolam said that this was in fact the case, but that time was too short to appoint such a commission prior to the coming general elections. "Even the sugar industry favors an investigation," the prime minister said.

Moreover, he stressed the fact that both the government and the industry are working currently on the present problems. The atmosphere favors dialogue, in particular, Seewoosagur Ramgoolam stressed, since "the prosperity of the country depends entirely or almost entirely on this industry." He also emphasized that he did not want to see the industry plunged into difficulties as serious as those experienced by the sugar industries in Latin America and the West Indies.

Can the Government Afford the Purchase?

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 29 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] "Forty percent of the total value of the sugar industry (planters included) comes to about 1.5 billion rupees. Can the government find such a sum in the near future?" It was with this question that the Mauritian sugar industry greeted the prime minister's suggestion (at his press conference) to the effect that the government should seek to obtain "33 to 40 percent participation in the sugar industry, which would avoid nationalization." Mr Pierre Dalais, interim president of the Mauritius Sugar Producers Association (MSPA) assessed the situation in these terms.

In a statement made on his own behalf and without committing the industry as a whole, Mr Dalais explained his thinking as follows: "I presume that the prime minister's remark applies to the entire sugar industry, planters included. These latter, in fact, own 45 percent of the land planted to sugarcane in Mauritius. In fact," Mr Dalais went on to say, "the right of inspection the government would like to have over the sugar industry and its production costs would make no sense if it were applied only to a half of the industry."

Mr Dalais recalled that 40 percent of the assets of the sugar industry would come to about 1.5 billion rupees. "Can the government obtain such a sum?" he asked.

Where the sugar companies are concerned, Mr Dalais expressed the view that "the government is already by far the largest stockholder in the sugar properties, for it take 23.6 percent of the export income (in the form of an export tax on sugar) at the source (representing between 260 and 300 million per year), plus 55 percent of the profits when there are any, not to mention various charges such as the processing fee and the indirect tax."

The president of the MSPA believes, moreover, that the government already exercises very broad control over the sugar industry and "participation in stockholding would not provide it with anything new in this connection. The government has often said that it favors a mixed economy. Now, within a mixed economic scheme, it does not seem that government participation in the capital of the sugar industry would be justified," he concluded.

ECONOMIC WOES OF SUGAR INDUSTRY REPORTED

Port Louis THE NATION in French 19 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

The MSPA [Mauritius Sugar Producers Association] and the Chamber of Agriculture held a joint press conference yesterday to answer the criticisms made of the sugar industry and to demand not only elimination of the export tax on sugar but also a viability study of the whole industry. The spokesmen announced the steps already taken by certain sugar mills, and said that the problem of profitability is such that they are wondering if the sugar industry can honestly undertake debts without knowing how they can be repaid. They made their pessimism clear, going so far as to say (and Mr Antoine Harel clearly specified) that the indications heralding a new devaluation of the rupee are already evident.

At the beginning of the press conference, Mr Pierre Dalais stated that the problems of the sugar industry are the problems of each citizen of Mauritius and the threat which hangs over the industry hangs over each citizen. Thus, he said, it is important to listen to and understand the message.

Acknowledged Efficiency

Mr Dalais recalled that all three of the political leaders (Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, and Mr Anerood Jugnauth) have on different occasions, and publicly, acknowledged the efficiency of the sugar industry.

Moreover, he went on to say, that industry is involved in the social development of the regions in which it is established and is playing a very prominent role therein. It places its facilities at the service of the country in the event of a hurricane, and helps with the reestablishment of public services.

For this reason, the sugar industry regards any doubt raised about its efficiency and any charge of disloyalty to the country as profoundly unjust. The sugar industry cannot but speak the language of truth. It is making every effort to ensure awareness of the economic realities of the moment and to prevent a deceptive avoidance of the problem.

Control and Information

Mr Dalais said that the sugar industry is subjected to detailed government control. The government is omnipresent in the industry--in which it is, moreover, the largest stockholder, and the freedom of action that industry enjoys is extremely limited." And he cited control of labor employment conditions, social benefits for the workers, the prices of water, electricity and fertilizers, relations between sugar mill owners and the planters, the insurance, development and social security funds, international agreements on the sale of sugar, the contribution of the industry to various institutions, and the price of sugar destined for domestic consumption.

According to Mr Dalais, the government obtains information on the finances of the industry through the tax authorities, the Control Board, and the Ministry of Finance. The sugar companies have just submitted detailed information on their finances. "There is veritable state management," he said.

The public is fully informed about the activities of the industry.

Mr Dalais reproached certain circles for their discourteous criticisms challenging the truth of the facts and the figures put forth by the industry. Now, the audits are made by professional accountants whose integrity is above all suspicion. He stated that the accounts have been examined by foreign experts.

If it is true that certain estimates were not quite exact, the sugar industry cannot be accused of manipulating these figures, because these estimates are always subject to variations.

The sugar industry has sounded a number of warnings, but if it has been able to avoid the worst, it is because it has limited the expenditures on the renewal of equipment and other essential costs.

Mr Dalais acknowledged that the sugar companies wanted to break up their land holdings in order to avoid a part of the export tax. He justified this effort with the statement that these companies were taking action against a flagrant policy of discrimination which has for years enabled the planters to avoid this tax.

Mr Dalais said that the Chamber of Agriculture has since last May been asking for the appointment of a "high-level economic study" group to examine the viability of the sugar industry. This body wants the definition of a long-term policy in order to resolve the economic problems of the industry and to strengthen and stabilize it while allowing it to remain competitive.

However, Mr Dalais does not believe that another investigation commission would reach conclusions different from those of Mr Balogh in 1962.

Quoting Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo himself, Mr Dalais said that the sugar industry has participated in development in the nonsugar sectors.

He stated that between 1971 and 1979, the use of funds was as follows: income tax, 548 million rupees; dividends, 510 million rupees; renewal (plant and equipment), 691 million rupees; investment in other sectors, 166 million rupees; and enterprise financing, 66 million rupees. This makes a total in all of 1.981 billion rupees, the amount of profits prior to amortization.

On the other hand, according to Mr Dalais, the state has taken, in the form of export and income taxes, a total of 1.162 billion. By way of comparison, the dividends account for no more than 4.8 percent of the investments on an average. In 1979 and 1980, they accounted for only 2.0 percent and 1.6 percent, respectively, while bank interest came to 10.10 percent and 12.5 percent.

Economy Measures

Some sugar mills have adopted the following economy measures:

a. suspension of irrigation on some lands;

b. reduction of the quantity of chemical fertilizer applied per arpent;

c. reduction of the area replanted in rotation;

d. rejection of any nonessential expenditure for renewal or maintenance;

e. failure to replace departing personnel; and

f. abandonment of any new diversification.

Harel's Views

The spokesmen for the sugar industry believe that they see the indications heralding a further devaluation.

When questioned on this subject, Mr Antoine Harel said that the country is continuing to live above its means. It is not possible to freeze salaries and supply prices. The situation thus appears "rather desperate," and for the sugar industry, it is worse than in 1979.

Bank Facilities

The sugar industry could obtain certain funds from the State Commercial Bank which other commercial banks refuse to grant. A takeover loan will be arranged between now and mid-September.

According to the spokesmen, the authorized deficits have been substantially exceeded and might reach 620 million rupees by 30 June 1982. They thus say that the State Commercial Bank loan would only be a temporary alleviation and will not resolve the problem of profitability. They thus insist on the elimination of the export tax which, they say, would reduce indebtedness, relaunch the economy and create jobs.

Bel Ombre Deficit

Between 1976 and 1981, the Bel Ombre sugar company paid out 107,426,253 rupees in wages, bonuses and fund contributions; 51,609,649 rupees in taxes before profit and loss balancing; and 9,227,227 rupees in interest. Dividends of 599,400 rupees were paid only in 1976.

The cumulative balance of losses came to 11,444,997 rupees in 1981, while the maximum bank deficit increased from 4,310,326 rupees to 21,762,000 rupees, and the long-term debt total increased from 1,629,502 rupees to 10,299,726 rupees.

Sugar Price Increase

From 1977 to date, the sugar price has gone up by 30 percent, but production costs developed as follows:

Wages (field and farm workers)	45.4 percent
Management salaries	21.3 percent
Supplies	91.7 percent
Amortization at replacement rate	120.0 percent
Other charges	38.0 percent
Average	75.9 percent

PORTUGUESE AMBASSADOR DISCLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY IN PRESS ALLEGATIONS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Sep 81 p 1

[Press conference by Portuguese Ambassador Jose Cutileiro in Beira]

[Excerpts] Beira (Local bureau)--"The areas that the Mozambican authorities directly in charge of cooperation regard as suitable for Portuguese cooperation and assistance are quite extensive," Jose Cutileiro, Portuguese ambassador to the People's Republic of Mozambique, emphasized at a press conference granted to the National News Agency in Beira. "Such assistance has already been demonstrated in various areas, and conferences are currently taking place with a view to expanding the areas of cooperation between the two countries," he said.

Following is the full text of the press conference granted by Ambassador Jose Cutileiro:

[Question] On his recent visit to Portugal the Mozambican minister of foreign affairs succeeded in overcoming the outstanding points that had until then remained in dispute. To what extent does your visit to the city of Beira reflect these new relations?

[Answer] His Excellency the minister of foreign affairs of Mozambique had visited Portugal only several months ago but has already made a return visit to that country, at which time he met with President of the Republic Ramalho Eanes and also conferred with his Portuguese counterpart.

The relations between the two countries are very good, and I believe these meetings are a true indication of the good status of these relations.

As for my visit to Beira, it is obvious that I would come here even if these relations were not good, for there are in Beira a consulate general, Portuguese cooperators and various interests pertaining to cooperation between Mozambique and Portugal that have existed for a number of years.

I am therefore very happy to come to Beira at a time when relations between the two countries have improved substantially, because relations between Portugal and Mozambique are of continuing mutual interest independently of any political changes. Our relations are currently very good and will continue to improve.

Areas of Cooperation and Technical Assistance

[Question] In the light of this good phase in the relations between Mozambique and Portugal, and given the fact that the city of Beira is involved in various development projects, what role--under these circumstances--will Portugal play in the development of the city of Beira?

[Answer] There are several projects under way: for example, the Textil plant at Pungoe (also involving Portuguese capital, I believe); MENAB (Naval Repairs of Beira), involving the cooperation of SETENAVE [expansion unknown]; and the "technical structures."

There are Portuguese technicians working in innumerable production units, and negotiations are under way for an agreement with the CP (Portuguese Railroad Company) but may not yet be in the stage of finalization.

I believe, however, that within the overall picture we will be studying certain other areas which the Mozambican authorities directly in charge of cooperation regard as suitable for Portuguese cooperation.

In the specific case of Beira, there is cooperation in respect to the port and something additional may be done in connection with the rail facilities, for these are two important sectors in the city.

[Question] Still on the subject of cooperation, what are the priority areas in which Portugal is participating on a large scale?

[Answer] Obviously, it is the Mozambican Government that establishes priorities with respect to development and that also decides on the countries in which it is interested for purposes of cooperation.

With respect to Portugal, during the talks last May in Maputo between the vice governor of the BM [Bank of Mozambique], Prakash Ratilal, and Portuguese secretary of state for foreign affairs Leonardo Matias a number of useful matters were discussed, with the "dossiers" of both sides being studied. A great quantity of informational material was presented and the talks were productive, as attested by an MOPH (Ministry of Public Works) project for the construction of housing (a total of 5,000 units) for members of cooperatives.

There are also plans to increase cooperation in the education sector. The rector of the university, Eduardo Mondlane, is scheduled to pay a visit soon to Portugal, where he will confer with his opposite numbers and with various entities of the Ministry of Education; in addition, there is the possibility of increased participation by Portuguese cooperators in the field of secondary education.

A number of agreements were signed recently in the field of public health, and Portuguese doctors are expected to come to Mozambique.

There is one other important sector that relates to trade: the banking sector. An agreement has been signed between the Bank of Portugal and the Bank of Mozambique for the establishment of lines of credit. There is also an agreement covering trade in a variety of goods, notably equipment. This agreement has a "ceiling" of $100 million, and by the end of this year approximately $40 million will already have been utilized.

With respect to the conditions governing trade between Portugal and Mozambique, it is extremely important that an agreement has been reached concerning an interest rate for intermediate goods including components, spare parts and accessories (to the extent that it is feasible for Mozambique to import these products), for this type of goods is of the greatest importance in view of the difficulties confronting our country's industrial establishment.

The Situation in Mozambique, and the Press in Portugal

[Question] In the light of all these cooperation projects and the improvement in relations, what is Portugal's attitude regarding the fact that a certain sector of its press is distorting the reality of the situation in Mozambique?

[Answer] This is something people have spoken to me about on many occasions, but I'll try to respond. Portugal has a legislative system that includes a free press. It is a press that is free in various respects: it is free in respect to ownership and also in respect to what it prints, which depends basically on the decisions of the editor of the concerned publication. This means that the government exercises only limited control over what is published in the press and is not interested--that is to say, none of the constitutional governments since 25 April has been interested--in restricting this freedom.

Portuguese-Mozambican cooperation is developing favorably, guided by the political will of Mozambique and the successive governments of Portugal, beginning especially with Sa Carneiro and (more openly) with Pinto Balsemao. There is, moreover, a mutual desire to increase the level of cooperation already existing in various sectors.

There are those, however, who do not welcome the improvement in relations between Portugal and Mozambique, just as there are probably some Mozambicans who do not welcome the normalization of relations. There are always those who are not pleased at these developments.

I believe, however, that this particular sector of the press exerts no influence on our higher interests in bilateral cooperation and in no way affects the progress of this cooperation.

[Question] On the 11th of this month the Portuguese daily O DIABO printed an interview with an individual who is said to be linked to the counterrevolutionary movement "Free Africa." One must ask the question: How are these individuals able to move about with impunity and propagate their hostility toward Mozambican sovereignty?

[Answer] The problems of the press in Portugal are under the jurisdiction of the common law. Since they are governed by law, there is nothing that requires the government to intervene and the government does not intervene.

As for the specific interview in question. it was stated only that the interview h' taken place in Portugal. The interview was clearly not given in Mozambique, but there has been nothing to prove that it was given in Portugal.

Foreign Policy

[Question] At this moment Namibia is the burning issue in the international forums. We would like to know your position on the Namibian problem now that this problem is once again under discussion in the form of "Resolution 435," and in particular since the South African invasion of Angola.

[Answer] The Portuguese position on the invasion of Angola is clear-cut, as has been reported.

With respect to Namibia, we support Resolution 435. We are in favor of self-determination, and this applies to Namibia as well as to other areas.

There are no new developments in this connection.

[Question] The Portuguese position concerning the South African invasion of Angola is known, but the position concerning the United States veto of the denunciation of South Africa has not yet been stated.

[Answer] Portugal does not have to express an opinion every time a question arises on the international scene. We are not currently on the Security Council and cannot cast a vote there.

As you know, however, my government was extremely clear as to our position on the South African invasion of Angola.

[Question] There is still a decolonialization problem in connection with the East Timor question, and under the provisions of international law Portugal has certain responsibilities in that dispute. What efforts is the Portuguese Government making?

[Answer] The Portuguese Government has attempted in various ways--through the United Nations--to assist in solving the problem of East Timor. It is a difficult problem, however, and the practical possibilities for effective intervention by Portugal are extremely dubious, as one can see. We are in favor of self-determination for East Timor, and during the various administrations we have succeeded in bringing the matter before the United States and discussing it with other interested parties, but here too there are no new developments.

MOZAMBICAN-SPANISH FISHING BOAT SINKS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Six dead, seven missing and nine survivors: this is the preliminary casualty list from the tragic shipwreck of the trawler "Bernardete" of the Mozambican-Spanish company PESCAMAR. The incident occurred at 1820 hours last Thursday approximately 12 miles from the marker buoy at the entrance to the port of Macuse in Zambezia Province. The only survivors of the disaster--which is believed to be the worst ever suffered in the history of the Mozambican fishing industry since independence--are now in the city of Beira.

According to information supplied to our reporters by a reliable source, the fishing boat sank with 22 persons on board including the captain and chief engineer, both of Spanish nationality. Of these members of the crew only the captain, Casimiro Gonzales Lavadores, was unable to escape from the boat. The other 21 reached the surface of the water, lifting themselves into the inflatable lifeboat and small raft (measuring 1.7 meters by 1.2 meters by approximately 40 centimeters) with which these craft are equipped.

To these instruments of salvation the crewmen of the "Bernardete" also coupled a plastic drum and a 50-kilogram bottle of gas. A few minutes later this improvised "boat" began to disintegrate and the survivors were separated, 15 on the raft and six in the inflatable lifeboat. The body of one of these six appeared later at the mouth of the Bons Sinais River, near Gazelas Beach.

In an effort to save their endangered lives, the 15 survivors on the small raft fought to protect their places on the raft (which were apparently secure). Their movements caused the raft to submerge several times, with the loss of six persons (the figure was confirmed later). This struggle for survival lasted approximately 26 hours.

Although the search continues on sea and land, hopes for finding additional survivors are very slim.

A hydrographic ship is already operating in the area, with the aim not only of determining the conditions for salvaging the "Bernardete" (something that some experts regard as dubious) but also of ensuring navigational safety by marking the site where the stricken vessel rests at a depth of more than 20 meters.

Statements made by David e Silva, the official in charge of the fishing sector, indicate that the circumstances under which the accident occurred are not very usual. The boat had completed its trawling operations and had already begun to haul in the nets. At one stage of the operation one of the nets caught on the bottom, and the trawler began immediately to list.

Before the crew had time to take any measures to control the situation the boat broke the cable stretcher on the other side, causing the cable to snap upward violently.

This caused the boat to take on water more rapidly and hastened its sinking. "All this probably took between 3 and 5 minutes," the official said.

The nine by now exhausted survivors, some of whom had abrasions from being hurled against the rocks by the fury of the sea, succeeded in reaching Zalala Beach, from where they were immediately taken to the city of Quelimane for treatment.

RESPONSIBILITY, DUTIES OF ARMED FORCES LISTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 26 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpts] The ceremonies in Maputo commemorating the 17th anniversary of the launching of the armed struggle for national liberation and Mozambique Armed Forces (FPLM) Day were presided over by Maj Gen Marcelino dos Santos, member of the permanent political committee.

At the reception offered yesterday at noon by Minister of Defense Alberto Chipande to party and government leaders and to the generals and officers of the FPLM, he stressed the meaning of this historic date and the role that must be played at this time by the people's armed branch.

"What we are today is the result of our progress, and this is why we feel at ease. True, there are still bandit groups, but this is not a problem for us. What is necessary is that we should all be aware of what our struggle was and what is our commitment to the fight for independenc e," Marcelino dos Santos said during a short speech at the reception held at the Military Club.

Lt Gen Alberto Chipande spoke of the courage and determination of the Mozambican people when, tired of being humiliated, it took arms with the certainty of being victorious since its cause was a just one.

Alberto Chipande also mentioned the imperailist strategy in our area manifesting itself through the attitude of the South African racists who are occupying part of the Angolan territory where they intend to install the UNITA and who are constantly violating our air space.

The duties of the armed forces for the next year consist of the following:

1. Intensify combat readiness so as to preserve our capability to defend our socialist homeland.

2. Reinforce vigilance and revolutionary discipline in all units and sub-units.

3. Expeditiously eliminate the armed bands operating in our country in order to guarantee the necessary peace and security for the progress of our people.

4. Respect public order and the rights of citizens, working toward the welfare of our people.

5. Combat abuses committed against the people.

6. Protect and apply systematically and surely the orientations provided by our vanguard party.

7. Eliminate traffic accidents and defeat disorganization, indiscipline and indifference in our midst.

DELAYED ARRIVAL OF SEED JEOPARDIZES GOALS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Sep 81 p 3

[Excerpts] With the beginning of the tilling season in various parts of the country that marks the opening of the 1981-1982 agricultural campaign, various entities have expressed their doubts as to reaching set goals because of the delayed distribution of seeds, something that has affected agricultural production year after year. We have been informed that the sector in charge of purchasing needed agricultural materials is organizing itself so as to be able to solve the various problems that have emerged.

Agricultural production has been affected by the delayed distribution of a number of needed items every year, especially seeds. The last campaign also witnessed the incidence of distribution of seeds of poor germinating quality or simply deteriorated.

"Despite the fact that we are still tilling, we shall not feel secure as long as the seeds have not been distributed. Year after year, during all the campaigns, seeds reach us at the wrong time, and this worried us a great deal. We are given the responsibility for reaching the set goals, but the people who distribute the needed materials do not figure in this process," a farmer of the province of Maputo told us.

Another farmer in Catuane, in the Matutuine district, told us that the variety of seed corn he had requested had been changed without his knowledge. He was instead given a large quantity of sunflower seed that he cannot use in its entirety. He added that the requests for peanut, mapira [variety of bean] and other seed have not been filled as yet. "Our supply situation is getting increasingly complicated," he stated.

IMPORTANCE OF FAMILY SECTOR IN AGRICULTURE STRESSED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Sep 81 p 3

[Article: "Recognize the Causes of the Failures, and Do Not Underrate the Family Sector"]

[Text] "We must recognize the reasons why we have been unable, to date, to solve the problem of our food requirements," Governor Armando Panguene of Cabo Delgado Province declared at a recent enlarged special session of the provincial government. The debates at the session were devoted exclusively to the preparations for the 1981-1982 agricultural campaign, with particular emphasis on the strategic products that go to supply the people.

The concern manifested by party and government structures in Cabo Delgado with respect to the products grown for consumption by the local populations has been brought about by a situation that is characterized by the decline in production recorded the past several years in almost all sectors relating to agricultural activity.

This situation has brought several regions of the province to the brink of famine, even though /neither the rains nor the shortage of implements has been the cause of the lack of success in the agricultural sector/ [in boldface], as Governor Armando Panguene has emphasized.

The balance sheet of the agricultural campaign just concluded has enabled not only the members of the provincial government but also the administrators and representatives of the ODM's [Democratic Mass Organizations]--who were also present at the session--to undertake self-criticism of the weak effort and lack of dynamism manifested in the performance of all sectors involved in agricultural activity.

The lack of such action--which requires continuity--and the consequent absence of any concrete support explains, for example, the disappearance of various agricultural cooperatives and (to put it bluntly) their complete nonexistence in the majority of the districts of Cabo Delgado Province.

It should be noted that this situation is aggravated by the problem posed by the undervaluation of the contribution made to agriculture by the family sector (which still predominates)--a fact that is reflected in the exclusion of these farmers from the balance sheets of the agricultural campaigns that have been carried out. It was brought out in the debates at the special session that this error leads to the establishment of targets for the family sector that do not correspond to the real concerns of the public.

Moreover, the weak role played by the Executive Councils of the districts--combined with the current disorganized state of the Provincial Directorate of Agriculture and its subordinate enterprises--generate a certain tendency to perpetuate the lack of initiative in the search for solutions by seeking justification in the problems of everyday.

"In other words," said Armando Panguene, /"it amounts to inability on our part to organize the population for production."/ [in boldface]

With respect to the preparations for the agricultural campaign in the governmental sectors (in particular, the Cotton Enterprise), it should be emphasized that the special enlarged session of the Provincial Government articulated the need for correct planning--beginning immediately--of the "labor force" component with a view to solving the seasonal manpower problem. According to the Cabo Delgado governor, such action would be linked to the provision of material goods to stimulate and attract the workers.

PROTESTANT CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS MEET IN MAPUTO

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The second conference of the churches of Mozambique, Angola, Cape Verde, Sao Tome and Principe opened yesterday in Maputo on the topic "the church in society," which will spend nearly a week on the role of the church in the new society.

The conference was opened in the installations of the Wesleyan Methodist Church and led by Isac David Mahlalela, secretary general of the Christian Council of Mozambique [CCM] Representatives of the World Council of Churches, the Conference of Churches of all Africa and the Christian Conference for Peace are attending.

The meeting will debate various topics, such as Christianity and Marxism, the prospects for African theology, Thy Kingdom Come and the questions of health and agriculture in the four young countries, among other humanitarian topics.

In the opening session, in which many guests from more than 11 religious sects existing in the RPM participated, Secretary General Isac David Mahlalela made a speech indicating the need for the church to take an active role in the construction of the new society. Isac Mahlalela said that the first conference of the churches of the African countries where Portuguese is used as an official language, held in July 1979 in Luanda, Angola, had adopted as a current topic of particular importance the consideration of the role of the church in the new society.

"We observed in the first conference that under the colonial government the church did not have any opportunity to carry out its task as it wished. Now with our countries independent, as a group we will study what should be the participation of the church in the development of each one of our countries," further declared the secretary general of the CCM. Also in the opening session Mahlalela declared that beginning with the first conference, the church in Mozambique dedicated itself to the evangelizing effort and has participated and continued to participate in the national reconstruction programs, "supporting the government in its program of aiding the man in need."

BRIEFS

CULTURAL EXCHANGES WITH BRAZIL--There may be an exchange of cultural delegations between Mozambique and Brazil, according to a statement by the director of cabinet of the president of the republic, Luis Honwana, in a recent interview in the JORNAL DO BRASIL. A future cooperation in this field is under study. Honwana was in Brazil as a member of the delegation headed by Minister of Foreign Affairs Joaquim Chissano. In the interview, Honwana said that this visit had been mainly political, but that a cultural exchange had also been discussed, which would focus on the areas of similarity between the two countries. Referring in particular to the theater and cinema, Honwana stressed the role played by the latter in our country as an element of communication. The minister of foreign affairs also met with Brazilian composers, architects and cinematographers, and asked composer Chico Buarque to visit our country. The invitation was accepted and the visit should take place in the course of the first semester of 1982. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 26 Sep 81 p 3]

SABOTAGE IN TRANSPORTATION CHARGED--The enormous lines we see during rush-hour traffic and at other times as well don't just happen. They are directly connected with the question perennially under discussion: the lack of transportation. As we all know, transportation is vital for the development of our country. But do we actually have a shortage of transportation facilities? The chairman of the Maputo executive council raised the question that more aware citizens had already asked themselves, but which had not been made public: sabotage! We have already referred, in these pages, to disorganization, and indiscipline, but we had actually never concentrated on the real issue. The enormous lines snaking along the avenues near bus stops are being fed by the deliberate actions of our class enemy. We wish to progress, and they are doing all in their power to destroy, to show that socialism is no good, that it does not create progress. No! Our country does not lack transportation facilities to this extent. We have twice as many vehicles now than in colonial times. It is simply incompetence, indiscipline, disorganization and sabotage that are undermining the efforts the people are making to pay for the importation of vehicles that we are destroying every day. An offensive in the transportation sector is urgently needed. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 29 Sep 81 p 2]

LACK OF TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES--The lack of transportation means and the decrease in production may affect the goals of the present agricultural marketing campaign. This conclusion was reached at the meeting of the AGRICOM state enterprise taking place in Maputo since yesterday. The meeting was chaired by Minister of Domestic

Trade Aranda da Silva and included provincial delegates, representatives of the transportation sectors, and others. Aranda da Silva noted that the objective of this meeting is to determine the situation of the present campaign, ascertain whether goals will be reached and adopt the necessary measures to ensure that they are. At the conclusion of the meeting, Aranda da Silva said that there is a lack of communication between the state agricultural production sector and the AGRICOM. He urged provincial officials of this organization to visit state farms in their provinces and become acquainted with their respective goals. The meeting will conclude today. PROMOTION COMPANY ESTABLISHED--The Council of Ministers has created the INTERMAK company, an advertising, promotion and public relations firm. It will produce all kinds of advertising material, will assist in organizing fairs within the country and abroad and will promote domestic and foreign tourism. The Council of Ministers' decree establishing the INTERMAK stipulates that this company holds exclusive rights to the production and distribution of advertising material for foreign investments related to projects in Mozambique. The same decree notes that INTERMAK has the right to participate in national or international associations or organizations, provided that such entities are related to the activities to be carried out and approved by the Ministry of Information. The creation of the INTERMAK is necessary for the organization of advertising activities aimed at promoting our national resources. It is also important for the development of our presence on foreign markets. Such activities are required by the increasing demands made by the revolutionary process and our developing economy, which are felt both in the domestic and the foreign sectors. ANTI-HUNGER DONATION--The Italian Government has donated approximately $850,000 to our country within the framework of the program of the struggle against hunger in Africa. According to the Italian Embassy in Maputo, this donation could be used to purchase trucks and spare parts and also to contract Italian technicians for maintenance and training purposes. On 21 September 40 Fiat trucks arrived at the port of Maputo. It is expected that more will arrive within the next few months. This donation is being managed by the FAO. USSR DONATION TO PRODUCTION COUNCILS--A check for more than 170 contos was handed to the production councils in Maputo yesterday by the secretary of the USSR Embassy within the framework of the agreements singed with the Soviet trade union organization. This amount will be used to hold a seminar of the production councils during the month of October in which a number of Soviet trade union officials will participate. During the ceremony, both parties expressed their desire to broaden the relations of friendship and cooperation between Mozambique and the USSR. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Oct 81 p 3]

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH ZIMBABWE--Salisbury, September 27--Zimbabwe and Mozambique signed an extradition treaty this weekend, it was announced here. Mozambican Justice Minister Toedato Linguana, who signed on his government's behalf, said the treaty marked an important step in the consolidation of cooperation between the two states. It was important not only because the two countries were fighting the same struggle, but also because of their common border, he said, suggesting the treaty was needed to counter destabilising forces threatening the region. This was an apparent reference to the clandestine opposition Mozambican National Resistance Movement (MRN) in the border region whose members sometimes cross into Zimbabwe for supplies. The strength of the South African-backed movement was recently put at about 5,000 men by Zimbabwe's Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. Minister for Home Affairs Richard Hove signed the treaty on behalf of Zimbabwe. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 29 Sep 81 p 27]

AIF CITRUS FRUIT ASSISTANCE--A loan agreement in the amount of $11 million (approximately 380 million meticals) granted to our country by the African Development Fund was ratified recently by the Council of Ministers. The loan is destined for the development of the citrus industry in our country. The People's Republic of Mozambique grows various species of citrus--principally oranges, grapefruit and lemons--and they are internationally renowned for their quality. Citrus is grown principally in the regions of Manica and Maputo and especially in the former, where enormous areas are under cultivation. Our citrus enjoys a strong guarantee of acceptance in foreign markets, with the socialist countries absorbing the greatest volume of exports: the German Democratic Republic alone imported more than 5,000 tons in 1979. During the past 2 years citrus exports have increased significantly. There have been campaigns designed to stimulate domestic citrus consumption, especially in view of the heavy crop this season, and citrus is being sold in a number of the most heavily populated districts of the capital. Because of a lack of processing and transportation facilities, and because of delays in ship arrivals and departures, large quantities of citrus fruit have been lost every year. Given its improved quality and increased quantity, our citrus is being projected as a source of foreign exchange inasmuch as it enjoys good guarantees of acceptance on the international market. PEOPLE'S TRIBUNALS STATISTICS--According to the latest statistics from the Ministry of Justice more than 200 people's tribunals have been created in the entire country: 21 district tribunals, 155 local tribunals and 70 and 32 tribunals on the levels of villages and communal districts respectively. The 10 provinces are naturally excluded from this number, as each one of them has one of those tribunals at the proper level. It has also been learned that in Nica the number of tribunals on the local level has increased with the naming and beginning to function of five more in June. An identical growth of these institutions has been shown in the province of Gaza, where in August 10 more tribunals on the district and local levels and in communal villages were added to the existing ones. The same statistics indicate that the largest percentage of tribunals created up to date belong to the Province of Nampula (with a total of 64), followed by Gaza, Manica, Cabo Delgado and Zambezia, with 36, 31 and 29, respectively. On the village level, Nampula is still in first place with 25. In the Provinces of Niassa and Zambezia these institutions have not yet been extended to the villages and communal districts, while in Maputo and Tete the lack is seen only in the rural communities. BEIRA-SENA RAILROAD ACCIDENT--A special train loaded with fuel for Malawi derailed yesterday at kilometer PT on the Beira-Sena Line near Condue, in Muanza District, Sofala Province. There were no fatalities and the extent of the damage is not yet known. According to information from an official of the rail services, we have learned that the train carried 20 tank cars of fuel, 10 of which derailed. Also, the rails were torn up over an area of 150 meters. The line is being cleared at this moment. The involving freight train Number 363 occurred around 1100 hours. The accident was the result of the critical state of the rails in general in this part of the country, which are awaiting renovation. In the meantime, a PETROMAC team is in the vicinity of the accident. It will pump out the fuel into other tank cars coming from Inhaminga. In the meantime, it is anticipated that an alternate line will be constructed in the region where the accident took place to shorten the delay in reopening a line to rail traffic. SUGAR EXPORTS JEOPARDIZED--The export of sugar and molasses produced in the sugar mills located in the central region of the country has been made difficult recently by flow problems from the factories to the port of Beira. An RM delegation in this city has revealed that to date only 12,000 tons have been exported of the 140,000-ton quota established for this year. A source in the Marromeo Sugar Mill has cautioned that the enterprise risks not being able to condition the molasses from the current harvest because of lack of cars for its shipment. U.S. WHEAT DONATIONS--A gift of 20,000 metric tons of wheat from the U.S.A, will be unloaded in the ports of Mozambique the later part of October, according to its agreement with the RPM, the American Embassy advised yesterday in Maputo. This food aid is given under the so-called Program of American Assistance Abroad as "an offering from the people of the United States of America." The donation is being carried out as a recognition of the difficulties that the country is going through as a consequence of the rains and droughts which have lashed Mozambique. Last year the United States furnished our country 59,400 metric tons, which amounted to $10 million worth of grain. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Sep 81 p 1] 12,116

KALANGULA PUZZLED BY EKD'S SUPPORT FOR SWAPO

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 17 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Helmut Matthies (FRG): "EKD's Monopoly on Opinion"]

[Text] Pastor Kalangula can no longer comprehend the German church. It supports SWAPO, a liberation movement committed to violence which aims to establish a socialist unity government, while cold-shouldering DTA, which is dedicated to peaceful change and wishes to transform Namibia/SWA into a multi-party democracy. The latest example for this narrow view of things is a letter by the president of the external affairs department of the Evangelical Church of Germany (EKD), Dr Heinz-Joachim Held of Frankfurt/Main, addressed to the EKD member churches. The text is the same as one by the Evangelical Missionary Society of Hamburg addressed to its members and others.

A joint South Africa commission, composed of members of the Frankfurt and the Hamburg groups, has determined EKD policy toward South Africa and Namibia for years. Thus, it is not surprising for the letter dispatched by both on 3 September to underscore previously adopted positions: yes to SWAPO; nay to DTA. And so, it does not matter just how much of an effort Peter Kalangula, the pastor of the Ovambo Independent Church, made when he wrote a letter to his "fellow clergyman" in the EKD trying to explain to the German church that there are other political forces in existence in Namibia beside SWAPO. He will not be able to break the monopoly on opinion jointly exercised by the Frankfurt and Hamburg groups.

Nonetheless, both groups were as alarmed by Kalangula's letter as they were by the visit of South African church figures a few months ago who had had their trip approved by neither the EKD external affairs department, nor by the South African church council which cooperates with it. It stands to reason that the two groups viewed these incidents as "flagrant violations" of their monopoly position which sets down just what the congegration is to believe a s regards South Africa and Namibia and just who is to be received and who is not.

Based on the proposition that the end justifies the means, even EKD officialdom responded to the South African church leaders' visit with a variety of intrigues. and as for Kalangula's letter, a massive counter-attack by the church ensued. This is but one more indication of how nervously they react when monopoly positions are questioned and when there is an attempt to make a few adjustments in the accepted image of South Africa and Namibia.

In his letter to the member churches, the president of the EKD's external affairs department hews to the resolutions adopted by the World Council of Churches in Dresden last August which extended recognition to no other political movement in Namibia but SWAPO. Held warns the churches of adopting "one-sided positions" such as he claims to detect in Kalangula's letter and in turn himself adopts one-sided positions which distort the facts. Here are some examples:

Several parties (which could only refer to SWAPO and NNF) did not participate in the 1978 elections in Namibia, Held says. This apparently is meant to prove how undemocratic the elections were. But a little further on, he states that both parties could have participated but preferred not to in view of their slim chances for success.

Their own explanation for opting out, however, was that they would not abide by elections called for by the South Africans. It might at any rate have provided the EKD external affairs department president with some food for thought that SWAPO was unable to prevent either the high 80 percent voter turnout or the DTA victory despite the fact that it appealed for a boycott of the election; nor was the population forced to vote, as Held erroneously maintains. Hundreds of international observers were able to determine that these elections —except for minor irregularities— were freer than in most other African nations whose election results the church customarily accepts without a word.

The Bonn government, at any rate, is more sensitive than the church, even if the latter likes to think it is more "basis-oriented" than the politicians. Bonn has for some time been giving thought to including other political movements in addition to SWAPO —such as DTA above all— as partners in the Namibian independence process. But Held makes no mention of this in his letter while stressing the fact that Bonn did not recognize the result of the 1978 election in Namibia.

Even the German Evangelical-Lutheran Church, the only church in Namibia with which the EKD has good relations and which Held visited briefly last August, is put into a bad light in his letter. Aside from the fact that it was not consulted on the text of the letter (while so-called "partner churches" belonging to the Namibian national church council are mentioned all the more often) the Evangelical-Lutheran Church is merely quoted as having protested against the "authorities" in Namibia last April. The passage quoted relates to the non-admission of a black pastor's child to a white government school which, it is said, is an indication that the "discriminatory apartheid laws" have not entirely disappeared.

Once again, Held makes no mention of the fact that the Evangelical-Lutheran Church and its members most of whom support DTA are as unhappy as president Kalangula about the remnants of racism in Namibia but are just as happy to point out progress in overcoming apartheid whenever they can. Not a word of this in the letter, either.

The one-sidedness of the letter, one would surmise, is no accident; it is symptomatic; nor can it be explained away by saying that one is sure the partner churches in Namibia will agree. At any rate, one must be aware of the fact that the oft-quoted Namibian church council even more so than the so-called partner churches make no secret of their sympathies for SWAPO. Anyone who uses the arguments of this church council in his letter, as Held does, gives an indication of whose views he really accepts.

For the EKD, it must be very unpleasant to realize that one of its organs has joined the Evangelical Missionary organization which came in for so much criticism at the 1980 synod in sending off a letter the text of which would hardly have obtained the approval of the EKD top echelons, if they had been asked to clear it. The EKD external affairs department should not surprised, if more and more voices are raised inside the EKD asking that it be relieved of dealing with Southern African issues insofar as they concern member churches and congegrations.

INTERNAL, EXTERNAL COOPERATION TERMED ESSENTIAL TO SWA INDEPENDENCE

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 22 Sep 81 p 2

[Editorial by Arthur Suren: "On Accepting Risks"]

[Text] There is an air of tense excitement surrounding the political events these days concerning the SWA/Namibia independence process. What results may be expected from the discussions in Zurich and New York ?

In Zurich, a conference is taking place behind closed doors. We have already reported on what the likely topics of discussion are. The main point is to find ways of exercising adequate control over SWAPO during the course of internationally supervised free and fair elections; to have the U.N. remain neutral; to provide for a mutually acceptable composition and style of uniforms for U.N. troops and to ensure non-intervention on the part of Angola and/or Cuba.

British sources, voicing guarded optimism, say that Namibian independence now is in sight. No firm decisions are likely to be reached in Zurich,it is said; but clarification of contentious issues may be expected.

American newspaper comments indicate that the Zurich talks might lead to imposing further restrictions on the existing U.N. plan for SWA/Namibian independence which, however, would be acceptable to South Africa and to politicians here.

According to diplomatic sources in Dar es Salaam, the chances of success of the Zurich conference are considered good. They are in fact said to be at least 50-50 in favor of South Africa's approving the implementation process on the basis of U.N. resolution 435 as amended by the United States and the Western powers. This is viewed as agreement to the proposals on the part of the "front line states."

Following his talks in Cape Town, Dirk Mudge, too, said he was optimistic regarding the apparent possibility of holding free and just elections..SWA/Namibian independence, he said, could not be put off for an indefinite period of time.

In a speech prior to his meeting with Gromyko, U.S. secretary of state Haig concentrated on economic issues. He stressed the revival of world economic growth on the basis of expanding trade, of increasing domestic and international investment and improving international cooperation in the field of food production and energy. These statements are similar to those recently made by the South African government calling for economic cooperation between South Africa and other African nations, particularly Nigeria.

Nigeria occupies a key position both by being an energy supplier of Western industrial nations and by financing and thereby exercising political influence on the OAU countries. Getting Nigeria to join the overall Western pact system, would be in the interest of both the United States and South Africa. At the same time, this would act as a political vise against Angola and yet provide better economic assistance to the country than heretofore.

South African foreign minister Pik Botha has said in so many words that the population of SWA/Namibia will have to come to terms with an internationally acceptable solution to the independence issue. This almost sounded like a threat addressed to the SWA political parties to refrain from creating further obstacles to future agreements between South Africa, the United States and the Western allies. For this reason, one may expect the talks in Zurich and in New York actually to lead to results acceptable to us.

When all is said and done, this is not really news to ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG readers. We pointed these facts out some days ago and had in fact said that this is the course events would take.

What we need is a sound political climate as soon as possible in order that we can get moving economically. We will have to part with some of our favorite conceptions regarding the independence process, if we want to attain any progress whatever and if we hope to retain the support of the United States, the Western allies and of South Africa as well. The new path toward SWA/Namibian independence that will be afforded international recognition will not be without risk for us, but it will be acceptable by and large. As always, it will then be our job to spare no effort to safeguard a democratic form of government as well as peace and freedom in our country.

CONTINUED FLUX DEEMED DETRIMENTAL TO SWA SOLUTION

[Editorial by Arthur Surén: "Target Dates of Hope"]

[Text] How many times over the past few years has there been talk of a decisive phase along SWA's path toward "independence" and how many times has an actual date for the commencement of Namibia's constitutional autonomy been set ? We ourselves have used this sort of language again and again. Now that point has been reached once more but somehow no one really believes it is true. Nonetheless:

Developments in the political arena as much as anywhere sometimes move faster and sometimes slower and sometimes they seem to take forever. But one day they may reach the point of maturing or they may break down completely— SWA stands confronted with just such a decisive moment in its history now.

For a variety of reasons, we have had occasion to remark in these pages that time does not work for SWA, if its political status remains in a continuous state of flux, since this leads to overall stagnation of our country. The vague political state of affairs puts a brake on economic initiative, on a desire to make urgently needed investments and on foreign capital influx. Recessive economic trends of this sort in turn lead to internal tensions and to political instability. This makes for a vicious circle unless some energetic breakthrough is effected in time.

It serves no purpose to analyze the internal economic and political situation in SWA further. Everyone is familiar with the details and is keeping a watchful eye on developments. The drought throughout the country makes the situation even more difficult. We urgently need a clear idea as to how we can or will go on. We cannot but welcome the possibility that there will at long last be clarity concerning the future of SWA. When that happens, a load will be taken off our minds and our hands will be free to act and to shape our lives.

It would be just as wrong in foreign policy terms to harbor the illusion that the SWA/Namibia status quo can be maintained for some time to come. The pressure from all foreign countries as well as the constraint to act on the part of all our conceivable friends in the Western camp are inexorably moving toward a solution of the "Namibia question" one way or the other.

The Reagan administration has energetically taken matters in hand. But it, too, needs economic and political victories, at home and abroad, so as to demonstrate the capacity to act and the effectiveness of the most powerful Western country. Otherwise, that would be the end once and for all for the ideals of democratic freedom and Western culture.

The United States is under time pressure, too. The President's term in office is brief. If Reagan wishes to remain successful politically, he cannot bother with details. One such "detail" within the context of overall American foreign policy is Namibia. America's patience of providing us with a protective umbrella is extremely limited. That is becoming clearer every day.

It is equally clear, as we have pointed out repeatedly, that American actions center on Angola. This, too, should be welcomed by us; because to have a large country like Angola for a peaceful neighbor or perhaps even for a friend is one of the prerequisites for positive, peaceful development of our own country.

In actual fact, the talks between the foreign ministers of the FRG and Angola point in the same direction as the policy of the United States. The public statements and the toasts on this occasion can be discounted entirely. They were mere rhetorical exercises addressed to the African public-at-large. The more loudly such "professions of faith" are voiced, the more certain one may be that they are designed to conceal the true subject of negotiations.

The Angolan government spends $4 million a day on the civil war; its public debt already runs into the billions. That is why Genscher's offer to Angola to join the Lomé agreement was no wayward gesture. While the Americans are already committed in Angola via their oil and mining companies, economic assistance for Angola by the European Community is provided through preferential treatment on the basis of the Lomé agreement. In this manner, economic dependence leads the Angolan government into the Western sphere of influence which in turn may lead to greater "compliance" and a true turning away from Moscow than could be achieved by military means.

Of course there are still a number of critical negotiating points open which stand in the way of distinct progress toward the independence of SWA. But one must start from the assumption that new and important solutions will be found in the days to come. We can only hope that these will help clear up our situation in short order. We would further hope that a breakdown in the SWA process can be avoided.

YOUTH PROBLEMS DISCUSSED AT FJAR CONVENTION

Address by Paul Verges

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 11 Aug 81 p 5

[Text] Speaking on Sunday to the young people gathered in the church square at Riviere des Galets, the secretary general of our party made a point, in his own words, of "speaking the truth."

He began by saying that the FJAR [Autonomist Youth Front of Reunion] is a living organization and the most important one representing youth. He said that the young people bring to it all of the problems and contradictions in present society, and as a function of this, it is necessary to look to the future.

Three months have elapsed since 10 May, during which the triumph of the left has already heralded the first changes in France. But what is the situation here, in Reunion, he asked the young people.

Here the right wing is still in power.

Out of 24 mayor's posts, 20 are in the hands of the right wing, along with 30 out of 36 county counsellors' posts, while 2 out of 3 deputies represent the right wing. Thus the situation is serious.

Discrimination Against Youth

Prices are rising. Dismissals continue. The young people are faced with major problems. Our comrade reviewed the most important of these. In education and vocational training, not all students can be accommodated, and the training is inadequate, incomplete and improperly oriented. Those who have been able to get an education are unemployed. It is estimated that the unemployment figure in 1990, 10 years from now, will be 100,000!

The secretary general then took up the problem of leisure time, sports, culture and emigration. A fifth of our people are in France (100,000). For the most part these are young people.

This situation is difficult for the young citizen of Reunion to tolerate. Particularly since a certain attitude has been developed which is supported by the reactionaries--discrimination against the young.

Thus when work is lacking, the young are accused of being "lazy" and nothing but "zamal smokers." They say: "Young people don't know about anything except music, dancing and so on." [I di que le jeune i kone rien que la musique, dance, etc."]

Inequities Challenged

This reality is based on an assessment which is urgently needed. Based on it, it will be easy to foresee the development of the country. A focus on social inequalities and the great imbalances in our economy is absolutely necessary. It is not possible to continue with the right-wing economic structures.

In fact, the interoccupational minimum growth wage in Reunion was 2,211 francs in July.

A construction worker earned 2,206 francs in May. Now in the government, the minimum for employees was 4,506 francs in May, i.e., 2.3 times the interoccupational minimum growth wage for construction workers. As to social allocations, a SMICARD worker in Reunion received 692 francs in June for his family.

The allocation for government employees was 2,131 francs in May, or 3 times that of the SMICARD worker.

In France, the situation is as follows:

In June, the interoccupational minimum growth wage was 2,897.57. The minimum for a government employee in May was 3,082, or only 1.06 times the interoccupational minimum growth wage. Paul Verges said that development in Reunion is not possible without challenging these inequities. This must be done even if it is necessary to confront attitudes maintained too long.

For on the job market, 37,000 persons are unemployed, and 47,000 others of working age are also without employment. Farm day laborers, household help and employees in trade are working under difficult wage conditions. The planters, most of them small holders, have very low income. All of these inequities must be dealt with.

Youth--the Vanguard

For this reason, Paul Verges urges unity--a union of all leftist forces against the right wing, including the Communist Party, the Socialist Party, the other leftist forces and organizations, and individuals.

The imminent invalidation of the election of Jean Fontaine in the second district should create the conditions for unity against the right wing. A future alliance of Daniel Cadet and Jean Fontaine must be prevented.

Our comrade went on to voice his confidence that the left wing has a majority in Reunion and that it can win power within less than 2 years. Major elections face us all--for the county councils, mayors' posts and regional councils. With proportional elections, our people have a chance to get rid of the right wing. Certain PS [Socialist Party] leaders must also abandon their alliance with the right wing.

Verges went on to denounce the proposed creation of two departments in Reunion. This contemptible political maneuver is basically directed against the Reunionese Communist Party.

Thus a stop must be put to these intrigues. Paul Verges urged young people not to wait, but to join in the struggle to combat the right wing and to exert an influence on the rightist tendencies of certain local socialist leaders.

The youth is the vanguard. The future belongs to it. As a result, it is the duty of young people to join in this struggle with the FJAR.

Verges concluded his speech by thanking all the participants and expressing satisfaction at the return of Father Reynolds, as a victory over arbitrary action.

Paul Verges then set off at the head of the parade of young people.

Speech by Ary Yee Chong Tchi Kan

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 12 Aug 81 p 6

[Text] To begin with, Comrade Ary Yee Chong Tchi Kan described the framework within which the youth meeting took place. "Since 10 May, the left wing has been in power. A new situation has been born of this major victory to which we contributed. Two and a half months later, we deemed it desirable to examine the current situation with you."

He began by assessing the policy of the right wing, and then went on to clarify the position of the FJAR with regard to the government, and to express all of the hope which the young people of Reunion invest in this change.

Underdevelopment

The policy of the right wing, based on departmentalization, has led our country into general underdevelopment--economic, social and cultural.

In the economic sectors which should provide the most jobs, there is bankruptcy. In the primary sector (crop and livestock raising, fishing, forestry) the number of permanent jobs dropped from 43,509 in 1954 to 19,890 in 1978. And this figure has dropped still further since.

Jobless individuals have sought refuge in the secondary sector: industry, trade, businesses. But there too, after a rather prosperous beginning, came the waves of dismissals, and the closing of various plants and enterprises. Eight sugar mills have closed their doors during the reign of the right wing. In 1960 [as published], only 12 new jobs were created in the industry.

This economic balance sheet for the right wing shows that in only one sector has there been an advance. And that, moreover, was based mainly on money coming from abroad, that is to say from the people of France, and not on the real development of the country. We refer to the service, i.e., tertiary sector. Our comrade said: "Out of 100 francs spent by the state in Reunion in 1979,

--68 francs went to public services;

--24 francs went to social assistance; and

--barely 8 francs went to the two other sectors, although this is where the greatest difficulties lie. Thus our economy is out of balance. And this leads to a whole series of social problems: unemployment, poverty, crime, etc."

Right Wing Rejects the People

On the political and cultural levels, the secretary general of the FJAR said: "Throughout its reign, the right wing has been notable for its refusal to let the people of Reunion be themselves and direct their country. It denies the existence of a Reunionese people. It denies our personality, our culture, our language, our thinking, our history and our traditions. These are some of the aspects of colonialism. FR3, the administration, education and the electoral fraud have been the bulwarks of this policy....The strategy is clear--block change by any means."

He went on to demonstrate the need to change all this.

However, earlier he had reminded the young people of the meaning of the FJAR battle. He took this opportunity to review the past briefly.

A Just and Noble Goal

When our former comrades established the FJAR on 20 August 1967, and when later, on 2 April 1968, they gathered together 1,000 young people in the Bernica Ravine and made public a declaration, they invested their hopes and their lives in the service of the struggle of the people and the youth of Reunion. For them, autonomy was the synonym of liberty, of democracy, of progress, of happiness, of peace. It was necessary to put an end to colonialism and the right wing which adopted its policy. This just and noble goal led the youth of Reunion for 14 years in a vast upsurge for change.

The right wing has tried everything to reduce us to nothing. It even called for the dissolution of the FJAR. However, it failed.

But the most important action it undertook was to put it in the heads of people that any change meant independence and separation. This made it easier for it to obscure the real problems, to conceal its responsibility, and above all to frighten the people of Reunion. All this was done for the purpose of discrediting our slogan despite the just nature of its content.

A Serious Lag

In opposition to this, we have explained the profound meaning of our proposal in all our reports and meetings--a special statute adapted to the economic, social, cultural, geographic and political situation of our country. This statute should be the product of the citizens of Reunion themselves, and should not be imposed by Paris. In no way would it raise the issue of our role as a part of the French republic. Better than that, improved relations based on mutual confidence and solidarity of interests would allow the true development of Reunion.

And what is the issue today, 14 years later? Everyone is talking about development. We have lost 3 precious years....

Due to the stupidity of the right wing which systematically blocked discussion, the struggle for the renewal of our country will thus require much greater effort. The situation today is very serious. In this battle against the right wing and its supports, it is sad that the political personalities which claim to be leftist have allowed themselves to be influenced to the point of making this their battlehorse, sometimes with unbelievable virulence.

During this period, the situation has not improved.

And it is under these conditions that the triumph of the left comes.

Ary recalled the battle waged by the young people of the FJAR to defeat the right wing in the last elections. The young people put all of their strength and hope in the victory of the left, leading Ary Yee Chong to state:

"Our joy overflowed on the morning after 10 May. There were celebrations everywhere. And your presence here in this vast assembly of young people shows all those who oppose us, if any such demonstration is needed, what confidence you have in seeking the necessary change. We will bring it about together."

Good Faith

Following the applause which welcomed these words, the speaker clarified the position of the FJAR in the present situation. He did so in the following terms:

The left wing is in power in France. There is every indication that it will remain so for a long time. For 15 or 20 years? Perhaps for an entire generation. We will spend all of our youth under a leftist government.

Our children will live under a leftist government.

The place of those of us who voted for the left is in the presidential majority.

Currently, this government proposes dialogue and discussion with us. There is no reason at the outset for us to mistrust it. It is an unexpected opportunity which is offered to us. With your help we will do everything to ensure that the voice of the young people is heard in the decisions concerning our country.

The leftist government speaks the language of development, as we do. Individuals, socioprofessional forces and political organizations are also urging development.

Henceforth we say that there are no remaining obstacles for real discussions making it possible to define directions and provide the young people with work. And if good faith prevails on both sides, we will proceed sooner or later toward the achievement of our ideal.

Comrade Ary explained the reasons for this urgency: 10,000 young people will leave school in a few days, the economic and administrative structures set up by the right wing have not been altered, economic chaos continues, prices are rising, purchasing power is declining and worry is developing.

The young people applauded when he said: "In no way can the left wing be held to account for these difficulties."

Appeal to the Youth

The FJAR therefore demands complete information on the recent price increases and the establishment of strict control. Comrade Ary said: "The FJAR is prepared to participate in this price control."

At the end of his address he issued an appeal to young people to rally further in the FJAR and to redouble their efforts in the preparation for future activities: registration as voters, the TEMOIGNAGES festival in December, etc.

The FJAR also proposes to meet shortly with a number of individuals and authorities, including prefect Levallois.

MINISTER ACCUSED OF PREJUDICE AGAINST BLOC DIPLOMAS

Dakar LE POLITICIEN in French No 70, Sep 81 p 8

[Text] On Monday, 27 July 1981, Alioune Diagne Mbor, Senegalese minister of public offices, work and employment, was the guest of the ORTS [Senegalese Radio and Television Office] on its "Dossiers in Hand" program. Listeners were able to judge the performance of the man responsible for supervision of the most vital sector of Senegal's economic and social life: the employment sector, whose crisis is steadily growing worse.

In his response to a question about the Senegalese trained in the major schools and universities of the Eastern countries, particularly the USSR, Diagne, thinking he would discredit training in those countries, revealed crass ignorance of the situation, ignorance that is inexcusable for a minister in charge of employment and therefore responsible, to a certain extent, for the policy of integrating young graduates into production.

We are not going to waste our time convincing Diagne of the carelessness, irresponsible and insulting nature of his remarks. Perhaps the minister of employment takes television viewers for dummies when he tries to make them believe that Senegalese students in Eastern countries spend most of their time learning the language of the host country (2 years), ideology (2 years) and that only then do they have 2 years of real training in a university discipline, consequently returning to Senegal without anything in their brains but Marxism-Leninism.

The Senegalese or other foreigners would truly have to be low to accept such a university program bordering on whimsy.

Whether it be at the Patrice Lumumba University, the Friendship of Peoples University, the Karl Marx University in Leipzig or any other major school in an Eastern country, education is as serious as in the Western countries. In order to have an idea of the value of training in countries in the East, Diagne would do well to question the organizations, administrations or establishments that use the capabilities of students trained in Moscow (Patrice Lumumba University or elsewhere) and in the Eastern countries. Despite certain absurd prejudices concerning them, prejudices that can only be explained by an elementary, idiotic anti-Sovietism or anticommunism, to our knowledge, these individuals who once studied in the Eastern countries demonstrate obvious competence in their work and if it were not for the handicap resulting from the prejudices in question that have no basis, they would have the same chances as their peers trained in the West of gaining access to the highest leadership and management posts.

Perhaps the day when people like Diagne are no longer in high spheres of government, arousing a shameful policy of discrimination toward young people trained in the countries of the East, then these young people will no longer experience certain difficulties in their professional careers.

The capricious views of Diagne, who, we hope, was not speaking on behalf of the Senegalese Government, demonstrate the mingling of a partisan political spirit in the evaluation of scientific training.

The question for us is to understand how a high official with such pedestrian reasoning can, we do not say help to resolve, but correctly pose the problem of employment in Senegal! How can such an official preside over the destiny of such a complex and vital sector as employment, whose supervision should logically be entrusted to a competent, lucid and intelligent official, not to an individual who is ignorant of even the overall factors that would make it possible to proceed to the first analyses concerning the sector in question?

We do not mean that Diagne does not know the overall employment statistics in Senegal or that he has mastered them. Viewers of the famous Monday he spent on the ORTS and the Senegalese Government were able to see themselves and decide whether or not the national employment (and unemployment) sector is in danger with the "brain" that now heads it.

Students Trained in USSR

By way of information, we are giving above [not reproduced], as an example, the content of the university program in economics at the Friendship of Peoples University in Moscow. The subjects indicated constitute the program for a preparatory period during which one studies the Russian language and 4 years of university studies. This program could be appreciated by comparing programs at the University of Dakar and in Western schools, which seem to be the only ones valid for the Senegalese minister of public offices, work and employment.

REASONS FOR VALDIODIO'S RESIGNATION FROM MDP NOTED

Dakar LE POLITICIEN in French No 70, Sep 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] No Senegalese political leader has ever suffered such a resounding slap in the face as the one Mamadou Dia, former prime minister, now out of work, and founder of the MDP (Democratic People's Movement for Self-Management Socialism) recently endured: Nine high-level officials in his party, including his own deputy and former comrade in prison, Valdiodio Ndiaye, handed in their resignations and all on the same day.

It was the first time in the political history of Senegal that an eminent leader had ever had to face such mortification. It was undoubtedly because Mamadou Dia is the uncontested holder of the monopoly over the exclusives and big "firsts" in our country:

He was the first head of the Senegalese Government to fire over 60 percent of the civil servants, for striking.

He was the main protagonist in the outlawing of the Senegalese communist movement in 1961 and today, 20 years later, he is the main and unconditional ally of the revisionist fringe of that same movement, controlled and manipulated by Soviet social imperialism.

Our territorial Mamadou Dia does not have exclusive rights over only three things. There are other tricks in his bag and the Senegalese people will not take long to appreciate their succulence and originality.

The simultaneous and individual resignation of nine of his principal aides is but a taste of the spectacle which the Great Magician, a renowned political sleight-of-hand artist straight out of the spiritual depths of Kedougou, is planning to stage on the national scene. Why not?

Did Senghor not invent the concept of negritude [blackness]?

Was he not the first black chief of state to give up the "delights" of power?

It is therefore legitimate that Dia should decide to show us what he is made of.

Film of Resignation

It should be pointed out at the outset that a conflict had been growing within the MDP from the very time of its formation, a conflict that mainly pitted Mamadou Dia against his first deputy, lawyer Valdiodio Ndiaye, who had been conspicuous by his absence from the political scene since his release in 1974.

"Valy," as he is called in his native base of Sine-Saloum, is first of all a man of principle. He does not play games with his conscience and one must do him the justice of mentioning his loyalty to his options, his attachment to his ideological convictions and the greatness with which he has always transcended personal quarrels and petty debates.

In addition, Valy has always refused to be anybody's flunkey.

It was therefore easy to predict that sooner or later, such a man would move away from the movement headed by Mamadou Dia because for Dia, not only do principles have no value, but also and above all, the questioning of his ideas by his peers is simply inadmissible.

And Dia has too many ideas, preposterous sometimes, infantile at others, and generally bizarre.

LE POLITICIEN prints here as an exclusive one of the bright ideas of the head of the MDP, which was at the root of the resignation of Valy and eight other equally influential members of the party's leadership.

But first of all, it should be recalled that from the very beginning, Valy was hostile, to the great disappointment of Mamadou Dia, to the participation of the MDP in the 1983 legislative elections. He thought it was ridiculous for a self-respecting party to try to take power after only 2 years of existence.

He supported abstention, lacking a tactical alliance with the Socialist Party, from which the MDP emanated.

But Dia, hearing only his own counsel, remains convinced that at the end of the 1983 election, the Senegalese people will sweep him into the presidency.

In short, every person is free — following the example of Laye Scienzeco — to harbor his own illusions. That is human. And Valy, given the stubbornness of the leader, finally threw up his hands, awaiting the verdict of history.

Things remained there until the Senegalese Government, in order to face the greatest challenge put before our country, decided to intervene in Gambia...in order to restore order and the legal government.

That is when Dia saw red. Without consulting any member of his party -- contrary to what he claims -- he went to the Palace of the Republic, to yell at Abdou Diouf.

The president of the republic was in a meeting of the High Defense Council. Dia was not on the schedule, but he stood up and demanded to be seen immediately. Out of respect and courtesy, Abdou had to suspend the meeting to receive the illustrious patriarch.

Abdou: "But Old Man, is it so urgent that you cannot wait until tomorrow? I would gladly meet with you in the morning."

Dia: "There is no old man or son here. I am a citizen and I do not agree."

Abdou: "But Old Man...."

Dia: "Stop that. You have no right to send our children to Gambia. The people (whom I embody) do not agree. I will give you 24 hours to get your troops out of Gambian territory. Otherwise, you will see! So there!"

It was a very brief meeting and Dia, out of his head, left, slamming the door behind him. He was proud of his boldness and happy with his temerity.

That same day, he wrote an incendiary bulletin all by himself, denouncing "the Senegalese aggression" and demanding the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of our troops from Gambian territory.

That was the last straw, for Valy did not like the fact that Dia should act in such a cavalier fashion, even if he were Prime Minister Mawdo.

After vehement protests, he finally submitted his resignation, setting off the chain reaction. But Dia is not a man to let himself be undone by the resignation of nine of his close aides. His sole objective is 1983.

Backed by the support of the revisionists and adventurers of every stripe, he already harbors the hope of finding himself soon at the palace on Avenue Roume.

Good luck, Old Man!

ANDE SOPI CONTINUING PUBLICATION--In the No 68 edition of LE POLITICIEN, we announced the approaching end of publication of the newspaper ANDE SOPI, headed by Mamadou Dia, former president of the Council, and his Marxist friends, Magatte Thiam and Samba Dioulde Thiam. This seemed to us to be inevitable after the establishment of DAAN DOOLE, central organ of the PIT [Independence and Labor Party], to which Magatte Thiam and Samba Dioulde Thiam belonged, and the future publication of the newspaper YAAKAR of the Democratic People's Movement (MDP) of Dia. The latter denies this, stating that the existence of central organs of the PIT and the MDP does not bring into question the platform of alliance around which he and his two friends decided to work in putting out ANDE SOPI. This monthly "remains the organ of patriotic unity." ANDE SOPI therefore lives. [Text] [Dakar LE POLITICIEN in French No 70, Sep 81 p 3] 11,464

INTERREGIONAL TRADE COOPERATION SUPPORTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 2 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Editorial]

[Text] The initiative taken by the Nigerian Export Promotion Council has all the blessings of member-states of ECOWAS. The idea is to expose the Nigerial Market--or particularly the Made in Nigeria products to West African States.

This initiative has been taken by Nigeria which is the largest and richest in the sub-region to implement the spirit of Ecowas into practical terms, interregional trade.

The mission presently in this country is an eye-opener to other member states of the ECOWAS and this business of exposing what can be manufactured in one member state to the other, should be followed up very seriously.

We see few important issues which should be examined carefully side by side with such expositions. The matter of foreign exchange, transportation and mainly the quality of the goods manufactured in this particular region for interregional trade.

In most parts of the West African region, foreign exchange problem is killing their economy and for now due to world recession, no way has yet been found to ease the situation.

Transportation system has created problems in the region. It is easier to import from and export to Europe goods rather than trade within states in this sub-region. It is easier to travel to and from Europe or any other part of the world than within the sub-region.

The question of quality of the products is the main factor. Africa is in a rush for development, it cannot afford to accept second hand products or manufactured products which are not up to any standard.

Of late most goods produced in the sub-region are far below any standard.

Developed countries now seem to bundle their inferior technology to this part of the world only to satisfy the immediate needs of our peoples.

Even some of the goods which they export to us are of inferior quality--goods which are not even sold in their markets.

So if nations in the sub-region are prepared to venture into interregional trade, they should endeavour to certify that they have the best imported technology and know-how to meet the hard demands of our peoples.

As Africans we will always appreciate and be proud of any "made in Africa products" of high quality.

Nigeria Export promotion Council has set the pace. What this sub-region needs and most urgently is the total unequivocal cooperation of member states of ECOWAS to standardise their products which will compete with made in any where in the world [sic].

We wish the Nigerian Export Promotion Council well.

RELATIONS WITH CHINA PRAISED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Chinese Ambassador, Mr Tian Ping has said that the diplomatic relations established between China and Sierra Leone during the last ten years has been developed and consolidated.

Speaking at a reception to mark the 3rd anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China Mr Tian said that China has pursued an independent socialist foreign policy, upheld the five principles of: peaceful co-existence, and established diplomatic relations with 124 countries.

China, he said, also had promoted trade, economic and cultural exchanges with a number of other countries.

The Ambassador said that China strongly condemned the policy of apartheid pursued by the racist regime of South Africa and its illegal occupation of Namibia. Mr Tian said that his Government would continue to implement the foreign policy set up by the late Chairman Mao Tse Tong and Premier Chou Enlai.

He pledged Chinese support to Third World Countries, as China belonged to the Third World.

He said his country has made great success in its socialist construction by setting up an independent and fairly comprehensive industrial base and an economic system that has remarkably improved the livelihood of Chinese.

In a toast to the government, the Ambassador said that the Chinese government and people commended the achievements that the Sierra Leone Government and people have made under the leadership of President Siaka Stevens in safeguarding national independence.

He paid tribute to Dr Stevens invaluable contribution to the justice cause of the African people and the defence of world peace.

In reply, the acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Sahr Fellie-Faboe, said that during these ten years of diplomatic relations, Sierra Leone had received a physical and tremendous change in her development programme.

Sierre Leoneans, he said, have the greatest respect for the Chinese and would always remain grateful.

Mr Fellie-Faboe said that inspite of distance, the Chinese were always determined to give their moral support in the struggle of Africans particularly to the policies of the OAU and the UN against apartheid.

The Acting Minister said that China with her modern industrial and military technology, had become one of the greatest nations.

On behalf of President Stevens, the Government and people of Sierra Leone, he wished the Chinese success in their endeavour for world peace.

SHIPMENT OF RICE FROM JAPAN EXPECTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 5 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] Japan is to supply Sierra Leone 2,000 tons of rice under an aid agreement signed in Freetown at the weekend.

The 1,169,000 dollar grant also cover freight from Japan. The acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Sahr Randolf Fillie-Faboe, signed on behalf of the government and the Japanese Charge d'Affaires, M. Hiroski Funakoshi, on behalf of his government.

Mr Fillie-Faboe expressed profound gratitude for the interest shown by the Japanese government in the affairs of this country.

He also mentioned Japanese Scholarship Award for Sierra Leoneans to train in various fields in Japan.

The Acting Minister wished Japan every success in its industrial developmental efforts. He was confident that the friendly relations already existing between the two countries would be further strengthened and at the same time Japan would contribute to the social and economic development of Sierra Leone.

The Japanese Charge d'Affaires Mr Funakoshi expressed pleasure in signing the agreement and registered his government support for further developmental assistance to Sierra Leone.

The ceremony was witnessed by the Deputy Managing Director Sierra Leone Produce Marketing Board, Mr Y. T. Sesay and Mr J. A. M. King of the Ministry of Trade and Industry.

SWEDEN AIDS RURAL TRAINING PROJECT

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 3 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Sweden has pledged 292,500 U.S. dollars towards a rural agricultural training scheme for women.

The scheme will provide facilities for the design, development and testing of appropriate agricultural tools for women and training in simple soil conversation methods.

An additional 742,000 dollars is required to finance the scheme to last three years.

The scheme will also provide a revolving fund to co-operatives to buy tools and other agricultural inputs.

An Identification Mission led by Professor Constantine Safilio from the Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO) has had discussions with the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry Dr A. Joe Jackson on their preliminary findings.

The Minister said that the Mission was an outcome of the world conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development which called for special attention to be given to women as a group.

Dr Joe Jackson said that women could serve as a vital link in the transfer of technology.

The scheme, he said, would have an impact on rural development as the functional literacy level of women would be increased.

The Minister thanked the FAO for its continued goodwill to Sierra Leone.

The mission includes Dr Tommy of Njala University College and Mr Lovel Thomas of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry.

PROGRESS OF MANO RIVER UNION PRAISED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 5 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The admission of Guinea into the Mano River Union has been described as one of the most significant developments in inter-governmental co-operation in West Africa since the economic union was formed in 1973.

The Secretariat in a statement marking the Union's eighth anniversay, outlines some of its achievements:—

--The abolition of tariff on goods produced in member countries under the Customs Union. This will enable all manufactured goods to enter member states without import duties and other charges.

Completion of feasibility studies for the Mano River Basin Development Project.

--Studies on Adaptive Research and increase in protein intake.

--Establishment of an Industrial Development Unit financed by the EEC.

--Establishment of a Union Forestry Training Institute at Bomi Hills in Liberia.

--Establishment of the Telecommunications Postal Training Institute.

The statement declared that the Union was committed to serve its people and improve the quality of life through its socio-economic projects.

Meanwhile the Liberian Ambassador in Sierra Leone, Mr Joseph Morris has spoken of the importance of regional co-operation within the Mano River Union.

Addressing a new group of students of the Mano River Union Telecommunications and Postal Training Institute during a courtesy call at the weekend, the Ambassador said that by enrolling in the Institute, the students were contributing towards the cooperation that already existed among members countries of the Union.

The Vice Principal of the Institute, Mr William Dennies who introduced the students to the Ambassador said the Institute would do its best to make the students efficient and productive.

A Post Master Training Course and an International and Local Post Office Accounts course are being run concurrently at the Institute which is located in Freetown. Both courses will last for three months.

This group of trainees which comprises nine Liberians and ten Sierra Leoneans is the eleventh since the training programme started in 1978.

TOGOLESE IN EXILE REPORT FORCED MIGRATION

Villages Razed

NC251220 Paris AFP in English 1202 GMT 25 Sep 81

[Text] Paris, 25 Sep (AFP)--A Togolese opposition movement-in-exile asserted today that soldiers had razed villages, killed livestock and beaten peasants to clear them off land earmarked for the extension of a national park in the West African state.

The Togolese Democratic Movement charged in a statement here that the Lome government had recently ordered the evacuation of an entire area adjacent to the Keran reserve, in northern Togo.

In a "commando operation led by a high-ranking officer, all the villages were destroyed (and) recalcitrant farmers were brutalized by police and soldiers and saw their fields and cattle destroyed."

The statement said some villagers fled into neighboring Ghana and others to Mango, in Togo, where they remained homeless and were being fed by local authorities.

The opposition group also said that 60 soldiers were posted around the seized land with orders to shoot on sight if anyone tried to re-enter it.

Government Denies Charges

AB252115 Paris AFP in French 1812 GMT 25 Sep 81

[Excerpt] Lome, 25 Sep (AFP)--The development of the Keran game reserve in north Togo has never led to the harassment of the people in this region, authoritative sources pointed out Friday in Lome.

The allegation of the Togolese Movement for Democracy (MTD, an opposition movement in exile) that Togolese soldiers have asked people to evacuate the region and have destroyed it is unfounded, the same sources added.

The decision to create the Keran reserve was made many years ago and the Togolese Government issued a decree in 1969 providing for its development while new measures were taken in 1977, it is noted. During that period, the inhabitants of the region were gradually evacuated.

It was when it was discovered last May that a network of poachers killed as many as 80 animals every night that the police evacuated the people who had slipped into the Loti Valley, a small river across the Keran, under the cover of engaging in fishing.

MINISTER DISCUSSES NEW RAILROAD PROJECTS, RAN

AB291221 Ouagadougou Domestic Service in French 0730 GMT 29 Sep 81

[Excerpts] The head of state, Col Saye Zerbo, yesterday presided over an extraordinary cabinet meeting which was mainly devoted to the ways and means of implementing the Ouagadougou-Tambao-(Tinrasan) railroad project. As everyone knows, this project is one of the priority projects the Military Committee of Recovery for National Progress [CMRPN] intends to realize at all costs. Concerning the deliberations of this extraordinary cabinet meeting, the office of the secretary of state at the presidency in charge of information has issued the following communique. It is read by Simon Ilboudou.

[Begin recording] The cabinet held an extraordinary session at 0900 on Monday, 28 September 1981 under the chairmanship of the head of state and chairman of the CMRPN, Col Saye Zerbo. Of all the points on the agenda, the only one discussed was that of the Ministry of Public Works, Transport and Urbanism relating to the choosing of the successful tenderers for the contracts of construction of the Ouagadougou-Kaya Railroad. According to the dossier submitted by the ministry, a commission met on 16 September 1981 to examine the tenders of the various enterprises. [End recording]

Concerning this railroad project which is expected to be launched within a few days, the minister of public works, transport and urbanism, Capt Gaston Kani Gnoumou, yesterday made a report to the press. With the minister at this press conference were his permanent undersecretary, Mr Franka Kini, and the ministry's permanent secretary, Mr Walla Kousenou. Following are the proceedings at this press conference:

[Begin recording] [Question] Mr Minister, on behalf of all my colleagues from the various press organs represented here, I wish to thank you for agreeing to receive us in order to give us some explanations about certain projects concerning your department. It seems that the extraordinary cabinet meeting held today was devoted to the problem of the Tambao railroad project. My first question is this: What is the exact situation?

[Answer] The Tambao project formerly comprised the Tambao railroad project, the Tambao mines, the clinker crushing plant and the (Dinrasan) Dam. Our partners for the railroad project were France, West Germany, Japan and some other countries. It was formerly planned that the Tambao mines would bear the cost of the railroad project and this was the main reason for its failure. In 1977, the government was compelled to relaunch the Tambao project with the help of other partners. Despite this, the project again failed.

In view of the importance of these projects for all the Upper Voltan people—not only economically but also for other reasons—the CMRPN Government decided that we should urgently implement the Tambao projects. It was therefore necessary to adopt a new philosophy and we thought that it was necessary to separate the Ouagadougou-Kaya-Dori-Tambao railroad project from the Tambao manganese mining project. In July this year, consultations were held concerning the start of the Ouagadougou-Kaya section of the railroad. I must add that the division of the railroad into many sections forms part of our philosophy: the division of the project into sections will facilitate for us the search for the sources of finance. The tenders have been studied; recommendations have been made in accordance with the regulations and the government today made a decision concerning these recommendations. I can tell you that the railroad project, particularly the Ouagadougou-Kaya section, will be launched on 1 October.

[Question] My question is this: In view of the numerous (?problems) affecting it, do you think we can really construct this road up to Kaya?

[Answer] Sincerely, I think that we can. This is because the study of the tenders indicates that the total funds needed for the construction of the Ouagadougou-Kaya section amount to 6 billion CFA francs. During their meeting with the planning minister, this amount was promised as a contribution by local financial sources. In any case, I am sincerely optimistic concerning the successful completion of this section.

[Question] We know that the conditions have now been fulfilled for the launching of the Ouagadougou-Kaya railroad project. But when will the road reach the town of Kaya?

[Answer] The entire project must be coordinated, but I think the Ouagadougou-Kaya railraod section will not take more than 15 months.

[Question] Mr Minister, there have been persistent rumors that all is not well at the RAN [the railroad company jointly owned by Upper Volta and Ivory Coast]. And it seems that the Tambao project is responsible for the atmosphere now prevailing at the RAN. It is even being rumored that the Ivory Coast and Upper Volta may separate. If this ever happens, one wonders whether the Tambao project will not be compromised.

[Answer] Yes, there have been persistent rumors from Abidjan tending to make us believe that the Ivory Coast plans to take measures to divide the railroad network into two national Ivorian and Upper Voltan networks whose operation could be ensured through negotiations as it is done elsewhere. As far as we are concerned, we are surprised by this rumor. As you know, the head of state was in Yamoussoukro on 15 September and no communique was issued concerning a possible abrogation of the railroad accord. Besides, when replying to questions by newsmen at the airport, the head of state explained that during the discussions, the two heads of state [Ivorian and Upper Voltan] decided to set up a study commission in order to find ways and means of ensuring maximum profits for the RAN. As the transport minister of the CMRPN Government, I have not received any instruction connected with the division of the network. We are therefore very much surprised. But these rumors are becoming increasingly persistent and precise. The Upper Voltan authorities have taken measures to ask the brotherly state of Ivory Coast for explanations about this affair.

Meanwhile, we believe that the RAN continues to be operated in conformity with the 1960 accord. However, the Upper Voltan authorities would be ready if our Ivorian brothers find it necessary and profitable to divide the network into two. This is all I can tell you. [End recording]

TEN COOPERATION AGREEMENTS WITH FRANCE SIGNED

AB301607 Ouagadougou Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Communique issued in Ouagadougou on 30 September on the meeting between Upper Volta Foreign Minister Col Felix Tientaraboum and Gabriel (Masa), head of the French cooperation mission--read by Louis-Dominique Ouedraogo, director of Bilateral Cooperation for Upper Volta]

[Text] On 30 September 1981, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Col Felix Tientaraboum, and the head of the French cooperation mission, Gabriel (Masa), signed in the minister's office 10 financial agreements providing for a French Government grant of 1,974,500,000 CFA francs to Upper Volta within the framework of the Aid and Cooperation Fund. The money will be used for the realization of the following projects:

Agreement No 180 for the program of renovation of the Saria and (Tarakoba) agricultural research stations: 50 million francs.

Agreement No 181 concerning the feasibility studies on the project of construction of a (?bridge) at the Sourou junction of the Black Volta: 60 million francs.

Agreement No 182 concerning the 10th phase of the Volta valley's development project: 420 million francs.

Agreement no 183 on the creation of a bureau of statistics and documentation at the Department of Animal Husbandry and meat industries: 35 million.

Agreement No 184 concerning the third phase of the program of equipment supply to the Department of Public Works: 230 million francs.

Agreement No 235 on feasibility studies of the project of the Bobo Dioulasso-Dedougou Road: 225 million francs.

Agreement No 236 on the second phase of the program of equipment supply to the Bobo Dioulasso radio station and the installation of transmitters at (Antibe): 235 million francs.

Agreement No 302 on the construction of an institute of technology and a higher school of economic sciences and commercial studies at the University of Ouagadougou: 344.5 million francs. Of this amount, 150 million francs will be used for the Institute of Technology, 120 million francs for the higher school of economic sciences and commercial studies, 35 million francs for equipment and 39.5 million francs for various works.

Agreement No 301 concerning the program of extension and equipment of the Bobo Dioulasso research laboratories: 50 million francs.

Agreement No 300 concerning the 1981-82 phase of the village water supply project in the Sahelian zone: 325 million francs.

The minister of foreign affairs and cooperation was accompanied by Ambassador Michel Compaore, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation and Ambassador Louis-Dominique Ouedraogo, director of Bilateral Cooperation. The head of the French cooperation mission was accompanied by the mission's adviser, Mr (Declan).

SOVIET EXPERT VIEWS AFRICAN ARMS PURCHASES

Paris AFRIQUE DEFENSE in French No 42 Sep 81 p 32

[Text] Arms expenditures are an obstacle to the economic and social development of African countries, Anatoliy Gromyko, director of the Soviet African Institute and son of the Soviet minister of foreign affairs, stressed.

In the periodical "International Life" Anatoliy Gromyko wrote that "the arms race in Africa is progressing at a faster pace than in the developed countries." Between 1970 and 1979 the average annual increase of military outlays in African states stood at 5 to 8 percent and in countries of southern Africa it was 15.5 percent, according to the Soviet expert.

For Anatoliy Gromyko "some countries increase their arms purchases because of imperialist plans to involve them in military and political blocs being created on the African continent under the aegis of the United States and NATO countries."

These factors "play a negative role in the consolidation of peace and stability in Africa. They weaken the unity of African countries..., the most effective weapon of the countries of the continent in their struggle against imperialism and for social progress," in the opinion of Anatoliy Gromyko.

The director of the Soviet African Institute continued: "In addition to the danger involved for peace and stability on the continent, the arms race results in a drop in the funds allocated for economic and social development of the African states." Anatoliy Gromyko noted that virtually none of the African states produce any weapons but purchase them at high prices essentially in the countries of Western Europe and the United States. This fact places them in an "additional state of dependence vis-a-vis imperialism and its neocolonialist policy," according to Anatoliy Gromyko.

Refuting Western assertions regarding the Soviet Union's "participation" in the arms race in Africa, the author noted that "Soviet weapons in Africa as in other regions are delivered exclusively for the defense of the progressive revolutionary gains of the African peoples and they are slated for their liberation struggle. The Soviet Union would immediately halt any military assistance to those regimes which, motivated by a chauvinistic spirit, would deviate from the progressive path of development."

NEW WEST AFRICAN MUTUAL DEFENSE PACT ASSAYED

Paris AFRIQUE DEFENSE in French Sep 81 pp 52-54

[Article by G. Guyon: "Moustapha Niasse Says That ANAD Is An Umbrella, an Instrument of Deterrence"]

> [Text] In the presence of the representatives of the member-states of the CEAO [West African Economic Community] and the delegate of Togo, the Senegalese minister of state for foreign affairs, Moustapha Niasse, opened on 21 July 1981 at the International Trade Center of Dakar the fifth ministerial session on ANAD [Nonaggression and Mutual Defense Pact].

After setting up the new office, presidency of which was assigned to Senegal for a year (Togo was made vice president and Ivory Coast the secretary), the delegations went to work on the elaboration of the draft implementation treaty to be submitted at the summit meeting of the heads of state of the CEAO and Togo to be held in Dakar in October 1981. This draft treaty should enable ANAD to move to its active stage.

Opening the meeting, president Moustapha Niasse noted:

The extensive participation and high-level representation of the member-states in ANAD unquestionably indicate our attachment to the ideals of peace and solidarity which prompted our heads of state to sign in Abidjan on 9 June 1977 a nonaggression and assistance pact in the field of defense. Present-day international relations are especially marked by the tendency of states, whether in groups or individually, to resort to violence for the settlement of their mutual disagreements or for the realization of their aspirations. The efforts which the international community has been deploying for so long, notably since 1928 with the Kellogg-Briand Treaty calling for the renunciation of war as an instrument of foreign policy and especially since the signature of the United Nations Charter, have failed to bring about a situation where armed violence does not too frequently disrupt peace, so necessary to any developmental effort.

The Charter of the OAU, by following the precepts of the constituent document of the United Nations, formally asserts the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes through negotiation, mediation, conciliation, or arbitration. It prohibits without qualifications political assassination as well as subversive activities pursued by neighboring states or any other states. Another of its fundamental principles is noninterference in the internal affairs of states. This means that the Organization of African Unity has clearly decided to oppose violence as an instrument of foreign policy.

By signing the [ANAD] agreement of 9 June 1977, our heads of state and government emulated, at the subregional level, the United Nations and the OAU. This is in accordance with international law and parallels the deep-rooted aspirations of the peoples. It is the only way for the strengthening and cohesion of our countries with a view to their gradual development.

ANAD is not a defense pact implying the integration of the armed forces of the member-states but rather an agreement whose essential goals are as follows:

1. To avoid resorting to force to settle problems involving the signatory states;

2. To commit member-states to mutually help each other in case of aggression;

3. To seek greater effectiveness in the field of defense through the pooling of the member-states' resources and a coordination of these means;

4. To establish cooperation in the field of defense based on equality and mutual interest, especially in the fulfillment of duties involved in the signing of the agreement and the draft treaties which will result from it;

5. Finally, to insure the individual and collective security of the states concerned.

The need for such a legal instrumentality is real. The economic and social integration of the African states, the fundamental goal of our organization, the CEAO, would be a mythical dream without the addition of such an instrument at ANAD to insure, under all cirucmstances, security and stability in our states. However, while the framework agreement of ANAD was signed by the heads of state and government of CEAO members and Togo as far back as 9 June 1977, its draft implementation treaty has still not seen the light of day. It was redrafted on two occasions at the council of ministers' meeting in Nouakchott in 1979 and in Niamey in October 1980. It should be mentioned that the discussions which have been going on since 1977 have been difficult, laborious because the subject matter involved--defense--has unquestionable political, strategic, legal, and economic implications, especially for the new, economically underprivileged countries.

The present meeting should once again examine ANAD's draft implementation treaty. But this time the task seems to be easier. Indeed, the experts of the member-states, in accordance with the recommendation of ANAD's Second Conference of Heads of State and Government, met in Abidjan on 12, 13, and 14 May 1981 and, in consultation with ANAD's general secretary, made appropriate changes and added clarifications likely to make the draft treaty more "in line with the political and security aspirations of the member-states."

In any case, we must fully assume the historic responsibility that falls on us during the present meetings. This is a fearful duty because our heads of state are mindful of the results that will crown our efforts. As far as I am concerned, there is no doubt that we shall know, just as our heads of state did in 1977, how to implement our concrete resolve of unity and cooperation and mark our determination to assume our own destiny by adopting, at the conclusion of this Dakar meeting, the draft implementation treaty of ANAD's framework agreement. This agreement is an umbrella, an instrument of deterrence which our states give each other. It is urgent and necessary to organize the collective security of the member-states. Our heads of state so decided and will allow us to implement this decision by approving the draft implementation treaty.

This meeting ended on 22 July 1981 by approving the basic documents included on its agenda as indicated by the final communique which stated: "The Fifth Council of Ministers' meeting of the nonaggression and defense assistance agreement among the CEAO member-states and Togo was held in Dakar, Republic of Senegal, on 21 and 22 July 1981. Attending this council of ministers' meeting were the following delegations:

For the Republic of the Ivory Coast: Jean Konan Banny, minister of defense and civil service; Manouan Adonit, ambassador, director of political affairs at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Gen Zeze-Baroan Bertin, chief of staff of the Ivorian armed forces.

For the Republic of Upper Volta: Col Felix Tiemtarboum, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation; Some Yorian Gabriel, general secretary of national defense and general secretary in the Ministry of National Defense; Maj Lompo Karim, director of studies and planning, representing the chief of staff of the Upper Voltan army.

For the Republic of Mali: Col Filifing Sissoko, member of the central executive office of the UDPM [Democratic Union of Malian People], representing the minister of national defense; Alioune Blondin Beye, minister of foreign affairs and international cooperation; Maj Diarra Cheikh Oumar, representing the chief of staff of the Mauritanian [sic--read, Malian] army.

For the Islamic Republic of Mauritania: Mohamed Ould Sidi, deputy minister of foreign affairs and cooperation; Mohamed Ould Bouh, general secretary in the Ministry of Defense; Administrative Officer-Maj Sao Samba, representing the chief of staff of the Mauritanian army.

For the Republic of Niger: Daouda Diallo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation; Col Sala Moussa, inspector general of the Nigerien armed forces, representing the chief of staff.

For the Republic of Senegal: Moustapha Niasse, minister of state for foreign affairs; Daouda Sow, minister of armed forces; Lt Gen Idrissa Fall, chief of staff of the Senegalese armed forces.

For the Republic of Togo: Col Koffi Kongo, inspector general of the armed forces, representing the minister of defense; Kekeh Messanvi Kokou, technical adviser at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, representing the minister of foreign affairs and cooperation.

For the general secretariat of ANAD: Col Tavares da Souza.

Moussa Ngom, general secretary of the CEAO, also attended.

The members of ANAD's council of ministers, who were granted an audience by Abdou Diouf, president of Senegal, sitting chairman of ANAD's Conference of Heads of State and Government, expressed to President Diouf their profound gratitude for the knowledgeable and very useful advice which he graciously proffered on that occasion. The council of ministers expressed gratification at the political resolve of all the member-states to secure amidst unity and brotherhood the security of their economic and social development. The council of ministers' meeting unanimously approved the basic documents included on its agenda, namely:

1. The draft implementation treaty;

2. The draft relating to the assignment of positions in the general secretariat;

3. The draft bylaws of the agreement.

The council of ministers congratulates the experts of the member-states, Col Tavares da Souza, ANAD's general secretary, as well as his aides for their availability and the high caliber of the documents submitted. Finally, the council of ministers expresses its sincere thanks to the Senegalese Government and people for the brotherly and warm hospitality that they exhibited during its endeavors.

In the speech that he gave at the conclusion of the meetings, the Ivorian minister of defense and civic service noted the exemplary nature of ANAD which constitutes a viable framework for the protection of the security of its member-states.

According to him ANAD appears as the necessary complement of the treaty of April 1973 which established the CEAO. Jean Konan Banny also expressed his conviction that increased security implies the renunciation of force and violence in the settlement of disputes in favor of the free expression of peoples' right to choose their destiny. The most senior member invited the participants representing their state's to continue to be loyal to African values of civilization for the settlement of disagreements by peaceful means, notably, negotiation and brotherly dialogue.

[Interview with Col Tavares da Souza, general secretary of ANAD, by G. Guyon; place and date not specified]

[Question] Colonel da Souza, could you briefly outline for the sake of the readers of AFRIQUE DEFENSE the origins and goals of the Nonaggression and Mutual Defense Pact binding the CEAO member-states and Togo?

[Answer] It was immediately following the Israeli raid on Entebbe in Uganda, a raid which evidenced the vulnerability of African states against any form of aggression, whether justified or not, that the idea of a defense agreement took shape. A certain number of West African heads of state became distinctly aware at that point of the total lack of security for their countries in the face of an enemy resolved to strike. Furthermore, they also had the feeling that the defense of their countries, secured by foreign powers to which they were bound by defense agreements, could be subject to changes given political contingencies. Finally, they were of the opinion that the efforts deployed to secure their economic independence should occur in a climate of peace. Thus, following Senegal's proposal and on the basis of a Malian suggestion, a draft framework agreement was submitted to the CEAO's heads of states' conference in Abidjan in June 1977. This draft was discussed and approved by all the [CEAO] member-states. Togo, which had been invited to the meeting as an observer, found the idea attractive and generous and adopted it a few days later. In the preamble of the agreement the emphasis is on the cooperation which already exists among these member-states and on their belonging to the same geographic zone. This preamble also asserts the sovereignty of each of the states in the field of defense while recognizing the need, given the weakness of their capabilities, to shun any idea of aggression among them. The agreement affirms, too, the resolve of mutual assistance in the field of defense in case of foreign aggression as in the economic field, already the case.

Ever since the signature of the agreement of 9 June 1977 in Abidjan, the draft implementation treaty has been the subject of laborious negotiations which prompted observers to say at one point that the agreement would not go beyond good intentions.

[Question] During the opening session of ANAD's Fifth Conference the Senegalese minister of foreign affairs noted that 4 years after the signature of the agreement, the draft inplementation treaty had still not seen the light of day. Could you indicate to us the reasons for this delay?

[Answer] There are several reasons for this delay. First, there is the fact that reflection about the political consequences of such an agreement had not gone deeply enough. We must recognize that our leaders were more concerned by much more specific economic problems. In the military field, the thinking had not gone very far. The members did not appreciate the impact which this agreement on the structures and policy of each of the member-states could have. Hence, a certain attitude of reservation. I have the impression that each of the member-states wished to organize its army first so as to be able to meet the requirements of the agreement before adhering to it fully. The third reason flows from the internal political changes of some states and the threats of destabilization weighing on some of them.

[Question] How have things evolved?

[Answer] In June 1977 the heads of state signed a framework agreement through which they expressed their "political resolve" to get organized to assist each other in case of aggression. It is therefore on the basis of this political resolve, clearly expressed, that the draft implementation treaty containing three provisions was drawn up. There is first the definition of the very principles of nonaggression. Then, the principles of assistance in the field of defense. And finally, the broad outlines of the structures of the general secretariat.

The drafting effort and then the examination of the documents having been achieved, all that remained was to push ahead with the study of the draft implementation treaty. But serious problems surfaced in Niamey relating to the content of the draft treaty and a new study was thus called for. The latter has made it possible today to approve the basic document.

[Question] The draft treaty approved by the present meeting will be submitted at the conference of the CEAO's heads of states and Togo to be held in Dakar in October 1981. Without entering into details which it behooves them to announce first, would it nevertheless be possible to know its major features?

[Answer] There is in this draft treaty a nonaggression clause which keynotes the major lines of the spirit in which this provision will have to be applied. This means respect for borders, nonintervention in domestic affairs, consultation prior to any other action in case of disagreement, and so on. Furthermore, there is a mutual defense assistance provision which asserts the member-states' resolve to help each other. In case of threat or aggression, the draft treaty provides for the calling of a conference of the heads of state and a council of ministers' meeting which would examine the situation and recommend appropriate measures to the heads of state. The possibility of armed intervention and political and economic support for the country attacked is provided for. The various measures to be applied will be the subject of detailed studies by special committees.

[Question] Colonel, as general secretary of ANAD could you also give us some information on your secretariat such as its office, composition, powers, relations with ANAD's member-states, and so on?

[Answer] The general secretariat which I head has an essentially administrative role. However, it is charged with preparing the basic documents to be submitted to the examination of the various organs set up by the agreement. The office of the general secertary thus has an administrative function and another involving general technical studies. As regards the secretariat's relations with the member-states involved in the agreement, it uses the channel of the ministries of foreign affairs, defense, or finance. The distribution of positions in the secretariat is proportional to the member-states.

[Question] How will the army of ANAD be made up?

[Answer] ANAD in no way envisions the integration of the member-states' armed forces. However, joint maneuvers are anticipated even though they are not mandatory.

[Question] How about financing?

[Answer] All the states have made their contributions. The planned budget exceeds at this time the needs of the secretariat.

[Question] What is the difference between ANAD and the recently ratified defense pact of the Economic Community of West African States [ECOWAS]?

[Answer] ANAD includes only French-speaking countries for the time being. Then, ANAD's draft implementation treaty is much more flexible than that of ECOWAS, and so are the structures of ANAD.

ANAD has an administrative unit and a planning office. The officers of the armed forces of the member-states have nearly all graduated from the same training schools, which eases understanding and coordination.

[Question] Is there a similarity between ANAD and organizations such as NATO?

[Answer] This matter has not been tackled during our endeavors. I nevertheless wish to specify that the agreement was created to defend the peoples of the member-states as well as their economic and cultural interests. It is only in the draft implementation treaty which aims to apply measures in the field of defense that such matters can be broached.

DOS SANTOS ON NAMIBIA, RELATIONS WITH WEST

PM161629 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Oct 81 pp 1, 3

[Interview with Angolan President Jose Eduardo Dos Santos by Jacques Amalric: "Dos Santos Calls on France to 'Use Its Influence' in Southern Africa"--date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] What problems do you plan to raise in your discussions with the French authorities?

[Answer] First we plan to discuss bilateral relations. We plan to discuss the development of economic, commercial, technical and scientific cooperation. We think that political conditions are favorable to improving our cooperation while respecting our principles: noninterference, respect for sovereignty, mutually advantageous cooperation. We think this despite the hostility shown to us by a section of the French press which is indulging in propaganda for counterrevolutionary groups, and traitors linked to the South African regime.

[Question] In what spheres do you think cooperation can be increased?

[Answer] The oil sector and the construction sector. We are also cooperating in the sphere of water treatment, and there are good prospects in the agricultural sphere. Angola is a young country with great potential.

[Question] What do you expect from France on the Namibian question?

[Answer] France is a member of the Western countries' contact group. After the changes which have just taken place it has very positive positions on the question of the peoples' liberation. We would like it to use its influence to promote a solution to the serious situation prevailing in Southern Africa owing to apartheid and the Namibian conflict. This situation is forcing us into armed confrontation, but this confrontation is disastrous not only for the African countries involved but also for the investor countries. It is not our fault that there is an armed struggle. We are favorable to any interventions which will bring about a peaceful solution.

[Question] Are you in favor of France staying in the contact group?

[Answer] Yes, because the group has not yet completed its mission or put its plan into practice. That is why France should continue to be part of it. Unless, of course, that plan is impracticable. But in our view that is not the case at present.

UNITA Has No Future Without Pretoria's Support

[Question] Do you think that the settlement of the Namibian problem would crush the forces of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA]?

[Answer] Yes, probably; an end to the war would finally allow us to devote our efforts to the country's economic and social rebuilding. Of course, without South Africa's logistical support, and without the possibility of using Namibian territory, UNITA has no future.

[Question] In your view is UNITA merely a reactionary group manipulated by foreign countries or is it also the expression of an ethnic phenomenon?

[Answer] You know, we are still a young country, a young nation, and we are still in a phase of consolidating national unity. We still have to overcome some obstacles which were cleverly exploited by the Portuguese colonialists--such as racism, tribalism, different levels of education. Just think of the policy of assimilation which the Portuguese implemented in our country toward a minority. In addition to this whole context there is the fact that wealth was not fairly distributed for a long time.

All that created problems for the majority of the Angolan population, and those problems cannot be solved in 5 years of independence. It is a fact that the imperialists' accomplices can deceive the masses, lead some sections of society to commit acts which go against the people's interests and their own interests. But these internal factors are not decisive and they will disappear gradually as national consolidation is effected. But the arms, munitions, means of transport and fuel given to traitors are enabling some organizations, including gangsters, to survive.

[Question] Do you have many Soviet advisers?

[Answer] Ours is an independent state and hence we have cooperation agreements both with socialist, capitalist and nonaligned countries. It is true that we have military agreements with the USSR and Cuba. Because of the threats which South Africa poses us we are buying arms from the Soviet Union, and we need technicians to handle this increasingly sophisticated military technology. But we also have oil technicians--from Gulf oil, for instance. The strange thing is that nobody talks about those advisers!

Rejection of LOME Agreements

[Question] How many Soviet, American, Cuban and French citizens do you have on your territory?

[Answer] I cannot give any precise figures. But we have preferential cooperation with the socialist camp which has always given us not only weapons but also medicines and food. They have never betrayed us. They are our friends. We have not forgotten history or those who gave their aid to the Portuguese colonialists, even if the past is the past and we have established diplomatic relations and even cooperation with the Western states.

[Question] Although you refused to link the solution of the Namibian problem with the departure of the Cuban troops in your country, do you not think that Namibia's independence could have an influence on the Cuban military presence?

[Answer] Yes, we think so. Southern Africa needs peace.

[Question] How do you view the political change which has just taken place in France?

[Answer] It is a very encouraging cahnge, an important event for Africa in view of the relations of friendship and cooperation which France historically maintains with several African countries.

What needs to be done now is to take account of the political objectives and aspirations of the African peoples who favor peace and independence and are resolutely opposed to racism. We consider that it is not the present government's fault that Mirage aircraft are used to bomb us, and that nuclear reactors for military or civilian uses have been built with French aid. We do not think that the new government intends to follow that path but that, instead, its moral duty is to help the peoples being subjected to South African aggression.

[Question] Will you try to obtain assurances on this point in your discussions with Mr Mitterrand?

[Answer] We simply want French policy to support our legitimate aspirations to peace and cooperation.

[Question] What do you think of France's present policy toward the French-speaking African countries?

[Answer] We have not formed an opinion yet. We lack information and do not want to indulge in suppositions. We must have specific information.

[Question] What can be said about the Franco-Angolan incident which took place at the beginning of August when Mr Guy Penne and Mr Regis Debray visited Luanda and the Angolans reported on a joint communique which did not exist?

[Answer] It was a question of a report. No joint communique was published, and so we gave this report. The whole affair was caused by the indiscipline of an Angolan journalist--who has, moreover, been penalized--but it was merely a misunderstanding.

[Question] Why have you not signed the LOME agreements?

[Answer] We do not regard it as a priority. We must first develop bilateral relations and establish ties on the basis of mutual advantages. It is only afterwards that we will turn our attention to multilateral relations on fair bases.

[Question] You do not think that the LOME agreements have a fair basis?

[Answer] No.

DOS SANTOS DEPLORES POOR BEHAVIOR OF STUDENTS IN CUBA

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 25 Sep 81 p 3

[Excerpts] The president of the MPLA-Labor Party and of the People's Republic of Angola, Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos received on Wednesday a group of Angolan grantees studying in Cuba who are spending their vacation in the country. The Angolan head of state commented on the situation in our country and stressed the importance attributed by the party and the government to the issue of cadre training.

Dear comrades,

I have the pleasure to spend a few moments with you here in Luanda. You were sent by our party to study, acquire scientific and technical knowledge that will allow you to participate in the reconstruction of our country. Indeed, we have few cadre. This is a legacy of colonialism and we have been doing everything in our power to ensure that we will possess within the shortest possible time the cadre who will be able to solve the problems of production, the problems of the economic, social and political administration of the nation.

You have performed well in your studies and as a result, you were selected to visit your relatives in Angola. You have been able to observe how difficult it still is to solve some problems. You noticed that we have problems in housing, in supply, in transportation, in education and others; indeed, we have many problems.

But you were also able to observe that some of these problems are being solved daily. If I am not mistaken, you left the country in 1978. Well, surely you have noticed some differences. Of course, we are still very concerned about our military situation. The South Africans continue to attack our country and violate our borders because they do not wish to withdraw from Namibia.

We have supported the Namibian fighters and we shall continue to offer our assistance until the Namibian people is free and independent.

I hope that you will continue to perform well in Cuba. I hope that your example will be followed by all the other students in Cuba, particularly by those in the Isle of Youth. We have received from there news that is rather unpleasant. We have sent many young people to the Isle of Youth, taking advantage of the facilities granted us by our Cuban comrades, of the school, the teachers and the material support offered in the field of education. But unfortunately, some of our compatriots have behaved badly.

We have already had to come to a decision in relation to a number of our compatriots who have shown a degree of indiscipline instead of taking advantage of the conditions and facilities granted them to study and learn in order to better serve the Angolan people and themselves. Some of them have even committed theft and this is, of course, inadmissible. We want to create a new man, a man who will live from his work, who will always behave in a dignified manner in society and who will exploit his own resources to the utmost to serve society. Meanwhile, some of our comrades have done the opposite; they may be no longer comrades, despite the fact that they are still very young.

We intend later to adopt very severe measures against these young people who have not taken advantage of the possibilities opened to them today by the revolution. We sacrificed a great deal to achieve these rights. Today education is free, the comrades are in Cuba and they pay nothing. This was not true in colonial times. But this was achieved at the cost of many a sacrifice. The revolution will provide a lot more advantages to our people, but the revolution will not triumph for everyone's benefit through dishonest, lazy or indisciplined people. All those who misbehave will be punished and sanctioned. Through this punishment, we shall attempt to correct the wrong behavior of these people, of these compatriots who sometimes do not understand the efforts of our party and our government for the good of everyone. Some of them are here, others are in Cuba, but we intend to punish severely those who are indisciplined and those who practice irregular activities.

It would be good if you, comrades, as good, outstanding students, could also help the youth of the party, the Ministry of Education and the leadership that we have now established in the Isle of Youth to do away with indiscipline once and for all. You, comrades, lived through difficult times in 1978 and 1979. We have attempted to solve all these problems. Through the institute, we have attempted to provide material support for the comrades, in the way of clothing, teaching equipment, instruments...we really have made an effort. And you, comrades, must have seen the results. At the beginning of this year or at the end of last year, we sent over some assistance. It must have arrived. We could continue to do that. But we shall not succeed unless there is good organization among the students, unless there is understanding, respect, discipline. And you can play an important part because you can enlighten others who do not understand yet, who are less aware.

I hope you have a good trip and I hope that you will not take with you whatever bad things you saw here. Any society has both good and bad things. The just man's attitude should be to embrace what is just and fair in society. Your ambition must be to develop the positive aspects. Some of our compatriots who were here the last time took with them vices and evil habits and attempted to implant them among the students there: speculation, black market... You comrades must fight this. These evil habits that still plague our society must be fought and should not be exported.

You comrades must avoid the mistakes made by the students who spent their vacation here last year. We have been unable this year to organize vacations for the rest of the students. We had intended to do so. Vacations had been scheduled and authorized, but there were difficulties in transportation. Our comrades in the airlines encountered difficulties in securing air transportation for the comrades at the Isle of Youth. And this is the only reason why vacation plans were disrupted. Also, as you comrades well know, this is a more or less difficult period. We have to mobilize all our resources to face the situation created in the south by the racist South Africans. However, you should tell your comrades there of our intentions. The decision had been made and was not carried out simply because we had transportation difficulties. I hope that you will do still better next year and that your example will be followed by all the students now living in the Isle of Youth.

DOS SANTOS SAYS COUNTRY HAS 'FEW BRAINS,' REQUESTS AID

LD120950 Budapest MTI in English 0600 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Text] Budapest, 1 Oct (MTI)--Jose Eduardo Dos Santos, president of the MPLA-Labor Party and of the Angolan People's Republic, who paid a visit to Hungary last week at the head of a party and state delegation, made an interview with the Hungarian Television. The interview was aired in Sunday's "Het," a weekly political magazine.

This is what Dos Santos said about the political and economic consequences of the aggression committed against Angola by the South African Republic: Thousands of people fell victim to the aggression, mostly civilians, and the material damages are also huge.

"As SWAPO runs camps on our territory, one of the goals of the attacks against Angola is to prevent us from rendering internationalist help to the Namibian people and SWAPO which guides their struggle," said Dos Santos.

Asked what military circumstances explained the fact that so far they have failed to drive back the aggressors, Dos Santos said: Since winning its independence in 1975 Angola has been unable to build up an air force and air defence which could successfully cope with the South African air force.

Speaking about the tasks of building socialism in the present situation in Angola, Dos Santos explained: "We should like to build up our economic independence on the base of the principles of Marxism-Leninism. Hence we considered it necessary that MPLA become a party. We hold that qualitative changes must be carried out in our society. It is natural that we should begin with the economic life." He added that the socialist countries could participate in this process not only in the political field. "Angola is a country of great agricultural potentials. It also has ample natural wealth but few brains. There hardly are such persons who could efficiently manage factories. We are reckoning on the assistance of the socialist countries in this respect," he said.

Speaking about the prospects of bilateral relations he mentioned in the first place agriculture, the boosting of the production of such public nutrition crops as maize, bean and rice, the planting of citrus trees whose fruits could be sold in the socialist countries. Promising avenues of cooperation could be found in the heavy, light and food industries also. He explained that cooperation in oil prospecting, geology and mining too offered mutual benefits.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS REGIONAL ISSUES

PM091323 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 2 Oct 81 p 10

[Interview with Angolan Foreign Minister Paolo Jorge by Mario Albano in Rome: "Italy In a Good Position to Win Over Angola"--date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Minister, what do you think of the contact group (United States, Canada, France, Britain, FRG) proposals on the decolonization of Namibia?

[Answer] After the New York meeting the five issued a communique which we analyzed carefully: A significant step forward has been taken. First, because the Western countries referred to UN Resolution 435 as a basis for a solution; second because they showed a degree of determination in defining dates and methods for implementing the proposals. The contact group foresees independence for Namibia by 1982: this is another positive point to be stressed. Of course we must wait until the so-called "constitutional principles" are analyzed in depth, primarily by SWAPO.

[Question] Is it true that the Reagan administration has drafted a secret clause which would force Luanda to draw a "red line" in the south beyond which the Cuban troops could not go?

[Answer] I found out about this indirectly. I wonder how one state can ask another to provide it with military or some other kind of guarantees regarding its territory.

[Question] In short, relations between Angola and the United States are still very bad. The U.S. Congress is about to annul the Clark Amendment and that would enable the CIA to give direct support to Jonas Savimbi's National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA].

[Answer] It is very easy to define relations with the United States, I have been doing so for 4 years: They are nonexistent and the annulment of the Clark Amendment makes the prospects of diplomatic or other relations even more remote.

No Relations With Pretoria

[Question] What about relations with South Africa?

[Answer] The situation is at zero point. There have not been nor are there any relations at any level.

[Question] But Diamang, which controls your diamond production, is a mixed Angolan-South African company...

[Answer] So what? The relationship is not between Luanda and Pretoria. Oppenheimer (the owner of De Beers--LA REPUBBLICA editor's note) does not represent South Africa.

[Question] What were the political objectives of the South African military offensive in Angola when mediation on Namibia was about to begin?

[Answer] They wanted to create a buffer zone in the south to prevent SWAPO from supplying the guerrillas in Namibia. This would have enabled Pretoria to wipe out the internal battlefront...

[Question] I'm sorry to interrupt, but that does not strike me as a compliment to SWAPO: You are saying that without Angola it would easily be eliminated.

[Answer] No liberation movement could wage a struggle in the Namibian conditions without logistical bases in a neighboring country.

[Question] Let's go back to the South African invasion.

[Answer] Pretoria would like to install UNITA in the south: That would enable it to maintain control over Namibia too. But we were able to resist the invasion.

[Question] Minister, the USSR has secured Mozambique's entry into CEMA and there are a growing number of Warsaw Pact military "advisers" in southern Africa: To what extent is this to do with East-West rivalry?

[Answer] These relations are developing in the southern region in the framework of individual cases of bilateral relations; I don't think it has anything to do with East-West rivalry. Nobody seems to understand that the situation in the region is very serious. South African military aggression is pushing some countries to make provisions but they are related to this situation.

[Question] Will Mitterrand's election change your relations with France and Europe in any way?

[Answer] Of course, Mitterrand has a less paternalistic approach than Giscard. But the most important effects of the socialist victory in France will be felt in Europe. As for the EEC, it must first try to bridge the gap between rich and poor countries and then we will see what should be done.

[Question] In other words, you are not convinced by the European "third way."

[Answer] The essential thing is still to overcome underdevelopment. Once that is understood a particular bloc can use its influence and play its cards.

[Question] Has the bipolar revival placed nonaligned ideas in a crisis?

[Answer] I do not think so. The nonaligned countries are not experiencing a crisis. They are simply heterogeneous.

Requests to National Hydrocarbons Agency and Fiat

[Question] Are you satisfied with your visit to Italy?

[Answer] My talks with the Italian authorities and in particular with Minister Colombo have been very cordial and above all very constructive. The talks with Spadolini and Pertini also convinced me that our relations can be developed harmoniously. The importance of this visit lies in two main aspects: The first concerns economic relations and cooperation between our countries, the second concerns the detailed and very similar analyses of the situation in southern Africa. We are now convinced that Italy has an excellent position in Angola and will be able to contribute a great deal to our country's economic and social development. For instance the talks with ENI [chairman] Grandi and with Fiat will mark a development in Italian interventions in the oil industry and in transportation.

[Question] Have you had meetings with representatives of the political parties?

[Answer] No, there have been no meetings.

[Question] I am asking you this in your capacity as MPLA Central Committee member: What is the state of relations between your party and the PCI?

[Answer] Well, we have had relations for many years, since the MPLA was a liberation movement. We hope that these mutual relations can be strengthened.

BRIDGE DESTRUCTION--The destruction for the second time of the bridge over the Cunene River in southern Angola is part of South Africa's strategy aimed at strangling the Angolan economy, the provincial commissioner for Cunene stated in the daily JORNAL DE ANGOLA. Henri da Costa specified that the destruction of the 800-meter-long bridge has seriously aggravated the problem of supplies to the people of Cunene Province. Reconstruction of the bridge after the invasion of the Angolan territory by racist South African troops in 1975 cost about $1.4 million. Reconstruction of this bridge this time will be possible only with international cooperation. [Text] [AB151225 Luanda Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 15 Oct 81]

NATION OF BELIZE RECOGNIZED--Luanda, 17 Oct (ANGOP)--The president of the MPLA-Workers Party and of the People's Republic of Angola, Jose Eduardo Dos Santos, has sent a message to the prime minister of Belize in which the Angolan Government officially recognizes this newly independent state. In the message, the Angolan head of state hopes for the development of bonds of friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the two countries in the struggle against enemies of freedom, and the progress of oppressed people. DOS SANTOS' VISIT TO DPRK--Pyongyang, 17 Oct (ANGOP)--The second day of the visit of the president of the MPLA-Workers Party and of the People's Republic of Angola, Jose Eduardo Dos Santos, to the DPRK was marked today by the continuation of discussions which began on Friday in Pyongyang between delegations of the two countries. In fact, the strengthening of bilateral cooperation between the two peoples, parties and governments of Angola and the DPRK were the main topics in the discussions which fall within the framework of the traditional friendly relations which were further strengthened during the struggle for national liberation in Angola. Meanwhile, a vast program of visits to political and cultural centers of Korean life also formed part of activities of the Angolan presidential delegation for the day of Saturday. The Angolan head of state and his entourage also visited the same day the house in which President Kim Il-song was born and the Pyongyang subway. The Angolan presidential delegation will end its visit next Monday, 19 October, when President Jose Eduardo Dos Santos will take leave of President Kim Il-song to return to the Angolan capital. CUBAN CONSTRUCTION MINISTER DEPARTS--The Cuban minister for construction, who was in the People's Republic of Angola on a 5-day official visit, left Luanda yesterday for Addis Ababa. The Cuban delegation is visiting Ethiopia at the invitation of the country's head of state, Mengistu Haile Mariam. Before leaving Luanda, the Cuban official said he was satisfied with the contacts he had made with the Angolan officials in analyzing collaboration planned in the country's reconstruction. Levi Farah further said that an agreement had been reached for the moment; work is to be realized at the Luanda airport and in Lukapa. DONATION FROM CUBAN INTERNATIONALISTS--Luanda, 8 Oct (ANGOP)--The Cuban ambassador in Angola, Rafael Franca Mestra, today (Thursday) handed 7 tons of foodstuffs and clothes to the Angolan Red Cross in a gesture of friendship and solidarity with the Angolan people. The donation, worth 609,179 kwanzas ($20,302), is a gift from the Cuban Internationalists in Luanda particularly to the populations in the south of the country who have been the target of constant attacks by the South African racists. The ceremony took place at the Red Cross premises and was attended by Cuban Internationalists and officials of that humanitarian organization, in addition to the Cuban ambassador and the secretary general of the Red Cross in Angola. SOVIET AID--A seven-ton donation comprising medicines, condensed milk, blankets and childrens' food destined for the population of Southern Angola was delivered at the naval base in Luanda yesterday to Red Cross Secretary General David de Carvalho Fragoso by Soviet ambassador to Angola Vadim Loginov. During the delivery ceremony Vadim Loginov said that the Soviet Red Cross aid to the Angolan Red Cross was based on the good relations existing between the USSR and the People's Republic of Angola, because the Soviet people have been and always will be on the side of the brother people of Angola. The ceremony was attended by officials of the Soviet Embassy in Angola and of the Red Cross. [Text] [LD160450 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0500 GMT 15 Oct 81]

LIBYAN WITHDRAWAL FROM NATION NOT CONSIDERED IMMINENT

Paris LE MONDE in French 13 Oct 81 p 6

[Article by J.-C. Pomonti: "The Problemantical Libyan Withdrawal"]

[Text] Can it be seriously considered still that the Libyan troops will be forced to withdraw from Chad in the next few months, as Paris hopes (LE MONDE of 6 October)? If informed sources in Yaounde (Cameroon) are believed, under the terms of an agreement concluded on 17 August by Ndjamena and Tripoli, the Chadian plan for an "integrated national army" benefits from the active help of Libya, which reportedly promised to contribute to the training of 2,000 soldiers per year for 5 years and to set up the "directing organs" of the ANI. This agreement was reportedly conveyed in late September to the military chiefs of the various factions of the GUNT (Transitional National Union Government) by the Chadian minister of defense.

On the other hand, according to reliable sources, the Libyans reportedly installed recently a garrison of 2,000 men "advised" by some 50 Soviets, in Am-Timan, in Salamat Prefecture, an area bordering the Central African Republic. Lastly, in an interview published Wednesday by LE QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS, the minister of foreign affairs of the GUNT, Acyl Ahmat, stated that the attacks in September by the Northern Armed Forces [FAN] of Hissein Habre in the eastern part of Chad had led to the abandonment of the "timetable," established by Ndjamena and Tripoli, "for the departure of the Libyan army." The Libyan troops will remain in Chad as long as we are threatened by the Egyptian-Sudanese coalition on our eastern frontier," he added.

According to some reports, Goukouni Oueddei, president of the GUNT, was to announce, after his reception at the Elysee palace, on 17 September, the start of a withdrawal of the Libyan troops. In any event, he made no mention of it during the press conference which he held the next day in the French capital. The taking over by the Libyans of the future national army, the growing control of Chad by Tripoli's forces and the remarks of Acyl Ahmat, makes it felt that Colonel Qadhdhafi is not on the point of evacuating his "Chadian glacis."

RETURN OF REFUGEES--Five to six thousand Chadian refugees from Cameroon and Nigeria have returned to Ndjamena since the beginning of August. Daily, about 100 refugees continue to cross the Chari, the river that separates Cameroon from Chad at Ndjamena. The return movement of the Chadian refugees has increased considerably since the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (HCR) decided that it would no longer distribute aid outside of Chadian territory. This movement has led to the "revival" of several of Ndjamena's working-class districts. There are between 80,000 and 100,000 Chadian refugees in foreign countries, and approximately 50,000 of them are in Cameroon. [Text] [Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 28 Aug 81 p 1] 9174

GOVERNMENT DISMAYED AT AFRC CONVICT RELEASE--The government has expressed dismay at the trend of events in the law courts concerning the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council [AFRC] convicts. A statement issued yesterday by the Ministry of Information and Tourism said the executive has taken note that last Wednesday an Accra high court granted an application for a habeas corpus proceedings and set free Henry Kodjo Djaba, an AFRC convict. The government has also learned that similar decisions concerning some other AFRC convicts have been given in some of the regions. The government is of the view that these matters can only be properly determined by the supreme court, having regard to the transitional provisions of the constitution. The statement pointed out that there are cases relating to AFRC convicts already pending before the supreme court. The executive is therefore disturbed that a lower court, such as the high court, has given decisions that have led to the release of some AFRC convicts even before the supreme court had ruled on the matter. The government stressed that much as it intends to respect the decisions of courts of competent jurisdiction, it feels that it should not be placed in a position where it will be seen to be subverting the very constitution which it seeks to uphold and defend. In view of the circumstances, the executive has urged the supreme court to act with all the expedition that the situation demands. TOURE DENOUNCES POLISARIO ATTACK--Dakar, 16 Oct (AFP)--In an appeal to the people of Africa, which was broadcast on Conakry radio and monitored in Dakar, Guinea President Sekou Toure asked the parties involved in the Western Sahara conflict to immediately stop the use of force and to adhere strictly to the decisions of the OAU. This appeal follows the Polsario Front's attack on the Moroccan garrison at Guelta Zammur. To Sekou Toure, the attack constitutes a very serious event which dangerously compromises the implementation of the cease-fire agreement reached last June during the summit of the OAU heads of state in Nairobi, Kenya. The Guinean head of state, who is a member of the OAU committee appointed to see to the application of the cease-fire, has also called on the OAU to take immediate and appropriate measures to ensure the tranquility of the peoples of Africa, and also to enhance their development. SAUDI DELEGATION DEPARTS--After 4 days of an official, working and friendly visit to our country, his royal highness Prince Muhammad Fahd al-Sa'ud of Saudi Arabia, and the important delegation accompanying him left Conakry this morning at 0930 GMT. The Saudi prince and his entourage were seen off at the Conakry-Gbessia International Airport by the supreme leader of the revolution, President Ammed Sekou Toure. Tuesday afternoon, 13 October 1981, a large reception was organized for the visitors by the directorate of the party. After this meeting and during an artistic and sociocultural evening show organized for the delegation at the people's palace, his highness Prince Muhammad Fahd al-Sa'ud was made a grand officer of the National Order of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea in testimony of his contributions toward the strengthening of relations between Guinea and Saudi Arabia. Several other members of the Saudi delegation were also made officers and knights of the National Order of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea. TOURE MESSAGE ON AL-SADAT'S ASSASSINATION--Following the assassination of the president of the Arab Republic of Egypt, out late brother Muhammad Anwar al-Sadat, the supreme leader of the revolution has sent the following message of condolence to the acting president of the Arab Republic of Egypt. To His Excellency Mr Abu Taleb, acting president of the Arab Republic of Egypt, Cairo: We were deeply consternated by the news of the death of our late brother, President Muhammad Anwar al-Sadat. The Guinean people, their government and myself express to our brothers, the Egyptian people, their government and the bereaved family of the illustrious late personality our deepest condolences and our sincerest sympathies upon this cruel loss. We have never ceased to dislike the use of violence in the solution of political differences in the national or international spheres. We therefore condemn the assassination of President al-Sadat, regardless of the motives of the assassins. We pray that the almighty and merciful allah will grant him grace (?and eternal rest). Amen. NO EXTRADITION--Bissau, 15 Oct (AFP)--Guinea-Bissau will not hand over the leader of the failed 30 July coup d'etat in Gambia, Kukli Samba Sanyang, whatever moves Gambian President Sir Dawda Jawara may make, reliable sources here said today. The authorities would not hand them over because they did not want to violate international law, the sources said, adding that the 10 will, however, be expelled from Guinea-Bissau. The sources did not say to which country the putschists would be sent. (In Dakar, the Senegalese satirical weekly LE POLITICIEN quoted Guinea-Bissau's Interior Minister Manuel Saturnino as saying that a reason for not handing Mr Sanyang over was that our people would not understand why we had delivered him to the Gambian Government.) MACHEL ASSAILS OPPONENTS IN PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY SPEECH

EA101808 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1700 GMT 9 Oct 81

[Speech by President Samora Machel at the end of the Eighth People's Assembly session in Maputo on 9 October--recorded]

[Excerpts] Our current economic plan, which reflects our reality for the next 10 years, has been the detonator which uncovered manifestations and tendencies against it in our midst and among our cadres. These tendencies showed us that (?enemy groups) existed.

We have already characterized the opportunists of the left and right who are opposing our policy of socialist development. The enemy has adopted positions within our ranks. Although they are manifesting themselves in different forms, they are pursuing the same objective. What is that objective? It is to prevent the triumph of the socialist revolution. It is a tactic of (?dispersing) forces in order to better attack us.

Who are these opportunists in reality? They take with them the [word indistinct] of treason and capitulation. They usually take a (?subjective) position when the advance of socialism gains an irreversible momentum.

Dear deputies, revolution is like a fast-flowing river: It increases its volume and overflows its banks as a result of [word indistinct] and torrential rains which feed it. In it flow uprooted trees, (?wood) and debris which spin in the current. The current runs; it does not allow anyone to measure properly the depth of water; this is our (?problem). When the rains stop, the volume of water decreases; the banks are full of debris; the river bed clears, and its water clears and its water becomes crystalline and pure. This allows people to see its depth.

The detractors of the current economic plan represent this debris. This debris must be removed from the clear water to the river banks. Let us not be afraid. We know how to endure (?suffering). We have known how to fight for the (?Communist Party).

These opportunists are deaf. They are (?near the people). They do not hear the people's voice. The people do not (?depend) on an individual to transform nature and society. They speak. They do not know the working class. They speak of the peasantry with whom they do not identify themselves. To them skills are at the command post. People and policy are secondary things to them and at times they are ignored. Thus the opportunists consider themselves experts. They claim to dominate science and skills, whereas they are basically ignorant people.

They are [word indistinct] intellectuals. They consume ideas generated and spread by imperialism. [Applause] Their source of reference is the capitalist West. That is the place to which their ears are tuned. They [words indistinct] the ideology of the magazines propagating bourgeois values and they intend to be proud of such ideas in Mozambique. Their ears are glued to the radio stations of the capitalist countries. [Passage indistinct] (?they rabidly) argue that all this is to enable them to know about the world. But, in essence, they are voluntarily (?slaves) of the bourgeois capitalist ideology. They (?become slaves) of values of that ideology.

They neither know nor follow the crisis of capitalism: Massive unemployment. There are more than 12 million jobless in the capitalist countries today. They are unemployed. (?These people live on handouts.) Why do not the opportunists propagate this crisis of unemployment, poverty and crime. Why do not these (delinquents) speak of this situation? [Passage indistinct] these people do not know that they have been condemned by history. They say that such crises in capitalist countries are difficulties and acute problems.

There are others among us who constitute an ultraleftist tendency. They advocate that the current economic plan, PPI [Plano Perspectivo Indicativo] is a short-term decision and its goals are small. They say we should do more. They undervalue our capacity and underestimate the enemy. To them everything is easy, but they do not present viable alternatives for resolving the problems of the people.

Many misguided ideas--not wrong, let me make it clear--I repeat these misguided ideas, which are being observed in our ranks, are manifesting themselves in groups. Such groups operate outside the party and state structures to which they belong. When they are with their officials, such people (?hail) PPI. In their groups they say that the decision was an error; that the plan is impracticable; and they say that the plan is a dream for all to see.

Who among the respected deputies does not dream of happiness for Mozambique children? Whoever does not dream of such happiness should raise his hand. Who does not dream of happiness of Mozambique children? Who does not dream of putting an end to the lines? Who does not dream of having water and light in his house? Who does not dream of bread, milk and eggs at breakfast? We dream of all this, and that is why we have adopted the current economic plan as our instrument of struggle against poverty and hunger. The current economic plan is to be implemented, for it is the dream of all our people.

Those who do not dream with us dream against us. They dream of turning back the wheel of history and of the Mozambique revolution. They dream of (?frustrating) our sacrifices. That is how they dream. That is why they are permanently critical of the party policy whose documents they neither read nor know. Political illiterates. [Passage omitted saying that these groups have existed since the liberation war.]

Our policy toward these individuals is to neutralize and isolate them. There can be no compromise. There can be no coexistence with them. It is the task of the people, of all of us to be vigilant so that we can detect such attitudes and classify them correctly. We will thus be in a position to act accordingly. We must place these elements permanently on the defensive. This is the slogan for all of us. [Passage omitted on opposition to plan call to end bureaucracy, and the need to implement the current economic plan.]

PEOPLE'S POLICE FORCE BEHAVIOR DENOUNCED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] The defense and security forces have captured the heads of the group of murderers operating in the Vale do Infulene in the city of Maputo. At this time operations are being conducted to completely dismantle the network of murderers in that area.

The disclosure was made by the provincial commandant of the Mozambican People's Police during a meeting last Saturday at the Bairro do Jardim in Maputo.

Another such meeting took place day before yesterday in the Polana area. At the Bairro do Jardim meeting, the police commandant said that the criminals who had been active in the Vale do Infulene will soon be presented to the public.

In addition to the operations of these bandit groups, a variety of anti-social behavior was denounced at the meeting, such as hoarding, prostitution, illegal occupation of housing belonging to the state and the incorrect behavior of some members of the Mozambican People's Police force stationed in the sixth squad serving the Bairro do Jardim.

The people vigorously denounced these individuals' abuse of power and personal intimidation. The commandant assured the people that an investigation will take place and if the accusations against some members of the police force are proved true, they will be presented to the public. "You must stop threatening people. You must go wherever you are needed," the police commandant stressed in reviewing some of the incorrect attitudes still affecting the squads.

In relation to the vigilance groups and the people's militia, it was found that a large number of their members are no longer carrying out their duties.

The abolition of their privileges in food lines, the lack of concrete tasks and their absence at meetings where their presence is required were some of the factors in the indifference exhibited by these elements of the people's defense.

Other problems related to the illegal occupation of houses and the non-payment of rents were discussed at the meeting. A resident of the Bairro do Jardim stressed that "there are houses empty at the moment that have been taken over by the bandits as their headquarters."

SHORTAGE OF FISH--The PESCOM company only marketed half the quantities of fish required for the supply of the city of Maputo during the first 2 months of the second semester of this year. According to Jose Malanga, assistant director of the southern zone of the PESCOM, this was due to the fact that not enough fish was imported. The GOAM (City Supply Department) should have received 3,136 tons of domestic and imported fish for the last 2 months. According to PESCOM data, only half this amount reached the markets of the capital. The PESCOM company must guarantee the supply of domestic and imported fish to the city. Asked about the size of the fish catch of the domestic companies, Jose Malanga said: "Even though we did not fulfill our goals, the shortfall was not very significant." He also said that most of the domestic catch was sold to the hotel industry. Already during the first semester of this year there was a 25.6 percent shortfall in the marketing of fish for this period, with a total of 6,970 tons sold. The decision to enter into cooperation agreements between the youth of Berlin and Maputo is the result of bilateral meetings held in the capital of the GDR during this event. According to the OJM secretary, there will be an exchange of delegations to become acquainted with the realities of each capital so as to conduct a study of the respective problems that will permit the establishment of the mechanisms of cooperation. The meeting in Berlin was attended by young people from the capitals of 16 socialist countries. The main objective of the meeting was to exchange experiences and opinions in order to solve the problems affecting youth in the capitals. It should be noted that this is the first meeting of this kind to be attended by the OJM. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Oct 81 p 12]

MALABO'S NEW SECURITY TIES TO MADRID DECRIED

AB111202 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 11 Oct 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] It was announced last week that Spain is to take up responsibility for both internal and external security of Equatorial Guinea. The announcement was [words indistinct] cooperation agreement signed at the end of a visit to Equatorial Guinea by the head of the Spanish police.

Although details of the agreement are not readily available, the implications are fairly obvious. According to the head of state of Equatorial Guinea, Col Nguema Mbazogo, the Spanish presence and influence is designed to supplant that of France, China and the Soviet Union in the area. The agreement as it affects the internal security for Equatorial Guinea might involve the drafting of contingents of troops from Madrid to the former Spanish colony. That represents the only means by which Spain can directly participate in internal security arrangements of Equatorial Guinea.

Some observers have been quick at referring to this prospect as the second colonization of the people of Equatorial Guinea by Spain. Whether this view is yet an understatement is beside the point. The fact is that one cannot easily appreciate the need for additional security arrangements requiring the external participation in Equatorial Guinea.

Since the overthrow and subsequent execution of Macis Nguema in 1978, relations between Madrid and its neighbors have been quite cordial. One of the first tasks of Colonel Mbazogo after he unseated his cousin was to [word indistinct] his country with other African countries. For instance, less than a year ago, Colonel Mbazogo visited Nigeria and had useful discussions with the federal authorities. Shortly afterwards, it was rumored that the federal government might allow Nigerians to return to Equatorial Guinea under a new labor agreement. The rumors have proved to have been, in fact, false. But the truth is that relations between Nigeria and Equatorial Guinea are as of now quite cordial. Similarly, other neighboring countries such as Gabon, Guinea [as heard] and the Cameroons are not hostile to the Mbazogo regime in Malabo.

Given this background, it is not easy to discern the real reason for security links with Spain since the authorities in Malabo are not facing external threats and the domestic situation is quite stable. Even if it had any need to supplant

French, Chinese and Soviet presence which was (?cited) by Colonel Mbazogo, amount to [words indistinct].

It should be noted at this point that we do not lose sight of the subtle denials on this matter that come from Madrid. It may be true that France, China and the Soviet Union tried to infiltrate the country while it was under Macias Nguema through offers of financial and technical assistance. But even if the presence of these countries in question is now (?menacing), it is not possible to see how Spain can counter their influence. The fact is that Spanish military capacity is less than that of any of the countries in question. We understand the fact that there is a root cause for special ties between Malabo and Madrid. Equatorial Guinea had been a Spanish colony for more than half a century. During this period, there were close ties between the peoples of the two countries. Before 1968, when Spanish colonial rule came to an end in Malabo, Spain provided more than 80 percent of Equatorial Guinea's revenue.

Presently, the country is faced with a serious economic situation. It has no mineral resources. Its agricultural economy is based on proceeds from cocoa and timber, both of which have lost favorable positions in the world market. The (?sudden) departure of the maltreated Nigerian unskilled labor force had resulted in a steady and [word indistinct] decline in production. That is why we are constrained to view the intended security arrangement from their proper perspective. [Words indistinct] and will get in return [words indistinct] that country for the purpose of establishing military bases.

It should be stated loud and clear that such an arrangement is not in the interest of Nigeria's security needs and can hardly be tolerated. The authorities in Malabo are advised not to jeopardize the security of the entire subregion through such one-sided defence agreements.

PARDON OF OJUKWU SAID HELPFUL TO NPN

AB111218 Paris AFP in English 1058 GMT 11 Oct 81

[Text] Lagos, Oct. 11 (AFP)--Nigerian President Shehu Shagari could produce a vote-winner for his ruling National Party by allowing the former Biafran rebel leader Chukwuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu to return home from exile, unofficial sources said here today.

The reports follow the president's decision of October 1 to permit the return of Mr. Ojukwu's one-time opponent, the former Nigerian head of state Yakubu Gowon, without fear of prosecution for his alleged part in the assassination of his successor in 1976.

Informed circles here were surprised not to see the same clemency granted to Mr. Ojukwu, who lives in the Ivory Coast where he fled in 1970 as his forces surrendered after 30 months of trying to establish the secessionist Ibo-dominated state of Biafra.

However, it seems that Vice-President Alex Ekwueme, a member of the Ibo tribe who formerly served in the Biafran administration, is now less popular with the electorate in eastern Nigeria, and the return of Mr. Ojukwu could be a valuable aid for the NPN.

The move would probably win over at least two states--Imo and Anambra--which formed the nucleus of Biafra but which rejected the NPN at the 1979 elections. The position of two other states--Cross River and Rivers--which were dominated by Ibos during the civil war is less clear.

Mr. Gowon told the British Broadcasting Corporation that he saw no reason why his former opponent should not also be pardoned. But Mr. Ojukwu's detractors here point out that the former Biafran leader was guilty of rebellion, a far more heinous offence than Mr. Gowon's suspected participation in a plot.

The NPN is split over the matter, and the party line is that the decision lies with President Shagari alone to exercise his prerogative. But unofficial sources say they would not be surprised to see both former leaders and British Military Academy classmates, Ojukwu and Gowon, campaigning for the NPN in the 1983 elections.

POLITICIANS VISIT OJUKWU, GOWON--Only yesterday, the NATIONAL CONCORD reported that Nigerian People's Party [NPP] delegation consisting of a (?low) number were in Ivory Coast to hold discussions with exiled Odumegu Ojukwu over his clemency. Today, the paper reports that the plateau NPP has also sent a similar emissary to Mr Yakubu Gowon in London. The CONCORD reports that the eight-man delegation which left last Sunday was led by the chief of JOS, Dr Fom Bot. The paper reports further that the delegation left with two letters to be delivered to Mr Yakubu Gowon. Meanwhile debate on whether or not Mr Yakubu Gowon could attend National Council of States meeting any time he returns to the country is in the offing. Reporting, the CONCORD quotes the chief press secretary to the president as expressing his personal opinion to the effect that if Gowon is in the country during any meeting of the National Council of States, he will attend. And talking of realignment of political parties, the NATIONAL CONCORD says a new party to be known as "Progressive People's Party" may soon be launched. The new party is a fusion of the Unity Party of Nigeria, the Waziri branch of the Great Nigeria People's Party and the Imodu's People's Redemption Party. The paper says Chief Awolowo has been tipped as the presidential candidate, with Governor Abubakar Rimi as running mate. Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim will be the party's chairman while Alhaji Abdulkadir Balarabe Musa [impeached Kaduna state governor] becomes the secretary general. INDIGENOUS SCIENTISTS SAID NEEDED--President Shehu Shagari has again emphasized the need for Nigeria to produce the material and technical means for defending her territorial integrity and meet her commitments in Africa. In a message to the First Conference on the National Policy on Science and Technology, the president said the nation could not continue to depend on the expertise and abilities of other countries. This was read by Vice President Alex Ekwueme. The president appealed to indigenous scientists and technologists and the general public to mobilize their talent to the rededication and commitment for the challenges at hand. They should not allow their energies to be dissipated in fruitless criticism which could hardly advance the cause of national integration and development, he enjoined. He stated that in order to enable them to achieve this desirable end, his administration has provided the impetus and the resources for science and technology activities and will continue to do so now and in the future. The president pointed out that in addition to the investment of substantial financial resources on scientific research and technological innovations, his administration was setting up seven new universities of technology, three of which are taking off this year. Besides, there were plans for the establishment of technical colleges and polytechnics in each state of the federation. He expressed the hope that the conference will provide advice on the best and cheapest way the country could bring its efforts on science and technology to bear on and respond directly to the goals and aspirations which Nigeria has set for itself, adding that nothing less would be satisfactory. He pointed out to the gathering of scientists that Nigeria cannot afford to engage in research activities that are irrelevant to the solution of our problems, adding that as a Third World country, she can also ill afford to finance and support utopian and esoteric technology programs. Under the new structure, known as the university system scale, the least paid staff will receive N [Naira] 1,560 annually, while N15,000 is fixed as the highest salary scale. The new structure takes effect from October 1, this year. The federal government also agreed with the commission's recommendation that universities be de-harmonised from the public service. Other recommendations accepted by the government include fringe benefits, such as housing allowance which has been increased to 20 percent of the basic salary of each officer's substantive grades. The government, however, remarked that university staff members would continue to enjoy the same pension scheme operating in the public service. The commission's suggestion that the position of a vice-chancellor should cease to carry a fixed salary, with an allowance of N5,000 per annum over the ceiling of the scale of a professor, was also endorsed. In addition, the government accepted that universities with student populations of 3,000 and above should have two deputy vice-chancellors, one for academic matters and the other for administration. Each of the deputy vice-chancellors will receive an annual allowance of N2,000 over and above his substantive salary. To buttress its point, the FOCUS argues that many others with whom Ojukwu waged his fratricidal war have since regained their freedom. MEETINGS BANNED IN ILORIN--From Ilorin State, the NIGERIAN HERALD reports that public meetings, assemblies or proceedings have been banned in the state capital by the police with effect from yesterday. The HERALD quotes the police press bulletin: It is a matter for regret that certain factions of a political party in Ilorin cannot see eye to eye with other factions of the same party, and thereby deliberately cause political unrest in the town and its environment. The paper concludes the warning with an appeal to the people to maintain peace and order. [Text] [AB141723 Lagos International Service in English 1630 GMT 14 Oct 81]

GREEN REVOLUTION FUNDS--Nigeria stands to spend a total of 6 billion naira on the green revolution program in the current national development plan. This represents 15 percent of the total federal resources allocated to the plan. Announcing this in Lagos today President Shehu Shagari said that the green revolution program will be vigorously implemented to attain self-sufficiency in food production before the end of the plan period. He noted that the first year of the green revolution was just coming in and there were signs that the harvest was good in most parts of the country. President Shagari was addressing a meeting of the members of the National Committee and chairmen of state green revolution coordinating committees which assess the progress of the scheme. He remarked that it was the responsibility of any government to ensure that its people were properly fed because food was one of the most basic necessities of life. He had, therefore, appealed that the green revolution program should not be politicized and called on all the state governments to cooperate with the appropriate authorities. NEW POLITICAL PARTY--In its lead story, the CONCORD reports that there is a plan by three political parties--the Unity Party of Nigeria, the People's Redemption Party and the Great Nigeria People's Party--to fuse as one party under a new political party to be known as Progressive People's Party [PPP]. The paper, quoting reliable sources close to the group, says Chief Obafemi Awolowo is to become the presidential candidate and leader of the PPP. The CONCORD says the final meeting and the signing of the agreement for the new party is to take place in Lagos next Monday. CONCERN OVER SECURITY--Lagos, 13 Oct (AFP)--The British high commissioner to Nigeria, Sir Mervyn Brown, went to the Nigerian Ministry of External Affairs on Monday to express his concern about the security of British nationals resident in Nigeria, it is learned on Tuesday in Lagos. According to a spokesman from the High Commission, the move followed the death on Monday of Mrs Maud Eagleton, a British national who had been living in Nigeria for about 20 years and had been working as a secretary at the British High Commission. According to the High Commission, Mrs Eagleton and her husband, also a British national, were attacked on Sunday at lunch time at Ilupeju, some 30 kilometers northeast of Lagos. Mrs Eagleton died on Monday from her injuries while her husband, who had been employed by the West African Trading Company, (SCOA--a French company) was repatriated on Monday morning with a bullet in his back. The same sources say when Sir Mervyn Brown went to the Ministry of External Affairs, he expressed his concern and left a note. The same sources, however, indicate that it was not a protest note because of the efforts made recently by the Nigerian authorities and police to curb the rampant wave of violence which has prevailed in the country for several years. In its Sunday, 10 October [as received] issue, the southeast daily paper, NIGERIAN CHRONICLE, reported the promise made by the governor of Imo State (southeast), Mr Sam Mbakwe, to protect expatriates living in his state following the murder of an Italian national, Mr Tito Faa, on 18 September 1981. OIL PRODUCTION INCREASE--Lagos, 17 Oct (AFP)--Nigeria's oil production rose to 1.064 million barrels a day in the month of September, it was learned from well informed sources in the Nigerian capital on Saturday. This volume, though it is inferior to the record production in March 1979 (2.479 million barrels a day), marks a clear increase (more than 300,000 barrels a day) as compared to that of August which was only 708,000 barrels a day, the lowest figure recorded since over 6 years ago. Nigeria's internal consumption is around 200,000 barrels a day. In spite of the increase in production, the accumulated delay in production with respect to previous estimates will result in a fall in Nigeria's revenue which could oblige the federal government to draw up an austerity plan for the next fiscal year. Eighty percent of Nigeria's revenue comes from oil. [Text] [AB180758 Paris AFP in French 1538 GMT 17 Oct 81]

POLICE FORCES OPENED TO FEMALE APPLICANTS

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 17 Sep 81 p 4

[Excerpts] The Ministry of Information and Telecommunications sent to the press some comments on the meeting of the Council of Ministers which was held Tuesday. The Council examined and adopted a bill that repealed and replaced Paragraph 9 of Article 38A of law No 66-07 of 18 January 1966 pertaining to the statute on police force personnel.

Article 38A of Law No 66-07 of 18 January 1966 pertaining to police force personnel stipulates in Paragraph 9 that male police officers who are appointed to a police post may take the professional examination set up for recruitment which offers access to the unit in which they have been commissioned or to the units immediately above.

At the present time, it seems advisable to open to women the opportunity to obtain access to three of the seven graded units into which the police for personnel is divided: the police superintendents unit, police officers and police inspectors, the members of which are not subject to active military service.

In order to allow women police officers who have been appointed to a police post post to compete for admittance to these units, it is necessary to change Paragraph 9 of Article 38A of Law No 66-07 of 18 January 1966.

The council examined and adopted a decree changing Decree No 78-148 of 13 February 1978 which established the methods of application of Law No 66-07 of 18 January 1966 pertaining to the statute for police force personnel.

It now seems advisable to open to women the opportunity to obtain access to three of the seven graded units among which the police force personnel are divided. These units, members of which are not subject to active military service, are those of police superintendent, police officers and police inspectors.

However, access to these three units, as well as to the other four, was until now reserved to men by Articles 20, 39 and 58 of Decree No 78-148 of 13 February 1978 establishing the methods of application of Law No 66-07 of 18 January 1966 pertaining to the statute for police for personnel. Consequently these three articles have been repealed.

In the same context, three other articles of the same decree have been modified: Article 3, for establishing the minimum size of female personnel; Article 112, to provide maternity leave for female personnel; Article 12, pertaining to participation in the professional examinations for police officers appointed to the various police posts.

PRESIDENT ON ENERGY EXPLOITATION--The Council of Ministers met yesterday at 9:30 a.m. in the Palace of the Republic under the chairmanship of the chief of state, Abdou Diouf. The president of the Republic then stressed the necessity for accelerating the process of developing domestic oil deposits. In that regard, the chief of state gave instructions to the prime minister to implement the organization of the Petrosen Company which was established for that purpose. In addition, the president of the Republic also stressed the need for completing studies which are in progress for developing our various peat deposits under the government's energy policy. Under the same heading, the chief of state also asked that efforts which are already underway for the systematic prospecting for oil, lignite, uranium and phosphate throughout the national territory be continued, and that the conditions required for developing these resources be established. PROBLEMS FACING MOBUTU REGIME ANALYZED

[Article by Jean-Eudes Barbier]

[Text] Kinshasa, 9 Oct (AFP)--The primary objective of the Zairian authorities over recent months has been to consolidate the regime of President Mobutu Sese Seko and to maintain stability in the country.

Only three weeks before the annual Franco-African summit conference, being held this year in Paris, Zaire is passing through a period of reflection and self-criticism, seeking greater political cohesion after a series of jolts.

A Zairian top official told AFP that the country was politically and economically sick, and "we need to identify the mistakes that have been made."

For the past six months the country's policy-making bodies have been meeting virtually nonstop, and public meetings have been organized to review the philosophy of authenticity which General Mobutu produced 10 years ago.

Last August the National Security Council and the Supreme Defense Council convened to discuss the law-and-order situation, and for several days afterwards the army took up positions around sensitive buildings in the capital, such as the main power station, the airport, fuel depots and the post office. Officially the operation was described as a routine exercise, but in fact this was the first such alert since 1965.

On the political level the ruling Popular Movement for the Revolution (MPR) has been reorganized, and several of its members expelled.

The authorities have now resorted to keeping a watch on activities within the church, which is generally agreed to be the only organized body within Zaire strong enough to criticize the government. About 45 percent of Zairians are reckoned to be Roman Catholics, and earlier this year a pastoral letter was read from pulpits in churches throughout the land denouncing official corruption and accusing the government of ignoring basic human rights. On June 23 the Standing Committee of Bishops issued a statement to protest kidnappings, arbitrary arrests, settling of scores and even torture. Cardinal Malula, archbishop of Kinshasa, has been (?imprisoned and is said) locally to be listed as the president's personal enemy.

In external relations General Mobutu has concentrated on defusing the explosive situation created by his former Prime Minister Nguza Karl I Bond, who announced his resignation last April while he was in Brussels, claiming that his life was in danger.

Since moving into self-imposed exile in Belgium, Mr Nguza has repeatedly attacked Mr Mobutu, accusing him of misappropriation of public funds and informing anyone who cares to listen that a popular uprising in Zaire is imminent.

The former prime minister has also stated his readiness to lead the country once General Mobutu is no longer in power. In retaliation Mr Mobutu has withdrawn Mr Nguza's civic and political rights for five years.

However, there is no clear evidence that the former prime minister would be able to satisfy his ambitions through the ballot box if the opportunity presented itself, for his own popularity is far from obvious. Some extremists from Shaba Province--his birthplace--call him a traitor for having compromised with the Mobutu regime for several years. But on the other hand it is also obvious that Mr Nguza enjoys a certain credibility among international opinion and that the open war he has declared on his former leader must have harmed the president's image.

Another blow to the ruling regime was the election of Francois Mitterrand as president of France in May. The new socialist government has never hidden its reserves about the Zairian leader, whose methods of government it disapproves of.

However, the pragmatic government in Paris has decided to continue its military cooperation with the Kinshasa government. This was an important decision in terms of political stability in Zaire, for French forces in Zaire include 300 men of the elite 31st Paratroop Brigade, which remain under French command. There are also some 130 officers and noncommissioned officers in the country on training schemes.

After a period of indecision Paris also decided to normalize its political relations with Kinshasa, and Mr Mitterrand's adviser on African affairs, Guy Penne, has since held talks with President Mobutu. Mr Penne subsequently called for bilateral relations to be developed, and there have been reports that Mr Mobutu might meet the French president before the Franco-African summit.

French backing for the Mobutu regime is all the more important because relations between Zaire and its former colonial administrator Belgium are going through a difficult period. The authorities in Kinshasa have reproached the Brussels government for harboring its opponents, and allowing them to voice their political opinions, and on several occasions the countries have been close to a rupture in diplomatic relations.

Zaire, which is deep in debt (to the tune of $5 billion) needs friends more than ever before at a time when the International Monetary Fund is helping it to put its economy in order. Success in the operation, to restore the economy is almost certainly vital to Mr Mobutu's future in government.

APPOINTMENTS OF NEW GOVERNMENT MEMBERS ANNOUNCED

Presidential Ordinance

AB091606 Paris AFP in French 1511 GMT 9 Oct 81

[Text] Kinshasa, 9 Oct (AFP)--The Zairian head of state, Gen Mobutu Sese Seko, Friday appointed members of the new Executive Council (government).

Under the ordinance providing for the composition of the new Executive Council, 12 members of the former council have lost their portfolios while 8 remain and 5 change portfolios with 9 new members being appointed.

Among those dismissed are, in particular, Bomboko Lokumba, foreign affairs and international cooperation, who is replaced by a lawyer, Yoka Mangono; Duga Kugbe Toro (territorial administration) who is replaced by Vunduawe Te Zpemako who was on Thursday also appointed deputy first state commissioner (deputy prime minister); Emony Mondanga (commissioner without portfolio) who is replaced by former Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Idzumbuir Asal Bolumbu, and Elebe Ma Ekonzo (commissioner for information) who is replaced by Kande Dzambulate, who will also retain his functions as delegate general to AZAP. This is a tremendous comeback as he was the first state commissioner for information under the current regime from 1965 to 1970.

The presidential ordinance which gave the composition of the new government also contained that of the MPR (the ruling party) Executive Committee which comprises, apart from Nsinga Udjuu--who is its executive secretary and at the same time occupies the post of first state commissioner (prime minister)--the following officials: Tshibwabwa Ashila Pashi, deputy executive secretary charged with mobilization, propaganda and political activities; Kangafu Vingi Gundu Bagana, secretary general charged with the training of the cadres (unchanged); Nzanda Buana, secretary general charged with the party's youth (unchanged); and Mrs Ekila Liyonda, secretary general charged with women's affairs (unchanged).

CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL REVIEWS NATION'S INDUSTRIAL SITUATION

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 13 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by E. D.]

> [Text] (...) "Plan that which is always based on an overall perspective. That which does not retreat within its shell, that which tries to ascertain first of all what is most important for our people, for this or that province, or region; so that one sector or another may have the necessary means to produce or cause to produce the essential goods required by our people. After all, your document is clear on this subject; it is realistic. It is so realistic that it shows with militant courage all the causes of the strangulation which is limiting and impeding any increase in production and productivity."

This passage quoted from Pedro Pacavira secretary of the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party for the productive sector, makes it quite clear that the results achieved by the participants to the Fourth Consultative Council of the Ministry of Industry, held for 2 days on the premises of the CUCA factory in Luanda, were satisfactory.

The final conclusions reached at the meeting indicate some of the causes which prevented the accomplishment of the announced plans. In fact, those conclusions emphasize that, in the industrial sector, production stagnation and difficulties in obtaining certain supplies were caused by the fact that domestic sources of raw materials of agricultural origin were almost totally lacking; a similar situation prevailed in the supply of imported raw materials.

With regard to light industry, the participants concluded that there was a slight increase in production whereas, in heavy industry, most of the problems are of a structural nature which can be overcome with new investments some of which are already underway; it should also be pointed out that considerable progress has been made in this sector by companies which produce transportation equipment and by new and correct perspectives in the development of the steel, foundry and naval reconstruction sectors.

In the mining industry and with regard to the production plan for 1982, the participants concluded that certain sectors, such as phosphates and iron, are now getting started with industrial exploitation scheduled for next year. With a bit of effort, they concluded, it should be possible to achieve the goals set by the First Extraordinary Party Congress in the production of diamonds, ornamental stone and crystalline quartz.

In addition, the participants ascertained that the main reasons for not achieving the goals set by the First Extraordinary Party Congress could be summed up in lack of knowledge of the real material and human capabilities available when the proposals were submitted to the congress, severe restrictions brought about by short supply of raw materials and equipment and limited appeal to international technical cooperation; limitations in the water and power supply systems and in transportation; the gradual deterioration of equipment; inadequate social conditions for the workers; lack of incentives to inspire technicians and other skilled workers; and inadequate system for penalizing poor workmanship and praising good productivity.

Pedro Pacavira's Speech

The secretary of the Central Committee for the productive sector said that "the results of this consultative council do, in fact, indicate a desire to work in an organized and disciplined manner in keeping with the annual plans and in conformance with the recommendations of our congress but that we must, of necessity, foresee all the factors of a conjunctural nature.

"With regard to the new plan," he said, "our comrades were careful to reflect on what was planned for 1981. Therefore, the new plan underwent substantial revision inasmuch as the results of the present plan have not been very good; with the new plan, in addition to correcting the deficiencies already mentioned (the BRI's, port congestion, inadequate water and power systems), we shall have to insist on greater labor discipline, a better and more rational use of budget ceilings and better control over production workers and their assignment to jobs compatible with their capabilities."

After pointing out that certain products in short domestic supply are appearing on the black market, Pedro Pacavira concluded by stressing "that we need to replace words with action, proposed plans with their realization and ideas with reality."

LOW DEBT SERVICE, OIL EXPORTS CONTRIBUTE TO ECONOMIC SUCCESS

Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by Philippe Decraene: "Economic Achievements and Oil Receipts Should Favor Success for the Fifth Plan"]

[Text] Yaounde--Oil production of 4 million tons projected for 1981 and reserves already estimated at 85 million, reserves of natural gas estimated at several hundred billion cubic meters (production has not yet begun): these are the powerful key assets of the Cameroonian economy. Cameroon, which has considerable hydroelectric reserves, many of which have only partially been exploited, is not having energy problems, unlike the great majority of black African states.

Despite spillover from the oil manna (the nation only needs about one million tons per year), people here are not only resisting the temptation to yield to arrogance--they are not even publicly addressing the question. The reasons given in Yaounde to explain this modesty are diverse: "President Ahidjo does not want to see happen here what happened in Nigeria--people deserting the fields and expecting miracles. In Nigeria, production of groundnuts and cacao declined substantially as oil exports climbed," we were told by a young Douala banker. The minister of economic and financial affairs, Youssouha Daouda, told us: "We are finishing our 4th [5-year] plan and we are going into a unique phase. The objective the government initially established of doubling per capita income within 20 years was attained 4 years earlier than anticipated. In preparation for the 5th plan, we have prepared a summary report of the last two decades and drawn some lessons from the experience thus gained. We intend now both to stimulate agricultural production, already large enough to enable us to export foodstuffs to Nigeria, Gabon, and Chad, improve the village communities in order to more effectively restructure the rural sector, take into account the high (about 2.4 percent) rate of demographic growth, and encourage the establishment of small and medium-sized enterprises."

These modest ideas notwithstanding, schemes of much greater scope are also contemplated. Thus, taking advantage of the recent discovery of oil and natural gas, Cameroonian leaders are looking at the possibility of developing the entire southeast portion of their country, which borders on Equatorial Guinea and Gabon: a gas liquefaction plant at Kribi, construction of which would require

Fr CFA 300 billion in investment, or the equivalent of the entire current national budget, a methane terminal, a deep-water port intended to complete the estuary port of Douala: such are some of the ideas presently under study. All this should make possible the exploitation of an immense forest zone, the exploitation of iron deposits in the hinterland, the establishment of small industries along the road artery linking Kribi to the capital and, ultimately, an end to the Central African Republic's isolation, by means of a railroad linking the Atlantic Ocean with the town of Nola, in that country.

Doubtless, the Kribi region will have to wait several years before experts and planners have mobilized the considerable investment required to bring it into the modern world. But even now there are many things of which Mr Ahidjo can be proud: there is a great deal of agricultural production: 210,000 tons of cacao and 120,000 tons of coffee were exported in 1980; add to that 300,000 tons of wood; in the northern part of the country, the yield in cotton (1.5 tons per hectare) is higher than in the United States or Sudan; the debt service on external debt is ridiculously low and remains one of the lowest on the continent, since it is scarcely 8 percent of the budget and amounts to only 8.2 percent of export earnings.

This explains why for 2 years now delegations from foreign countries have been streaming into Douala, the economic capital of the country, and Yaounde. Officials, bankers, businessmen are showing continually growing interest in Cameroon. The French are not lagging behind, but already increasing numbers of Americans are being seen. Until 1979, France was the biggest customer and foremost supplier of the country, but since 1980, it has fallen into second place behind the United States, which buys most of Cameroon's oil production. From 5 percent in 1978, the U.S. share of Cameroonian exports climbed to 26 percent in 1980. During his visit to Paris, Ahidjo was to explain to his French interlocutors--were it only to interest them in the proposed exploitation of his country's natural gas--that Cameroonian production might be useful for France if the latter is trying to reduce its excessive dependence on Algeria and the Soviet Union in this domain.

AL-SADAT PRAISED IN CONDOLENCE MESSAGES TO EGYPT

AB100824 Bangui Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 10 Oct 81

[Text] Africa was terribly moved by the death of Egypt of His Excellency Anwar al-Sadat, president of the Arab Republic of Egypt, a sister country which has always maintained cordial and friendly relations of cooperation with the CAR. The Chairman of the Military Committee of National Redress [CMRN] paid him a particularly glowing tribute in two messages, one addressed to the Egyptian ambassador to the CAR and the other to Husni Mubarak, vice president of the Arab Republic of Egypt.

In the messages, Gen Andre Kolingba expresses his deep consternation and emotion at the announcement of the assassination of President al-Sadat, who died with his boots on. The chairman of the CMRN also notes President al-Sadat's efforts to restore to Egypt its real independence and the peace necessary for its reconstruction. The CMRN chairman, who led members of the committee to the Egyptian Embassy in Bangui, signed the book of condolence. It will also be remembered that on the occasion of the death of President al-Sadat, a national day of mourning was decreed last Wednesday throughout the country.

According to that decree, the CAR has to be represented at the burial ceremony in Egypt. The head of state therefore sent an important delegation which left Bangui on the night of Thursday, 8 October 1981. The delegation is composed of Brig Xavier-Sylvester Yangongo, minister of public service, works and social security; Capt (Paul Dimassi), secretary of state for foreign affairs, and Victor Zawouey, deputy secretary general of state protocol. The delegation will attend the funeral of President Anwar al-Sadat in Cairo today.

BRIEFS

COOPERATION WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA--Guinea and Czechoslovakia will cooperate in the cultural field for the period 1981-1983 through a cultural program in the education, arts and culture, health, information, youth and sports sectors. In the field of teaching and sciences, the two governments encourage and support scientific research and have expressed their willingness to exchange scientific researchers. In order to make this cultural cooperation more meaningful, the Czech government will offer every year a number of graduate study grants, while both parties will exchange documents and educational materials. In the arts and culture sector, an exchange of personalities in the fields of music, literature, archeology and library sciences is envisaged. The two parties will exchange information material on plastic arts, the protection of historical monuments and environmental protection. In the field of health, Guinea and Czechoslovakia will intensify their cooperation in observance of the WHO slogan "Health for everyone in the year 2000." In the information sector, relations will bear on direct cooperation between cinematographic services, television entities and the press agencies of the two countries. The agreement was signed on 3 August 1981 by comrade Mamadi Keita, member of the national political bureau and minister of higher education and His Excellency Michal Kollar, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Socialist Republic of Czechoslovakia. KOMSOMOL DELEGATION--The JRDA (Youth of the African Democratic Revolution) and the KOMSOMOL, which have maintained close relations since 1962, took one more step in stengthening these relations of friendship and cooperation by organizing in our country the ninth friendship week between the two youth organizations from 13 to 20 September 1981. The KOMSOMOL delegation which arrived in our country on 13 September included 22 members and was headed by comrade Alevtina Fedelova, secretary of the KOMSOMOL central committee and first secretary general of the pioneers' organization. It was welcomed at the Conakry Gbessia airport by comrades Oumar Diarso and Thierno Seydou Dieng, assistant secretary general in charge of foreign relations and secretary of arts and sports of the JRDA respectively. The KOMSOMOL delegation visited the Kindia, Mamou, Dalaba, Pita and Labe federations. It expressed its satisfaction about meeting with the dynamic Guinean youth and affirmed its desire to cooperate and broaden relations of friendship with the JRDA. The Soviet delegation left Conakry for Moscow on Sunday. [Excerpts] [Conakry HOROYA in French 27-30 Sep 81 p 39]

HOPE EXPRESSED FOR RECOVERY OF FAILING ENTERPRISES

ENAFRUTA Uncertain Future

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] ENAFRUTA [National Fruit Company], fruit marketing company, is now undergoing a period of uncertainty. Its future continues to be an unknown to the workers who are not being used to their full capacity and who are supporting the recovery of the firm in profitable ways; in their opinion, this would benefit not only the state but also the personnel whose wages are at present being assured by credit granted by the Ministry of Defense.

Paralyzed after the events of 14 November as a result of discrepancies in the use of the Marketing Fund for which it was audited, the firm aroused the attention of the government which initiated an inquiry as to its viability.

According to information given our newspaper by the firm's present manager, the results were encouraging and indicated good possibilities for recovery.

To carry out the project, ENAFRUTA would use its present facilities and equipment--namely, its buildings, vehicles and refrigeration room; it would also go ahead with the project for producing manioc flour and try to capture the international market which is greatly interested in our products, thus obtaining foreign currency for our country.

Mixed Guinean-Algerian Fishing Company

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 5 Sep 81 p 8

[Text] The Board of Directors of GUIALP (Mixed Guinean-Algerian Fishing Company) will meet in Bissau in the second half of this month to consider the relaunching of the firm. The procedures for relaunching the firm will be the principal item on the agenda, Comrade Domingos Correia, GUIALP's executive officer, told our newspaper.

Correia also told us that the work sessions will begin on 15 September in Bissau and not in Algiers as formerly agreed by the two authorities involved; Guinea will also be represented by Comrade Antonio Cabral, executive officer of the National Bank, and Comrade Jacinto da Silva, economist from the Ministry of Finance.

According to the same source, the work sessions will last 1 week and will culminate in definiate action aimed at starting up the firm along new lines inasmuch as its activities have been paralyzed for about 2 years.

From what our newspaper was able to learn, the new policy calls for the sale of the seven vessels which make up the fishing fleet and the chartering of vessels under GUIALP's management for 30 days on the high seas, with both the fuel and other necessities being dependent exclusively on the foreign market.

This measure will make it possible for the firm to recover from its almost inoperable position because of constant mechanical difficulties experienced by the vessels and aggravated by a lack of spare parts on the international market, for being vessels of ancient vintage and from irregularities in fuel supply and other necessities which plagued the country in the last few years.

In the future, as the firm begins to earn a profit--and it will be remembered that the method being discussed and proposed at the last meeting held in February in Algiers is being implemented by the mixed Algerian-Morrocan company with excellent results--GUIALP will acquire a fleet with greater storage capacity and with equal of greater autonomy than those now proposed for the chartered vessels.

The above-mentioned vessels will be unloaded in Dakar or Las Palmas, the principal markets for our fish, where our representative--to be appointed by the firm--will assure a new supply of fuel and other necessities and the transfer of the financial receipts to the National Bank of Guinea-Bissau. All those operations will be closely followed by domestic personnel who will also serve as crews on the vessels.

It will be recalled that GUIALP was established in 1975 through a fishing agreement between Guinea-Bissau and Algeria, with our government subscribing to 51 percent of the capital. This industrial and commercial firm was created to catch, process and market fish and other seafood products and is headquartered in Bissau; it is managed by a board of directors made up of Algerian and Guinean representatives.

OFFICIAL TO WOMEN'S CONGRESS--The 16th Congress of WIDF is taking place in Prague from 8 to 13 October. Our country will be represented at this congress by a delegation of the national commission of Guinean women headed by Francisca Pereira, member of the Supreme Struggle Committee and national secretary of the women's organization. The delegation left Bissau yesterday. The congress has been organized under the slogan "The Struggle Against the Manufacture of the Neutron Bomb." YOUTH REPRESENTATIVE TO YUGOSLAVIA--The Amilcar Cabral African Youth (JAAC) was represented in Belgrade at a seminar organized by Yugoslav students within the framework of the Nonaligned Movement by Comrade Isac Monteiro, an official of our youth vanguard. Delegations from more than 90 countries and youth organizations discussed questions related to the participation of youth in their country's economic and social life. This youth representative stressed, upon his return to Bissau, that since the delegations present at the seminar represented various political wings from many continents, this fostered a better exchange of viewpoints on international problems. ADF FINANCING--The SUINAVE company completed last Tuesday the plans for a poultry and hog raising project to be financed by the African Development Fund (ADF) in the amount of 87 percent, while the Guinea-Bissau Government will contribute 13 percent. The total investment amounts to approximately $5,000,000. Production centers will be established in Ilonde (Biombo region), Jugudul and Bambadinca. The hog raising project envisages the annual production of 573 tons of pork. The poultry raising project will produce annually about 5 million eggs and 37 tons of chicken. Full production should be attained in 5 years for hog raising and 3 years for poultry raising. In addition to the ADF and the Guinea-Bissau Government, participants in the project are the British Livestock Company which will furnish equipment, livestock and technical assistance, the Portuguese Andrade firm, which will render various services and the Construcao Limitado company, a private Guinea civil construction firm. Work on the installations should begin this year. This project is aimed at improving the population's daily diet. [Excerpt] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 3 Oct 81 p 8]

MESSAGE FROM CASTRO--On the occasion of the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the PAIGC Comrade Nino Vieira, president of the revolutionary council recieved a congratulatory message from the president of Cuba, Comrade Fidel Castro. The message stresses that this anniversary is especially remembered and constitutes a homage to the founder of the PAIGC, Amilcar Cabral, who led the Guinea people in the struggle for independence and to open the way for the construction of a society free of exploitation. Fidel Castro also reiterated his decision to continue working toward the strengthening of the ties of friendship and solidarity uniting us. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 23 Sep 81 p 8]

PORTUGUESE BANKING COOPERATION--A delegation of high officials from the Bank of Portugal completed this week its 3-month mission, the objective of which was to assist the National Bank of Guinea-Bissau in setting up a new accounting system that would permit the bank to prepare the country's balance of payments. The two economists from the Bank of Portugal, Francisco Mendes and Jose Matos declared that they accomplished their mission successfully because of the satisfactory cooperation they received, not only from the National Bank of Guinea-Bissau, but also from the Ministries of Finance and Economic Coordination and Planning. Within the same context, they also succeeded in preparing an estimate of the balance of payments for the years 1979 and 1980. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 26 Sep 81 p 2]

POWER SHORTAGES--Frequent black-outs continue to plague Bissau. We were able to ascertain from sources at the power plant that the difficulties are the result of a use in temperature, which vastly increases demand, with cuts scheduled so as not to damage the generators. Another factor is the substantial increase in the network of domestic and industrial consumers since independence, while the principal generators remain unchanged. Those recently installed operate at intervals, while new and modern equipment is gradually being readied. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 30 Sep 81 p 3]

DELEGATION OF SOVIET DEPUTIES VISIT MADAGASCAR

Visit Comes to Conclusion

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 9 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] The visit of the Soviet parliamentary delegation, headed by Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov, deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR and chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Socialist Republic of Azerbaydzhan, is coming to a close.

Yesterday morning was the occasion of another meeting with the People's National Assembly, headed by President Lucien Xavier Michel Andrianarahinjaka.

This closed working meeting lasted four hours and took place at the Tsimbazaza Palace, attended by both delegations.

Yesterday afternoon, the Soviet delegation visited the medium-wave broadcasting center at Imerintsiatosika, one of the latest achievements of Soviet-Malagasy cooperation. Following the meeting with the Soviet-Malagasy Friendship Association at the Association's headquarters in Antaninarenina, Chairman Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov held a press conference at the Tsimbazaza Palace at 1600 hours. The Soviet delegation will leave Antananarivo tomorrow morning.

Soviets Meet With Prime Minister

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 11 Sep 81 p 6

[Text] On Wednesday afternoon, the first parliamentary delegation from the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, headed by Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov, deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR and chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Azerbaydzhan, paid a courtesy visit to Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona, head of the Malagasy Government.

On that occasion, the head of the government confirmed to the leader and members of the Soviet delegation the basic objectives of the Malagasy socialist revolution and the democratic structures on which it is based.

He also told the head of the delegation of the ardent desire of the Malagasy people to make the Indian Ocean a zone of peace and recalled the move made by President Didier Ratsiraka, appealing to all heads of state in the world on the subject.

Nor did he fail to transmit to the chairman of the presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, Leonid Brezhnev, the thanks of the Malagasy Revolutionary Government and people for the unreserved support of the USSR for the move of the Malagasy chief of state.

In turn, the head of the Soviet delegation stated that the Soviet Union appreciates the just revolutionary struggle being waged by the Malagasy people and follows the development of Madagascar along the socialist path it has chosen.

After reviewing bilateral relations between the USSR and the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, the two officials expressed satisfaction with the harmonious development of relations of Soviet-Malagasy friendship and cooperation, which are constantly growing.

Attending the meeting were Ampy Portos, acting minister of foreign affairs, Leonid Moussatov, ambassador of the USSR to Madagascar, and Madame Radanielson, technical adviser to the Office of Prime Minister.

Soviet Deputies Satisfied With Visit

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 11 Sep 81 pp 1-2, 6

[Text] On Wednesday afternoon, the office of the president of the People's National Assembly at the Tsimbazaza Palace was the scene of a modest but significant ceremony marking the conclusion of the visit of the Soviet parliamentary delegation to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar. Actually, it was during this ceremony that Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov, head of the Soviet delegation, and LXM Andrianarahinjaka, president of the Assembly, signed the Soviet-Malagasy joint communique marking the close of the visit of the delegation from the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. The ceremony was attended by members of the Soviet delegation, members of the Permanent Bureau of the People's National Assembly, members of the Malagasy press corps and representatives of foreign press agencies.

President Andrianarahinjaka took advantage of the opportunity to tell newsmen that the communique, whose complete text follows, contains all the details on the visit which the Soviet deputies have just paid to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, at the invitation of the People's Assembly and in response to that which the Assembly's delegation made to the USSR in September 1979. After the exchange of documents by the head of the Soviet parliamentary delegation, Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov, and President Andrianarahinjaka, the latter yielded the floor to Khalilov, who reviewed the schedule of the delegation he headed for newsmen.

Khalilov first of all thanked the officials of the Revolutionary Government and especially the members of the National Assembly for the efforts they made to enable their Soviet guests to get to know the Malagasy people and country better and to see the achievements of the socialist revolution. Nor did he forget to thank the press for having publicized the visit, which fits into the framework of Malagasy-Soviet cooperation and friendship. The head of the delegation then enumerated the main important points of the delegation's program during its week in Madagascar. In short, it was a positive balance sheet that made it possible to tighten the bonds of friendship between the two peoples in order to establish lasting peace, the basis of harmonious development.

The head of the Soviet delegation then recalled that he had transmitted to President Andrianarahinjaka the appeal made by Chairman Leonid Brezhnev to lawmakers in the progressive world to defend peace and institute peaceful coexistence, the only way to build a just and prosperous society for all mankind.

In answer to questions from newsmen, Khalilov emphasized the fact that the Soviet deputies are all elected directly by the people, that the Democratic Republic of Madagascar and the Soviet Union have identical views in the fight to establish peace in the world, particularly President Ratsiraka's move to make the Indian Ocean a peace zone, that the Soviets are in Afghanistan to join with Afghani militants in defending the accomplishments of the Afghani democratic revolution, by virtue of a treaty of friendship and defense between the Afghani Democratic Republic and the USSR, and so on.

The following is the text of the Soviet-Malagasy joint communique, issued at the close of the Soviet deputies' visit to Madagascar. The delegation leaves the country for Moscow this morning.

Joint Communique

Following the visit by the delegation from the Soviet Socialist Republics to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar:

The delegation from the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, headed by Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov, deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Republic of Azerbaydzhan, paid an official visit to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar from 3 to 10 September 1981, at the invitation of the People's National Assembly.

The delegation was made up of:

Kurban Ali ogly Khalilov, deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Azerbaydzhan (head of the delegation); Joutchenko Alexandre, deputy, deputy chairman of the Committee for Protection of Nature and the Rational Use of Natural Resources of the Soviet of Nationalities, chairman of the Academy of Science of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Moldavia; Youhanson Nicolas, deputy, member of the Committee for Public Instruction and Culture of the Soviet of Nationalities, first secretary of the Tallinn City Committee of the Communist Party of Estonia; Makarova Lydie, deputy, secretary of the Committee for Public Health and Social Security of the Soviet of the Union, general practitioner of the Polyclinic Sector in the Vorochilov district of Moscow; Malkhozov Raouf, member of the Committee for Labor Problems and Women's Living Conditions, Protection of Mothers and Children of the Soviet of the Union, chairman of the Kolhozo Lenin in the Autonomous Region of Karachai-Cherkessk, territory of Stavropol.

The delegation was accompanied by: Outkine Vassily, adviser to the delegation; Mrs Tchourkina Ludmilla, aide to the Department of International Relations of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, secretary of the delegation; Yegochkine Valery, interpreter.

The delegation was received by Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona.

In addition to Antananarivo, the Soviet delegation of deputies visited the faritany [higher administrative unit] of Mahajanga and the Antsirabe fivondronana [union of village associations] I and II in order to learn about the life, creative work and art of the Malagasy people and had discussions with officials from the decentralized collectives.

During meetings with Lucien X, Michel Andrianarahinjaka, president of the People's National Assembly, and members of the Permanent Bureau and deputies from the People's Assembly of Madagascar, the deputies from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics were informed about the Malagasy socialist revolution and the organization and operation of the People's National Assembly, its committees and the decentralized collectives, as well as about the international bonds of the highest legislative organization of Madagascar.

The delegation was also informed about the most important achievements in Madagascar in the social, economic and cultural fields and about the main orientations of the domestic and foreign policy of the Malagasy Government.

The members of the Soviet delegation appreciated the efforts made by Didier Ratsiraka, president of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution, the Supreme Council of the Revolution, the Malagasy Parliament and the government in order to bring about progressive changes, strengthen the national economy and develop education and public health in their country in order to establish a new society based on equity and justice.

It was also emphasized that Madagascar's policy of aiming for peace and its positions of principle in supporting movements of national liberation in the anti-imperialist and anticolonialist struggle, have won it broad prestige in the international arena and above all, among the liberated countries of Africa, Asia, Latin America and countries in the socialist community.

For its part, the Soviet delegation informed Malagasy deputies about the structure and activities of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the main directions of the USSR's domestic and foreign policy, and activities of the organizations of people's government aimed at carrying out the resolutions of the 26th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

The Malagasy officials have greatly appreciated the role of the Soviet Union in consolidating international peace, security and detente and in the assistance it has given to national liberation struggles. Madagascar's deputies manifested their support for the peace initiatives contained in the appeal of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics "to parliaments and peoples of the world," in which it is quite rightly stated that parliaments have the path of negotiations as a solution in order to halt the arms race and bring about disarmament.

Both sides manifested their disapproval of the massive production of the neutron bomb, which is the most barbarous means of exterminating human beings. They condemned the provocative actions of the imperialist forces and their accomplices in bringing about the failure of the aspiration of the peoples on the shores of the Indian Ocean aimed at making that ocean a peace zone, a non-nuclear area.

Both sides noted that Soviet-Malagasy bilateral relations, based on the principles of friendship, trust and noninterference in domestic affairs, international solidarity and mutually advantageous cooperation, are successfully developing in the political, social, economic and cultural domains. They agree that there must be an expansion of ties between the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the People's National Assembly of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, so that it will become an important link in the development of all Soviet-Malagasy relations.

The delegation from the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics expressed its sincere gratitude for the cordial reception and hospitality extended to it on the friendly soil of Madagascar.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE OF KDTM-FJAR PUBLISHED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 17 Sep 81 p 2

[Joint communique of the Democratic Committee of Youth and Students for the Defense of the Malagasy Socialist Revolution (KDTM) and the Autonomist Youth Front of Reunion (FJAR), dated 7 September 1981]

[Text] In response to an invitation from the AKFM-KDRSM [Congress Party for Malagasy Independence-Democratic Committee To Support the Malagasy Socialist Revolution] Revolutionary Youth, within the framework of the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the KDTM, and in response to the FJAR invitation to the KDTM, a delegation from the Autonomist Youth Front of Reunion, headed by members of its Political Bureau, visited Antananarivo from 30 August to 7 September.

During its visit, the FJAR delegation learned of the achievements of the Malagasy people under the leadership of President Didier Ratsiraka within the framework of the democratic national revolution, a phase moving toward socialism, and of the activities and accomplishments of the KDTM in the political, economic, social and cultural fields.

The delegation also held meetings with the Political Bureau of the AKFM and the National Executive Bureau of the KDTM, during which problems common to the two Indian Ocean countries and international problems were examined.

On the basis of these discussions and contacts, the FJAR and the KDTM: state that young people are an integral part of their people; express their concern and condemn the cold war policy perpetrated by imperialism, particularly the decision by the Reagan administration of the United States to build the neutron bomb, as well as to expand the military forces and bases in the Indian Ocean, but reaffirm their support for security, detente and peace in the world; and note that more than ever, peace must be preserved.

It is along this same line of ideas that the FJAR and the KDTM support all initiatives relative to the search for solutions so that the Indian Ocean will be a peace zone, initiatives such as the Sri Lanka conference and the proposal of Didier Ratsiraka, president of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, to call an international conference following that of Sri Lanka, in Antananarivo; reaffirm their anti-imperialist solidarity with the peoples and youth of the Middle East, Africa, Asia and Latin America who are fighting Zionism, racism, apartheid, fascism and imperialism; are convinced that Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, will have its independence forthwith; condemn the acts of aggression of the racists of South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola and the other neighboring countries of South Africa, as well as the aggression of the American imperialists against the national sovereignty and security of the progressive nations; express their determination to combine their efforts with progressive youth in the world.

The KDTM reaffirms its solidarity with the struggle of the people and revolutionary youth and believes that with the victory of the left in France, changes in keeping with the aspirations and interests of the people and youth of Reunion will come about.

The KDTM appreciates the role of the Autonomous Youth Front of Reunion (FJAR) in this struggle.

The FJAR has taken great interest in the experiences of the KDTM in the fight against colonialism, neocolonialism, imperialism and for the building of socialism and reiterates its support for the Malagasy socialist revolution.

For the strengthening and expansion of bilateral cooperation and relations, the KDTM and the FJAR manifest their determination to proceed to have exchanges of information, delegations and experience. They express their willingness to cooperate with all national and international organizations of progressive youth for peace, democracy and social progress.

The Autonomous Youth Front of Reunion (FJAR) thanks the host organization: the KDTM, the Political Bureau of the AKFM and all officials for ensuring their pleasant and fruitful stay in Antananarivo, capital of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar.

MONIMA HOLDS FIFTH REGIONAL CONFERENCE

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 7 Sep 81 pp 1-3

[Text] On Saturday morning, Razafindratandra Justin, member of the Political Bureau of the Vondrona Socialist MONIMA [National Movement for the Independence of Madagascar], officially opened the party's fifth regional conference, which was attended by the national secretary, Remanindry Jaona (CSR [member of the Supreme Revolutionary Council]), representatives of the AKFM [Congress Party for Malagasy Independence] (Rakotovao-Andriantiana), the AREMA [Vanguard of the Malagasy Revolution] (Charles Ravoajanahary), the UDECMA [Malagasy Christian Democratic Union] (Pierrette Ratsarazafy), the Vonjy (Marojama Razanabahiny), chairmen of the executive committees of the faritany [higher administrative unit] and members of the diplomatic corps.

This fifth regional conference of the VSM, like previous conferences, fits into the framework of the celebration of the 10th anniversary of the people's movement of 1 April 1971 and is based on three themes: the aspects of the difficulties of the faritany masses; the difficult circumstances now experienced by the people and the role of the VSM in the defense of the revolution; and the positive and negative aspects of the people's movement of April 1971 for further work in ideology.

950 Members

The federal secretary of the Antananarivo VSM rapidly reviewed the state of health of the VSM and the democratic organizations affiliated with it in the faritany, in order to emphasize "our determination to break once and for all with a bad habit we inherited from the mother party to which many of us belonged before June 1977. That bad habit is the exaggeratedly optimistic evaluation of party strength." That is self-criticism!

In the Antananarivo faritany, there are 38 VSM sections (6 in the Antsirabe I fivondronana [union of village associations], 15 in Antsirabe II, 7 in the capital, 14 in Atsimondrano, 3 in Avaradrano and 3 in Tsiroanomandidy). Alongside these sections, there are three legally constituted federations.

According to the latest figures, these sections include 950 members. As for the democratic organizations, the MONIMA Socialist Youth has 18 sections. The socialist union SYMPIMITO [expansion unknown] has 10 sections and the MONIMA Socialist Women has 7 sections.

Party of the Oppressed

According to the speaker, these figures mean that "in the Antananarivo faritany, the VSM and its democratic organizations are not currently powerful. This is true numerically, but structurally as well. However, they are alive and are fighting with all their strength. In addition, the progress registered by the VSM is encouraging because this is sure progress, taking place without any precipitation."

"The progress we have made truly becomes encouraging," he continued, "if one agrees that it is the working class and the poor peasantry that really need change and revolution. They are the fundamental classes which, through their work, produce the wealth in this country and it is they who are exploited and oppressed by society at present. It is for this objective reason that they need to upset and transform this society."

The VSM "is truly the party of the workers and poor farmers. That is the class nature of our party in the Antananarivo faritany."

For his party, Remanindry Jaona began by asserting that "it is normal for the VSM to remember the people's uprising of April 1971, which represents a great moment in our national liberation struggle. It is no less legitimate that the VSM should now openly proclaim that it is a current continuer of this liberation struggle that is not yet finished."

Presenting the line of the VSM and the responsibilities it has assumed in order to defend the revolution in the difficult period in which the people and Madagascar find themselves, the national secretary of the VSM said that "a party that is incapable of self-criticism can never move forward along the path of progress and cannot claim [part of text deleted]. It is also a duty for our party to set forth, clearly and without ambiguity, our analyses and opinions of the current situation. It is also a duty to make our proposals for bringing the country out of the crisis known."

Proposals

Jaona then spoke of the role of the VSM within the Front, presented the VSM view on the difficult national situation and presented a number of proposals for meeting the crisis.

The proposals consisted of three lines of action:

1 -- "Government officials must tell the people the truth about national affairs, without demagogy, without misplaced pride. The people must not be kept in ignorance of affairs concerning them because they will then feed upon rumors. At any rate, why should be conceal our inadequacies from the people when they alone can correct them?"

"It is only when a people knows the truth that it can assume responsibilities and only in this way can the indispensable national concensus emerge."

2 -- "We must establish strict discipline in order to eliminate the current laxity as soon as possible. Parties belonging to the Front must establish discipline in their mutual relations as soon as possible. The people expect a model from the Front in this area and the VSM believes that such discipline is possible if one truly loves the revolution. Furthermore, iron discipline must be established within the very government apparatus. Discipline must be the golden rule in the management of affairs of state and this strictness must be concrete and felt by the people. We must punish without discrimination all those guilty of violations, both in government enterprises as well as in posts of political responsibility."

He continued: "The people no longer believe in fine speeches. The current circumstances require that we give up demagogy, the lack of strictness and laxity. The VSM believes that such a change can be brought about without delay."

3 -- "If we were to impose such discipline, it would then be possible for the government and the Front to draft an anticrisis plan of action."

It should be noted that the representatives of the Front parties also spoke on solidarity within the Front and united work in order better to defend revolutionary achievements and reach a new phase of the revolution.

UNICEF GRANT FOR SOCIAL COMMUNICATIONS CENTERS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Albano Mendes]

> [Text] Pemba--By October of this year, over 200,000 peasants in various regions of the country will benefit from communications systems in their respective communities. To this end, the Public Communications Section of the Ministry of Information is conducting a major program in support of the integrated development of the communal villages, covering 24 rural communities in four provinces.

With technical support (equipment and specialists in the field) from UNICEF, the project was initiated in 1977, with an experimental phase of about 2 years. During this time four Social Communications Centers were established in as many villages, located in Cabo Delgado, Niassa, Gaza and Maputo Provinces.

It is noted that Maputo was included in place of Nampula Province because the authorities in Nampula "faced serious obstacles to the proper development of the program," according to Bento Albino Bango, assistant national director of the Office of Public Communications.

The Social Communications Centers (one aspect of the program) consist of infrastructures--a pavilion and studio--built with local materials and equipped with generators, amplifiers, loudspeakers and movie projectors, and a People's Newspaper.

This simple audiovisual equipment will enable the residents to organize programs to their tastes produced in the local dialect, with the help of some trained staff.

Bango told NOTICIAS in Pemba that the Social Communication Project for Communal Villages is not the final answer in the attempt to reach rural areas, "but is simply filling the void created by the failure to meet the specific communications needs in these areas."

The next phase of the experimental period--the phase of expansion--began last year, when 20 more villages were selected to receive Expanded Centers for Public Listening.

This phase of expansion, also limited to the four provinces noted above, is actually an extension of the experience gained from the existing Social Communications Centers.

However, and this explains the designation given to the new centers, the technical equipment available to the communities includes radios and microphones as well as generators and loudspeakers, serving a broader purpose, since it is geared essentially to broadcasting programs of Radio Mozambique.

Project Development

The Communal Villages Social Communications Project is to be included in the Central State Plan for 1982, and the agreement with UNICEF has also been renewed, with financing extended from 2 to 4 years.

With initiation of the phase of expansion and consolidation next year, a goal of 58 villages has been set for 1984, with the expectation of reaching over half a million peasants.

During the 4 years, other means of social communication will be made available, notably mobile units (three of which will go into operation this month), to provide a link among various villages.

It should be added that during the Water Festival in Planalto de Mueda, attended by Maj Gen Marcelino dos Santos, the party's Central Committee secretary for economic policy, the Social Communications Center in Ntamba Village was inaugurated. General dos Santos paid a visit of inspection to the center.

The total cost of the project is 13,561,472 meticals. The Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique is funding most of this--over 8 million meticals, according to a financial summary included in a document from the Office of Public Communications.

PROGRESSIVE INCREASE OF RELATIONS WITH HUNGARY

Mixed Commission Meeting

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Sep 81 p 8

[Text] A Mozambican delegation led by Armando Guebuza, national minister-commissioner of the armed forces and vice minister of defense, left last night for Budapest, where it will take part in the first meeting of the Hungarian-Mozambican Joint Commission.

The meeting is in implementation of agreements between the two countries, which recommended periodic meetings in furtherance of established accords in economic, scientific, technical and cultural areas.

Speaking to the news media shortly before his departure, Guebuza said the meeting was expected to include discussion of questions related to the project to install an assembly line for Ikarus automobiles in Mozambique.

In a first phase, the assembly line would employ a limited number of Mozambicans. With progressive technical-professional training, still others would be employed in the sector.

Guebuza added that the Joint Commission would examine practical possibilities for cooperation in prospecting for nonferrous minerals, technical assistance and intensified cooperation in agriculture.

During its stay in Hungary, the Mozambican delegation will also examine ways of adding to the existing military accords between the two countries.

"I am certain that in this joint meeting we will find ways to bring the two countries even closer together," concluded the national minister-commissioner of the FAM (FPLM) [Mozambican Armed Forces, formerly Armed Forces for the Popular Liberation of Mozambique].

Friendship Treaty Ratified

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 19 Sep 81 p1

[Text] Last Wednesday the People's Republics of Mozambique and Hungary exchanged documents in ratification of the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation, an event of major importance in relations between the two countries, preceding the first session of the Joint Commission, which is meeting now.

Armando Guebuza, member of the Permanent Political Committee of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee and national political minister-commissioner of the FPLM, and Frigyes Puja, foreign affairs minister of the People's Republic of Hungary, made the exchange.

The agreement establishing the Mozambican-Hungarian joint commission for development of political, economic, cultural, technical and scientific relations was signed in Maputo in 24 Sep 1980.

The joint commission is meeting for the first time this year, an event of historic importance in Mozambican-Hungarian relations, within the framework of the accords signed in June 1978, during President Samora Machel's official visit of friendship to that socialist European country.

The discussions between the delegations have been characterized by friendliness and mutual understanding. Various matters of common interest have been taken up, particularly bilateral cooperation and an exchange of views on the international situation.

This first session of the Mozambican-Hungarian Joint Commission is testimony to the fraternal solidarity between the parties, governments and peoples of the two countries.

GDR COOPERATION IN CREATION OF LOCAL CORRESPONDENTS NETWORK

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] As part of the strategy to create a national network of popular correspondents, as defined by the FRELIMO Party, a training course was inaugurated yesterday in the headquarters of the ONJ (National Association of Journalists) in Maputo. Taking part in the course are several individuals selected from national and provincial newspapers, as well as party activists and other workers in public communications.

Speaking at the opening session, Mia Couto, member of the Executive Secretariat of the ONJ and managing editor of the morning paper NOTICIAS, stressed the importance of local correspondents, particularly for the news media.

The news-gathering "mass media" should develop efforts to cover a broader range of news to meet the needs of their readership.

"No newspaper is working with local correspondents. We have attempted it various times, but nothing came of it because the provinces are not yet sufficiently structured. It's like wishing for hands when you haven't got a body," said Couto.

To give value to the course and make it productive, those present were urged to ask the instructors to discuss specific aspects relevant to the situation and needs of our country.

The course to train cadres for creation of a local correspondents' network will be taught by instructors from the GDR, here as a result of agreements between the Mozambican and GDR journalists associations.

During the course, which will last from 15 to 21 days, topics of major interest will be taken up, notably criteria for selecting local correspondents to meet our country's needs, principles of collaboration with the news media, how to work with letters from readers, and the GDR's experience in this field in 3 decades of revolution.

READER COMPLAINS ABOUT HIGH AIR FARES; PAPER REPLIES

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 4 Oct 81 p 48

[Text] I have kept up with price increases in the LAM (Mozambique Airlines), which had now doubled its rates. We have a number of people who earn a maximum of 3,000 meticals. My question is this: How is it possible for us, who earn this kind of salary and are living far from our hometowns, to go home to visit our relatives?

Moreover, we have other people who earn 3,000 meticals and have children and older people as dependents. How can they provide for the needs of these persons? If the LAM costs many meticals, if a pair of slacks costs many meticals, how can the people who earn small salaries--and especially teachers--manage on so little money?

This is why I am calling this letter "The LAM Is Only for Rich People." When air fares were established, no thought was given to peasants who are so desperately poor. I believe that these prices should have taken into account those who earn a minimum; on the contrary, it is the rich people who are benefiting from air travel, both to other countries and to various cities in our own country.

Marcelino Soda Chingalatoto
Tete

TEMPO's Reply--The basic question, here, is not to characterize the LAM as only a service for the rich, which it is not. It has been proven that most of the LAM passengers are persons traveling on business.

The choice was this: Either an increase in the price of air tickets or bankruptcy for the LAM, as its predecessor, the DETA, had already done. It was heredity from the past that determined the habit of traveling by air at ridiculously low prices. Air transportation is expensive throughout the world. And in the whole world, the most used means of communication are railroads or buses. The future of our means of communication resides right there, when we shall have established permanent and systematic rail and road communications from the north to the south and vice-versa. They may not be too comfortable, but are definitely less expensive than air travel. Also, they may even be safer.

DPRK INCREASES ASSISTANCE IN AGRICULTURE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Sep 81 p 8

> [Text] Cooperation between Mozambique and the DPRK in agriculture is to be expanded even further, it was divulged during the visit by Mario Machungo, minister of planning and minister of agriculture, to Pyongyang, to take part in an international conference sponsored by the nonaligned nations on the food crisis in developing countries.

Machungo carried a personal message from President Samora Machel to Kim Il-song, the Korean chief of state. We have learned that the document referred basically to cooperation between the two countries.

As a result of Machungo's discussions in Pyongyang, several agreements expanding agricultural cooperation were swiftly concluded.

As one of the items of cooperation, a DPRK team will come here to work in corn and rice production in Nante, Zambezia Province.

About 2,000 hectares of land in Nante, which were under cultivation at one time, are now abandoned. The cooperation now established provides for recovery of this area, beginning with 500 hectares. A broader program is planned for this area in the future.

The N'Guri project in Cabo Delgado is also targeted for expanded DPRK cooperation. There are plans to extend irrigation to another 4,000 hectares.

In N'Guri an irrigation system is now under construction, with Korean cooperation, for an agricultural area of 1,000 hectares. To date, about 250 hectares are irrigated and the project should be completed by the end of 1982.

The first 100 hectares of this irrigated land was planted in this agricultural year with the help of Korean technicians. The area produced an average yield of 6 tons of rice per hectare.

This is the highest productivity achieved to date for rice in this country. In the current agricultural campaign, the Limpopo Agroindustrial Complex obtained a yield of about 1.6 tons per hectare for this grain.

In two meetings with Korean authorities, it was also decided to execute some other small irrigation projects at the foot of the Mueda mesa.

The largest of these projects will take in 500 hectares and will be developed at the Filipe Samuel Magaia Veterans' Production Center in Magaia, Cabo Delgado. The others will be located in Mueia, Quinhevo and Nangade.

In this visit to the DPRK, the Mozambican delegation had an opportunity to study the experience of that Asian country in agricultural development through irrigation.

A significant aspect of this experience is the way in which the DPRK makes full use of its waterways for economic purposes.

MINISTER MAKES TOUR TO EVALUATE PROGRESS OF HARVESTNG CAMPAIGN

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 22 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Kailou Youssouf]

[Text] On Sunday morning, the minister of agriculture, Dr Ari Toubo Ibrahim, began a tour to evaluate progress on the 1981 harvest in the country's seven departments.

The minister spent last night in Tahoua and will go to Agadez, via Ibecetane, today, where the ministerial delegation spent the day.

From Hamdalaye to Tahoua, passing through Tabala, Damana and Bagaroua (where the ministerial delegation spent Sunday night), Azao, Illela, Karaye, Yama and Badeguichiri, wherever he has gone, the minister has learned about the agricultural and grazing situation from administrative and common law authorities, district agriculture officials and heads of agricultural districts.

Based on the different remarks heard here and there, one can say that the agricultural situation tends to be promising in the Filingue and Illela districts.

In Filengue, where the ministerial delegation, accompanied by the general secretary of the prefecture of Niamey, Hamani Yari, was welcomed only a few kilometers from Balleyara by the deputy prefect of the district, Yahaya Oumarou, 60 percent of all millet is ripe and 40 percent has reached the milky stage.

Sorghum is at the seed formation stage. Some 60 percent of the niebe is ready for harvesting. In different cantons of the district, there are a few villages that might have a millet shortage, but the good production of sorghum and niebe would make up for it.

A total of 14 villages in the canton of Damana would have a 30- to 50-percent millet shortage due to the sandstorms at the beginning of the season and floods in four villages.

In Bonkoukou, crops suffered in some regions of the canton from a drought in August. In the canton of Filingue, parasites hurt crops, mainly in the region of Sanam. Some 1,900 hectares were sprayed by air and another 800 by land methods.

However, in the district as a whole, the situation is better than last year. Sorghum and niebe are doing well. Nearly everywhere, the millet harvest has been underway for nearly a week. According to the head of the canton of Filingue, the marketing is taking place under perfect conditions.

In the district of Illela also, the agricultural harvest is going well despite the fact that 16 villages have shortages, due to the late beginning of the season, as well as pockets of drought in August, parasites and sometimes poor soil. Here, millet is in bloom, forming seed and maturing, nearing the beginning of the harvest. Sorghum has reached the milky stage and the beginning of maturity. This year, 108,150 hectares were planted out of the 150,000 arable hectares.

In the district of Illela, the minister visited three training centers (CPT): in Azao (a few kilometers from Illela), Karaye and Yama.

The Yama and Azao centers, which now have 16 and 20 couples respectively, were set up only this year. The farmers sent to these centers by different cooperatives spend 6 months in the CPT's, where they learn modern growing techniques.

The Karaye training center, set up in 1979, also welcomed 18 couples this year. Per-hectare yield for millet this year was 950 kilograms, compared with only 200 in 1979.

After the different visits, Minister Ari Toubo Ibrahim returned to Tahoua, after spending the day in Badeguichiri.

Upon its arrival in Tahoua, the ministerial delegation was received a few kilometers from the city by the department prefect, Battalion Commander Tandja Mamadou. A few minutes later, the minister presided over a meeting with cadres.

THREE CANADIAN DRAFT AGREEMENTS SIGNED

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 19-20 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] Canadian Ambassador Ernest Hebert and Minister of Planning Brah Mamane joined together yesterday morning in signing three protocols relating to proposed Canadian-Nigerien cooperation.

The first proposal consists in support for agricultural development in the Department of Diffa. It is aimed at increasing agricultural production in that region of Niger and at improving the capabilities of technical services of the departments of agriculture, the Nigerien Credit and Cooperation Union and of woods and forests.

Pilot production projects, the training of farm families in new techniques and the cooperative system, research, construction and the supplying of equipment will all give the project the elements needed for its execution, which will be spread out over a period of about 4 years. Canada will devote a sum of 1,272,000,000 CFA francs to the project and Niger will provide 220.5 million CFA francs.

The second project has to do with the establishment of a pilot line of credit through which Canada will make a grant available to the Nigerien Government amounting to as much as 414 million CFA francs, to be used to purchase, from Canada, equipment or consumer goods through importers designated from among Nigerien public and parapublic organizations and joint ventures under tutelage. Proceeds from the sale of these imported goods will be into a special account set up to help Niger finance its own development.

The Canadian International Development Agency and the Nigerien Ministry of Planning are the organizations responsible for the implementation of the project, which will be completed by 31 March 1982.

The third project, whose protocol was signed today, deals with the establishment of a counterpart fund to be used to finance local and recurrent expenditures linked to development projects agreed upon by Canada and Niger.

Hebert and Mamane expressed their satisfaction with the implementation of these new projects, which bear witness to the bonds of close friendship and cooperation that exist between the Canadian and Nigerien peoples.

DISHONESTY OF BUSINESSMEN, SHORTCOMINGS IN PRICE CONTROL NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 12-13 Sep 81 pp 1, 4

[Article by Cherif Evalide Seye]

[Text] Reading the official prices for ordinary consumption goods will make more than one person laugh. The prices have almost nothing to do with daily reality in the markets. Current prices--and they are quite real--in general are much higher than the official prices. The official price of rice if F 80 [Prices stated in CFA Francs of the African Financial Community] per kilogram; the current price is F 125 per kilogram.

This state of things reveals simultaneously a certain indifference and resignation. The indifference is on the part of the services charged with the represion of illegal activity. Is it a matter of insufficient means? We don't know. The result is that, despite the action carried out by the economic control services, prices continue to climb, and artificial shortages continue to be organized.

The state of resignation, on the other hand, is that of the consumers. It is not forbidden to ask oneself about the consequences of this kind of resignation on the very activity of the various control bodies. You, we, all Senegalese, in a general way let things go along. We are resigned victims of a tyranny of which, however, we do not cease to complain. No doubt, there is a certain fatalism in this kind of behavior, unless it is the indirect resurgence of the fear which the then all-powerful merchants inspired during the colonial period. It is still the case that, confronted almost every day with illegal price increases, the consumers do nothing, unless they limit themselves to grumbling against the dishonesty of the merchants.

This intolerable situation for family pocketbooks which already have little in them nevertheless has a much graver consequence. Apart from the illegal price increases, everyone has been able to note that the official prices reflect a certain increase. This increase was foreseen a long time ago, since the initiation of the short-term and medium-term economic recovery plan.

One of the fundamental points in this plan was price realism. Except for items of daily necessity too sensitive to any fluctuation, rice for example, it was a matter of ending the generalized system of subsidization of major consumer items. This system had turned out to be a heavy burden for the Fund for the Equalization and Stabilization of Prices and was difficult to limit. As the prices of these items were lower in Senegal than in bordering countries, a leak developed, and the Fund was thus subsidizing the consumers of other countries.

In the framework of the recovery program it was therefore decided to work on price realism and also realism regarding income. The resources freed by ending certain subsidies were to make it possible to raise salaries burdened by inflation. Thus it was that in two stages salaries, both in the private sector as well as in the civil service, were raised, while in the countryside the prices paid to producers were also raised. When this was done, a recovery of consumption was expected, which was to start the economic machine going again.

This program, because of the simple fact of illegal price increases, is being destroyed. The expected resumption of consumption threatens not to occur, since the increase in salaries has already been passed up by the increase in prices of merchandise.

From this point of view the illegal price increases constitute a rather serious threat which should not be minimized.

This is a battle which all of us have to wage. The official government services owe us much greater effectiveness, and we consumers must ourselves be more demanding. The merchant selling to us is not doing us a service. He is just doing his job as a merchant. The refusal to sell is wrong. Many of us don't know all that. Thus, it appears evident that a broader information program for the consumer is required to encourage him to play the indispensable role of helper, without which no government service, however well organized, will ever bring illegal price increases to a halt.

No doubt we should also consider simplification of the procedure for consumers who complain. For it is evident that it is not easy to resign yourself to losing a whole morning to save 20 francs.

AFRICAN LEADERS WARNED; BRIGHT PROSPECT AHEAD THROUGH COLLABORATION

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 Sep 81 p 14

/Editorial: "A Plea for Reason"/

/Text/ Yesterday's address in parliament by South Africa's foreign minister, in which he dwelt on South Africa's foreign relations in their broadest and most comprehensive scope, comes down to the strongest plea ever made to African leaders to listen to reason.

Minister Pik Botha painted the alternatives in a grim, but clear manner. One of these is that the movement toward confrontation and conflict in the subcontinent will be allowed to go on. However, he warned, it must be borne in mind that it will no longer be possible to crush South Africa; it simply has become too strong.

The other alternative is collaboration. But then the conditions for this are that the leaders of Africa, a continent which is headed for perdition with an astronomical number of unemployed, billions of dollars in foreign debts and falling production, must give up their blind condemnations and harsh language. Reason must conquer these things.

The blind condemnation on the part of African leaders is also being felt in the South-West Africa question. This factor, besides the United Nations' partiality and those foreign troops in Angola, were cited by Minister Botha as the most important obstacles for an agreement in the South-West which would be a great asset for South Africa's foreign relations.

If the South-West problem could be settled this could help along what the minister has been envisaging as new alliances and partnerships, especially in the Southern Hemisphere. In connection with this he mentioned as attractive possibility of a Southern Atlantic collaboration between South Africa, Nigeria, Brazil and Argentina. We all need each other and if ideologic stumbling blocks can be overcome this would benefit this entire region of the world and serve as an additional buffer against Russian expansionism.

Above all the minister pointed out that steady progress is being made on the road to reform in South Africa's internal policy trends...the determining factor in its foreign relations. South Africa must pursue this in the hope that this broad trend will continue and be recognized. As long as this is South Africa's attitude it cannot be blamed if the plea for reason, made yesterday with such deep convictions by Minister Botha, is blown into the wind.

POINTED CRITICISM OF VISITING LIBERALISTIC MINDED WESTERNERS

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 11 Sep 81 p 8

/"Perspective" Column by Otto Krause: "The West's Growing Business"/

/Text/ Once again a motley lot of foreign visitors: politicians, writers, university people and others has recently landed at the Jan Smuts Airport for the purpose of becoming seeped in this very peculiar South African society for a few days or perhaps a few weeks.

Like so many hundreds of their predecessors these types of "opinion formers" to whom I am referring have come to South Africa to gather facts, to seek explanations for the South African phenomenon, to attend international conferences (of course on the South African problem) and moreover to subsequently write long articles about us or to make some profound speeches.

> These people who continuously investigate and condemn South Africa are a special type and their motivation is to be sought more in their own countries than in the racist sins of South Africa. They are children of their own histories...and that is their problem, not ours.

The Gurus

Seen at a different level there are many of them who have come for their own aims, to win over political points among the people back home, to promote their careers (or to revive them), to give evidence of their pure liberalism, to find amusement in our sins, or to search our very hearts.

Upon his return to London one of these people has truly succeeded in reaping a great deal of publicity by asserting that the South African authorities have opened his letters. For shame!

However, there is no question that Operation South Africa, the great drive to look into our activities, describe them and usually condemn them, has become a real big business in the West. This is something we must take into view, because the unending droplets of water on our rock are especially aimed at eroding our image.

South Africans dealing with these visiting business-gurus sometimes feel that we are being looked upon as a bunch of apes behind cages in a zoo. With all those curious eyes fixed upon us we feel inclined to pelt these bystanders with peanuts and bottle fragments from our cage...and sometimes we feel like using something worse.

And rightly so, because so much of this Operation South Africa is based on false views, hypocrisy, pseudo-facts and trouble seeking.

I will not deny that there is a certain measure of honest research into our South African circumstances, however, there are a predominant number of visitors who come here only for the purpose of reinforcing their condemnations and gather information for the purpose of using it against us.

I want to make a sharp retort to them:

Certain Americans: We find among these a special kind of self-complacency and self righteousness. They believe that they have overcome their own racial problems and as a sign of this they want us to follow their prescription to the letter. This moral arrogance does not wish to recognize the differences in the circumstances and behind it there protrudes an imperial aim to turn the world into a copy of liberalistic America.

Certain Germans: Here one has to deal with a resounding feeling of guilt over their recent racist sins. But these liberal Germans have certainly turned over a new leaf and now they talk faster than they can think! They are furthermore frustrated, because Germany's economic importance in the world is not lending them sufficient political weight and they think they can win this by conspicuously wooing everything that looks like a Third World country. Down deep they think that a new extravagant liberalism will get them to forget their old excessive conservatism.

Certain Frenchmen: French leftists are more calculating in their anti-South African attitudes. Generally speaking the French are more philosophical and more conversant with the power game of international politics. Their leftists thus weigh calmly the advantages of taking a stand against South Africa against the advantages to be derived otherwise. Moreover, sometimes they think that we are fools for not practicing a little bit of hypocricy.

Certain Britons: A special type here are the Boer-hating Tories who cannot forgive us Afrikaners for having taken South Africa from them and now want to get at us with a new found liberalism. But the history behind this attitude is simply too transparent. The other kind of Britons who come here with the purpose in mind of condemning us all the more are the socialists who think that Britain must do penance for its own racist empire and the cheapest way of doing this is to proclaim its repugnance of the sins of South Africa.

All of these people are supposing...or hoping...that their own past has been erased from the memory of the world. They are fond of presenting the picture of the "new Western people" who could never be accused of racism.

Convenient

These people think that the most direct way of presenting this pretty picture is to keep on pointing to the horrible racism of South Africa. We are their convenient lightning-arrester. However, although the rest of the world is using this psychological state of the West, and exploiting it, it is nevertheless being taken with a grain of salt.

We can be glad that the rest of the West is more realistic and that this group of troublemakers whom I have singled out is not representative. But the thing which troubles me is how accessive we make ourselves to them.

FAR RIGHT LEADER ASSAILED FOR VIOLENT STATEMENTS

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Sep 81 p 25

/Text/ Yesterday Nationalist Party politicians expressed shock over, and aversion to, a threat coming from Eugene Terreblanche, leader of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement (AWB), that there will be a bloody revolution if the government's constitutional proposals are approved in a national referendum.

Terreblanche was also branded "irresponsible" and "drunk with power."

According to a report in DIE VOLKSBLAD, a sister newspaper of DIE BURGER, the AWB leader made a statement in Bloemfontein on Tuesday evening saying that one way of defeating the government is to block the referendum and then win an enforced general election. However, should the government win out with a referendum, then there will be another way: "bloody revolution."

A bloody revolution will follow and then "we will get back the white man's land by force and the grace of God." These were his words.

Yesterday the Transvaal leader of the Nationalist Party, Dr Andries Treurnicht, expressed his astonishment over this utterrance saying: "Making threats of a revolution represents an utterly dangerous language in South Africa. Even a suggestion of a possible revolution, as a political method against the government's measures, is extremely dangerous and it had better be avoided."

Barend du Plessis, the MP for Florida, who in the discussion of the prime minister's budget item drew the ire of Terreblanche by sharply getting at the far rightists, went even further.

He said: "By making such a statement Terreblanche went beyond allowable limits. The government, authority and the public now know where they stand with this man who is so drunk with power that he is evidently in no condition to perceive the real challenges for South Africa."

Minister of Police Louis le Grange was out of town yesterday and was not available for a comment; however, in the past he has taken a strong position against possible illegal actions by the AWB. The AWB must know that it is being watched carefully. This is Le Grange's view.

ARMY COMBAT SCHOOL GROUNDS RENAMED AFTER P.W. BOTHA

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Sep 81 p 7

/Text/ The training grounds of the Army Combat School of the armed forces at Lothala in the Northern Cape will be named after Prime Minister P.W. Botha. This was made known in parliament yesterday by Minister of Defense, Gen Magnus Malan.

General Malan, who was presenting a reply on the discussion of his budget item, said that the grounds will be called: P.W. Botha Training Grounds. The Army Combat School, where soldiers are trained in conventional warfare, was established in 1977 on the initiative of Mr Botha who was then minister of defense.

The initiative for naming the grounds after Mr Botha arose spontaneously from Gen Malan and his department.

The combat school employs the most modern war techniques and arms in its training and the good fruits of this were recently plucked in Operation Protea. So stated Gen Malan.

Gen Malan also announced that the commando system is being looked over for the purpose of "expanding considerably its volunteer element" and to make it more regionally oriented.

Members of the fleet will also continue to perform border duty, according to Gen Malan, and the navy company who served there last year discharged its duty in an excellent manner.

With respect to soldier's pay Gen Malan said that the armed forces had succeeded in limiting complaints in this area to less than 1 percent after it had reached a rate of 4 percent. The chief of the Armed Forces Department gave his personal attention to this matter.

In a large organization such as the armed forces, which pays a total of 50 million rand per month in soldiers' pay, it is not altogether possible to avoid some mistakes.

ARMED FORCES, OTHER EXPENDITURES--Payments to the Armed Forces from 1 April to 31 August of this year have cost the government 1,203 billion rand. This comes to 241 million more than for the same time period of last year. According to the records of receipts and allotments from the treasury accounting published in the government's gazette, the total expenditures over this 5 month period amounted to nearly 11.8 billion rand. Of this amount 3,441,616,000 rand consisted of internal repayments of treasury notes. Altogether 37,416,930 rand was paid out to defense bonds, while the national defense bonds costs came to 146,705,800 rand. A total of 122,050,617 rand was allotted to the state oil funds as compared with the 111,716,901 rand of last year. The national road funds evidenced an increase of nearly 5,502,200 rand over last year's expenditures. The account for transportation services to the blacks from April to August amounted to 5,471,524 rand. Last year this was 6,105,552 rand. On the income side national defense bonds and defense bonds brought in 8,859,545 rand into the treasury. [Text] [Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 15 Sep 81 p 4] 7964

BAKARI'S INSPECTION TOUR--The junior minister of defense and national service, Col Seif Bakari completed his tour of national service units on the island of Zanzibar by asking the soldiers to be careful in maintaining their weapons. He made this appeal when he met with the officers and soldiers of the Mtoni camp the day before yesterday. He asked the soldiers to use their weapons for the country's defense and stressed that they should not involve themselves in criminal activities. Yesterday Junior Minister Bakari went to the Island of Pemba for a 4-day visit. At that time he said that the new allowance of 100 shillings instead of the former 50 shillings will be paid to JKT youths only. The new allowance will not include the youths of the National Economic Service [JKU] on the island as the TANZANIA NEWS AGENCY [SHIHATA] report in the newspaper UHURU stated the day before yesterday. He said that the JKU youth who join the Army of the Citizens of Tanzania [JWTZ] with a 3-year contract will receive this allowance of 100 shillings per month. TERRORISM INCIDENTS, MEASURES--Two policemen were killed and one wounded during an attack on a police station at Mpererwe, some 10 kilometers north of Kampala, by armed men dressed in the combat gear of the Ugandan army. The same men--who reportedly belong to an underground movement--are suspected of having attacked another police station about 10 kilometers away, at Kasangati. Enemies of the government attacked the police station at Luwero, 64 km north of Kampala, killing at least three policemen, including the station commander. According to a witness, the attackers, of whom there were 20 or 30, wore military uniforms and were riding in a truck. The government decided to put barricades on the roads leading to the capital city, following the attack on the three police stations. Soldiers are putting these measures of control conjointly with Ugandan and Tanzanian police. The rail link between Kampala and Mombasa, the main Kenyan port on the Indian Ocean, was cut in an attack carried out with explosives. [Text] [Paris AFRIQUE DEFENSE in French No 42 Sep 81 p 23] 9516

UNIONS APPEAR TO CHALLENGE ZERBO

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3346, 14 Sep 81 pp 2100-2101

[Text]

THREE of the four Voltaique associations of trade unions recently met in Bobo-Dioulasso and vigorously condemned "any government action aimed at intimidating workers and their organisations, or taking away union rights won at such a cost."

The trade unions are now the most significant legal political force in the country, excluding the military themselves, and their meeting on August 18 and August 19 formally decided to do whatever is necessary to achieve their objectives and to satisfy their legitimate demands. This seems a clear challenge to the social contract which the President, Colonel Zerbo, called for in his important May Day speech, in which the trade unions were to accept constraints on their freedom of action and speech. Instead, the three union associations present at the meeting, the Confédération Nationale des Travailleurs Voltaiques (CNTV), the Organisation Voltaique des Syndicats Libres (OVSL), and the Union Syndicale des Travailleurs Voltaiques (USTV), agreed to hold a national conference towards the end of the year.

The meeting in Bobo-Dioulasso centred on two specific demands. The day after Colonel Zerbo's May Day speech, in which he outlined the Military Committee's development priorities for the country, the same three groups of unions held a joint meeting in the capital city, Ouagadougou, which approved a 27-point list of complaints addressed to the Military Committee. This list included an immediate 50 per cent increase in the minimum wage level, readjustment of salaries, increases in family allowances, and a block on price rises for basic foodstuffs. Sadly, though, only one point referred specifically to the 85 per cent of Voltaiques who are unorganised peasant farmers: this was point 20 on the list, calling for a systematic upgrading of all low lying land in order to check the rural exodus. In any event, none of their requests have yet been formally answered by the Military Committee, and the meeting demanded replies as soon as possible.

The second contentious issue at the meeting was a series of severe sanctions signed by Colonel Zerbo on June 6, aimed at a group of civil servants who participated in a strike which was considered illegal. Briefly, a group of Voltaique students in Togo were expelled from their university accommodation in Lomé in May, ostensibly because a fight broke out concerning ownership of a bucket. But since President Eyadema of Togo and the deposed Voltaique President Lamizana were close friends, political motives were suspected. Some students in Ouagadougou attempted to organise a solidarity strike, and sanctions were imposed on them. This was the second major difficulty the military have faced at the university since coming to power: three months previously several lecturers were temporarily arrested for political activity which has been banned since the coup. In an attempt to force the lifting of this new set of sanctions against the students, some STOV union members went on a two-day protest strike from their jobs at the Ministry of Rural Development, the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Public Works. Immediately, the Military Committee responded: all were suspended without pay for three to six months. Colonel Zerbo added: "These sanctions must be considered as a once only warning to civil servants and state employees, and a danger sign to all those who believe that they can impinge with impunity on the rules established for the exercise of union freedoms."

The meeting responded by calling the government action a serious threat to trade union freedom, guaranteed by the military when they took over last November.

While the Military Committee have not responded to the unions' request for an increase in the minimum daily wage, they have announced that work will start on the railway line to the Tambao manganese mine on October 1. Tambao is in the north-eastern corner of Upper Volta, 350 kilometres from the capital and lying within the Sahel, very close to the borders with Mali and Niger. The sandy terrain and severe weather conditions make any work in that area far more difficult and costly than in the rest of the country. In West Africa of August 3, we described Tambao as a prestige project: this was denied at a recent press conference by the Minister of Plan, who instead called it "survival expenditure". The project has been quietly dropped twice in the last seven years because external financiers decided that it could never be economically viable. This time round, only Voltaique banks have so far committed themselves to the project, and they are only able to loan enough money to get the railway line 100 kilometres north of Ouagadougou, to Kaya, and no further. The director of the Banque Internationale des Voltas, M. Tabita, was appointed by the Military Committee when they took power, but the Minister of Plan, Sanfo Mamadou, a soldier himself, denied that the banks had been coerced into supporting a project nobody else would finance: "All kinds of people are saying that the State forced the banks to finance Tambao. In the final analysis, we can say that the financial institutions were not forced. We asked them what they could do voluntarily so that we could start Tambao." He also denied that the banks would have less money to lend for normal activities having lent £12m. to this project.

The unions may not be happy with the Military Committee's choice of priorities, nor with the military precision with which they are being planned. The Minister of Plan stated, "The Head of State, the Military Committee, promised the Voltaique people that the railway would start on October 1, and so everything had to be done to ensure that it happened on October 1. And that is what is happening."

RAIL BREAK-UP Ouagadougou, September 10--Upper Volta Transport Minister Gaston Gnoumou Kani expressed surprise today at "persistent rumours" from Abidjan that the Ivory Coast was to break up the Abidjan-Niger Railway Authority (RAN) linking the two countries. Captain Gnoumou Kani, who is also Minister for Public Works and Housing, said that his government would continue to operate the service under a joint agreement which provided for decisions affecting the railway to be taken jointly. If "our Ivorian brothers find it necessary and profitable" to divide the existing line into national sections the military government in Ouagadougou would immediately take over its own portion of the railway, he added. The minister said that there was no proof that the rumours originated within the Abidjan government, but "anything is possible." Capt Kani, speaking after a special Cabinet meeting called to discuss a planned extension of the existing rail line, described the railway as an "almost unique example of cooperation in the world." The cabinet meeting discussed a project to extend the Ouagadougou line to Tambao, near the northern border with Mali. Work on the extension is due to start on Thursday with symbolic laying of the first part of the track to Kaya, 105 kms (65 miles) north. The line, which will serve Tambao manganese mines and cement calcium deposits at nearby Tin Hrassan has to be built under participation conditions set out by overseas partners (from Japan, Kuwait, West Germany, France, and the Arab Bank for Economic Development of Africa). The Ouaga-Kaya section, which is expected to cost about 2.5 million dollars, is being paid for by the home government. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 2 Oct 81 p 19]

NEW POSITION, RECALL OF RETIREE MARK MILITARY PERSONNEL CHANGES

Paris AFRIQUE DEFENSE in French No 42, Sep 81 p 21

[Text] General Mobutu has made major personnel changes affecting most of the army's command positions. The series of decree-laws ordering these changes introduced two innovations--the first being the creation of a position of deputy chief of general staff of the Zairian Armed Forces (FAZ), and the second the recall into active service of a general who has been in retirement since 1977. The general staff of the FAZ will continue to be headed by Lieutenant General Nsinga Boyenge Mosambay, who will be assisted by Lieutenant General Boteti Nkoko Ea Nkanga, who was previously the chief of staff of the ground forces, a position that has been filled by Major General Eluki Monga Aundu. The chief of staff of the national police will be Brigadier General Molamba Pene Lowa, former commandant of the city of Kinshasa, whose successor is Col Longelo Mbule Wa Monzombo. Command of the head of state's military staff will be exercised henceforth by Col Bosange Bakola, who up to now was commander of the special presidential brigade; the latter position is being filled by Lt Col Nzimbi Ngbale. As for the first military region, which corresponds administratively to the regions of Shaba and the two Kasais, it is placed under the authority of Brigadier General Esale Yoka, former commander of the Kitona base, whose successor is Brigadier General Yeka Mangbau Lowanga, former chief of staff of the national police. Command of the second military region, which in administrative terms covers the urban region of Kinshasa and the regions of Lower Zaire, the Bandundu, and the equator, is given to the former retired officer, Lieutenant General Itambo Mukina Wa Kambala. The third military region, which administratively covers the regions of Kivu and Upper Zaire, falls to Lieutenant General Danga Ngbokoli, who thus succeeds General Eluki Monga Aundu, the new chief of staff of the ground forces.

ANALYSIS OF SHORTCOMINGS IN AFRICAN PLANNING SYSTEMS

Paris LE MOIS EN AFRIQUE in French No 182-183, Feb-Mar 81 pp 84-94

[Article by Andre Badibanga: "Obscurity and Gaps in African Planning Systems"]

> [Text] Have the countries which have chosen "planning-based liberalism" as a development model managed to achieve effective regulation of their national economies by means of planning systems that rely more on guidelines than strict orders?
> One has to admit the answer is no. Because, despite all of Africa's experience in planning over more than 20 years, no way has yet been found to control the external contingencies which impact so negatively on those national economies.
> In addition, they downplay the role of man and subsistence agriculture in their projections, and they go against the grain of the industrial revolution. This has been the cause of countless failures.

The notion of planning appeared in Africa at the pivotal time of independence. Since that time it has continued to fuel economic debate and, gradually, to replace the mechanisms which previously had guided public administration.

But what exactly is meant by economic planning? In general it is defined as a process intended to generate discussion of the economic system and quantify the real needs of the economy under consideration.

Starting from this assessment of the needs, the political leaders--after preliminary consultation with the chief organs of the state--establish the more or less long-term growth objectives to be pursued for the enhanced well-being of the nation. From the nature of those objectives, and above all from the manner in which they are to be achieved--taking into account the predominant mode of production--the fundamental characteristics, respectively, of Soviet and of Western planning, are derived.

The former is called centralized, in that it is imposed by compelling force on the socio-economic system and replaces the market mechanisms. The latter is called liberal, because it is defined as a pedagogical instrument aimed more at guiding economic players than making their decisions for them.

As between these two modes of planning which seem--in theory--to share no common ground, where do the various African planning systems fit, and how should they be described? "In our system of planning-based liberalism," says Mr Ahidjo, the Cameroonian head of state, "which proscribes anarchy, our planning can only be advisory, and of course prescribe the most important domestic options within which the spirit of free enterprise can flourish among economic players" (AFRIQUE-AUJOURD'HUI, No 13, p 9).

Is that rough--and admittedly incomplete--definition of African-style planning actually consistent with the model of "planning-based" liberalism that regulates the Western Economies?

Is the impact of African planning on the realities--that is, on the complex intricacies of their national economies--one of at least moderating, if not controlling, the shocks attendant to their openness to the world outside?

Do the African development plans--elaborated sometimes in such profuse detail as to discourage the reader--actually achieve the growth objectives which constitute the justification of their existence? Do they contain both the qualitative and quantitative elements which together enliven economic life?

In short, are they aimed at advancing man, both literally and figuratively, and improving the quality of his life? Such are some of the questions we intend to examine in this article.

Advisory Plans

From an examination, admittedly far from exhaustive, of the first attempts at planning mounted at the onset of African decolonization, one conclusion emerges: African plans are more advisory than authoritarian, in that they are presented as simple pedagogical tools, rather than mandatory plans in the sense in which the term is understood in the socialist countries. In addition, they do not replace free enterprise or the play of supply and demand. Does this mean that price controls, the cornerstone of both planning-based and laisser-faire liberalism, stand out in capital letters? A delicate problem, one regarding which a number of planners are speaking out bluntly.

Nevertheless, this free enterprise has been tempered here and there by various joint ventures in the economic field which often involve unequal partnerships between public and private capital--and nationalizations--which have been aborted even before producing the results expected.

Examples are those denationalizations known here as "dezairianization" and there "de-ivorization."

The purely hortatory nature of the African plans leads them to extol, for want of something better, opening the economies to the outside world. Such is the case with the 7th Ivorian plan, which provides not only for moving ahead with "the liberal economic option" but also the country's "opening to the outside world."

This opening is a constraint, because of the predominance of export crops which constitute the principal if not unique source of foreign exchange earnings. The intensive exploitation of these crops holds a privileged place in African planning.

Witness the 7th Ivorian plan which calls for rapid growth of the following crops: coffee and cacao, which, according to M.T. Diawara, former Ivorian minister of economic affairs, constitute "the principal resources of the country" and production of which will increase [sic] from 270,000 tons in 1975 to 330,000 tons in 1980.

However, still according to the former minister, it is "sugarcane production which is going to beat all records;" because it is going to rise from 115,000 tons in 1975 to 5.5 million tons by 1985.[1]

The growth of sugarcane production assumes particular importance in the plans of other African countries. According to the plans of the Ethiopian Government, sugarcane production will increase to 37,000 tons by 1980 [sic] and to 112,000 tons in 1985.

By 1980 Sudan will be capable of producing 800,000 tons, half of which will be destined for export. As for Zaire, the government's plan drawn up in 1974 involves raising the current 45,000-ton level of sugarcane production to 200,000 tons by 1980.

The development of export crops and/or mineral production not only occupies a privileged position in African plans—it even seems to be their be-all and end-all. Let us take two examples, in this connection: socialist Mozambique, and the no less socialist Algeria.

1) Mozambique: the 1978-1979 "investment program," drawn up instead of a "long-term plan" due to the lack of statistical equipment has among its aims: an increase in mineral prospecting and in the rail network, appropriations for which together consume nearly 45 percent of the financial resources mobilized for the above-mentioned program (see "Mozambique's Choice" in LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE, January 1979).

2) Algeria: According to Pierre Judet, "investments for industry, which grew tenfold between 1963 and 1969, grow tenfold again between 1969 and 1974, and between 1974 and 1977." Thus, "industry's share amounts to 79 percent in the 3rd plan, compared to 53 percent in the first plan," as reported in LE MONDE of 2 November 1979.

What are the problems posed by this intensive exploitation of industrial plants and/or the mining sector?

The priority given to the industrial sector and the development of export crops entails considerable outlays to finance the implementation of the governmental plans. This in turn results in the African countries becoming heavily dependent on external borrowing.

Financial Dependence

This propensity of African planning to consume foreign capital is linked to the economic scale of the countries in question. In other words, the more mineral wealth a country has, the greater its capacity to borrow from external sources. The figures spell this out at length. For the years 1966, 1967, and 1970, Cameroon's contribution to the financing of its own planning is on the order of 26.9 percent, while the contributions of foreign capitalists vary between 42 and 44 percent. That is to say that between the 3rd and the 4th plan, external investment (25.28 percent) [sic] increased by 42.26 percent. (See Albert Bonnal, "The Fourth Cameroonian Plan," in REVUE FRANCAISE D'ETUDES POLITIQUES AFRICAINES, Aug-Sep 1977).

That dependence on foreign moneylenders is even stronger in Zaire--whose external indebtedness amounted to $3 million in late 1978.

In fact, according to the 1977-1978 annual report of the Central Bank, Zaire's public debt amounted to 2.193 billion zaires at the end of 1977, compared to 1.430 billion in 1976.

This doubling of the debt results from the determination of the government to increase exploitation of the copper mines, Zaire's principal source of revenue.

A sign of the times: one of the big consumers of external loans in Zaire is GECAMINES [General Quarries and Mines Company]--the state-owned company responsible for developing the exploitation of the copper mines--which, for its expansion, drained 91.9 million zaires (Fr 100 = 48.9701 zaires) in 1977, compared to 17.8 million in 1976. (Op. cit. pp 185-187).

With regard to other African countries, one notes the same dependence. Such is the case with Benin, which "will be able," according to the introduction to the first plan, "to finance about 20 percent of public investment and 65 percent of private investment, or in other words about one-fourth of local investment. This shows that massive resort to external aid will be a critical prerequisite for carrying out the plan, particularly with regard to public investment."[2]

So much for Benin. But what can be said about Algeria, for example? To finance its industrial development, which constitutes the overriding priority of its planning, Algeria "has had to resort to external financing in the form of state loans and also in the form of (private) bank loans," writes Pierre Judet, who also adds: "the external financing portion has been concentrated on industry (about 90 percent). That rapidly growing external debt has, since 1978, entailed annual debt service outlays approaching 20 percent of the value of the country's exports. It is anticipated that in 1980-1983, debt service will climb past 25 percent of the value of the country's exports." (LE MONDE, op. cit.)

This growing disparity between external and internal contributions to the financing of the national development plans is still more striking in Gabon, which "remains faithful," the planners note, "to its spirit of liberalism, characterized by flexible planning, leaving an important role to the foreign private sector which contributes about 60 percent of the financing for the implementation of the national development plans."[4]

To give an idea of the importance of foreign capital to the implementation of African planning, we cite several other figures: of 110 companies with capital assets of less than Fr CFA 10 million established in Cameroon the day after independence, only 7 were partly owned by Cameroonians.[5]

The preponderant place held by foreign capital in the financing of African plans is not without its drawbacks. Limiting the freedom of action of the rulers, it also confers a great deal of authority on the foreign moneylenders. The latter can use their influence to further their own goals, rather than those of the development plans. For example, in opposition to the budgetary austerity called for by some government or other, they might award fat salaries to their local employees, with all the inflationary risks that are entailed.

In addition, foreign aid--whatever its end and source--always has strings attached, to the extent that it entails an obligation for the beneficiary country to place its orders for studies and other things with the donors. Leopold Sedhar-Senghor, the former Senegalese president, is doubtless best placed to appreciate the negative aspects: "foreign aid, even in its most generous forms, puts constraints on the implementation of the projects identified in our plan, because of the impact it may have on the interests of those providing the financing." (See Latyr Kamara, PRESENCE AFRICAINE, 1st Quarter 1971).

And Mr MacNamara, the president of the World Bank, puts it in even stronger terms: "I have been struck by the potential of these African countries and the many possibilities for profitably investing capital there." (idem).

The Food Shortfall

Since the implementation of the African development plans proves to be, if not burdensome for their economies, at least subject to many changes, of course to accommodate the interests of the foreign financiers, how is one to explain the high rates of growth achieved by some countries such as Ivory Coast (at the time of the famous "economic miracle"), the Congo, and Mauritania?

Is there not a fundamental contradiction, in terms of Maoist dialectics, between the economic performance of some African countries and the lack of performance, or very slow performance, in getting plans moving and actually functioning?

Far from it: the highest rates of externally oriented growth shown by these countries derive from certain favorable circumstances, which moreover are all exogenous: good economic conditions, high prices for certain commodities (the deterioration of the terms of trade being supposedly a random process) and the strategy adopted by the subsidiaries of the multinationals.

For example, Mauritania's growth in the years 1971-1972 was more the result of the establishment of MIFERNA [sic; probably MIFERMA, Iron-Mining Company of Mauritania] than of the measures called for in the national plan.

It is the same with Gabon, where the "highest growth rates were achived in 1968, in other words well before the implementation of the 5-year plan" (See Michel Dumas, PRESENCE AFRICAINE, 3rd Quarter 1971).

Also, the economic dynamism the Congo seemed to exude at about that same time was founded on the intensive exploitation of manganese and oil prospecting by the foreign companies. This explains the importance assumed by the latter in Africa's economic life, an importance which in turn explains the primacy of the industrial sector and the outward-looking growth which occurs to the detriment of the process of domestic [capital] accumulation. In other words, the African plans have not interrupted the line of development the economy was taking before the era of independence, but instead have reinforced it. These plans are thus to the economy what international law is to political life: they do not take precedence, but rather come afterward to codify it into "mandatory" rules, which, however, cannot be imposed on the sovereign states.

The African development plans no longer have any impact on the structure of the economies: being unable to regulate the latter, they confine themselves merely to taking into account the wishes of the moneylenders to the detriment of the vital needs of the people. This being so, they are really a part of the inherited economic system and because of this are a heavy encumbrance to Africa's economic development.

Thus we have the externally-oriented growth already described, which provides a perfect illustration of the "law" of diminishing returns derived from the considerable development efforts made in the mining and industrial sectors, while subsistence agriculture stays in a slump.

As a consequence of this piecemeal development, the amount of land cultivated and under irrigation is ridiculously low in Africa, compared to the vitality of the industrial sector. In Algeria, to cite but one example, it is around 300,000 hectares in 1979, compared to 290,500 hectares in 1977. This is why subsistence agriculture's share in African economic life declines from year to year. This is also why food shortfalls make African countries dependent on food imports.

In Guinea, for example, the food deficit has had the side effect of strengthening the country's food dependence on the United States. The latter provided Guinea, in exchange for investments in the mining sector, 10,000 tons of rice, 75,000 tons of flour, and 200 tons of vegetable oils during 1976 alone.[6] Again in agricultural terms, the situation in Zaire is even more worrisome. Listen to the report of the Bank of Zaire, already cited above: "foodstuff production for the supply of the domestic market remains insufficient despite increases in the price paid to the producer since 1974. This development has made the country more dependent on food product imports." The latter amounted to 468,511,239 zaires [worth of food products] for 1974, compared to 231,329,533 zaires for 1975. That decline is not due to changes in the level of domestic demand, which continues to remain vigorous, but to problems in the national treasury, especially the weight of the public external debt.

This latter figure was $1,400 million in 1974 according to official sources, and $17 million according to the creditors. Upon evaluation, the debt structure looked like this: $900 million in loans from commercial banks, $400 million provided by governments and foreign financial entities, $300 million in loans to the country in the form of "conditional" aid and $100 million in multilateral loans.[7]

In the face of that lamentable condition in the public finances, the "recovery plan" launched at the end of 1977 could only achieve concrete results, according to the review ZAIRE-AFRIQUE (Feb 1977) if the authorities would put the brakes on: 1) the budgetary deficit, which was 148 percent, in comparison with overall tax revenues--and 2) the agricultural, particularly the food, deficit. Added to the strong trend toward exporting raw materials and importing finished products, characteristic of satellite economies, does this double deficit not spring from an overly selective concentration of national planning objectives for the industrial sector?

The Insatiable Appetite of the Government Payroll

In reality, overly favored as the industrial sector may be, it is the tertiary sector, through its mediating function, which absorbs more than 50 percent of operating budgets. Then we have the hypertrophy of the government payroll, that cyst on the body of poverty which has turned itself into a veritable employer of the army of the urban jobless who people the slums. Proofs? They are numerous: in Chad, the number of government employees went from 2,000 in 1960 to top 30,000 in 1979. From 18,000 in 1960 in Senegal, it rose to 36,863 in 1968. To that figure must be added the number of local administrative agents (5,000) and the security forces (6,000).[8]

The most powerful "active" force in the People's Republic of the Congo, writes Jean-Marc Kafleche, "is today its bureaucracy: 36,000 employees." In Cameroon, the number of jobs created in the civil service in less than a decade exceeds 20,000, for an increase of 10 percent per year in administrative personnel.

This swelling of the ranks of public administration often proceeds from the political interventionism whose injurious effects end by paralyzing the authority responsible for attaining the objectives of national planning. One fact is certain: the politics of cliques and the spirit of nepotism it encourages is responsible in part for the untimely breakdown of African planning. That breakdown, according to Professor Benoit Verhaegen, is caused by the lack of effectiveness of "political will" and, according to the governor of the Central Bank of Zaire, "the incessant changing of objectives dictated by political fluctuations" bears the seeds of failure for African plans. Because "every minister has his own priorities" which he intends to carry out regardless of other considerations.

Another reason for the "non-implementability" of African development plans: the all too incurable inadequacy of the administrative apparatus; for, according to A. Waterston, "any plan whose execution depends on a reorganization of the public administration or a radical change of attitudes on the part of the government employees is in trouble even before one begins to implement it" (ZAIRE-AFRIQUE, Dec 1974).

Also, the repeated failures which are the lot of these plans arise from a lack of realism which mars them and drains them of any substance. This lack of realism is connected with the fact that African development plans do not take into account the realities of the international environment surrounding them. This explains why they inflate growth objectives in a way that strains the belief of foreign financiers.

This is the reason why the objectives in the African development plans are always divorced from the fundamental aspiration of the people.

At the same time, they concentrate far too much on the top levels, leaving the base of the socio-economic system far too decentralized. In fact, both in their formulation and in their problematic execution, African development plans are a perfect reflection of the strong, centralized states inherited from the colonial era or hastily established as soon as independence was regained. That tendency to concentrate development objectives at the apex of the state falls too much into the organizational mold of totalitarian parties, in which decisions emerging from the top manifest themselves at the base in the form of diktats. This transmission of orders from the top down without preliminary discussion derives from the vertical division of labor which rules international trade.

The result is stagnation in regional and inter-regional development, which is totally left out of both the process of designing and implementing the planning. At the bottom of this inadequacy, there is another political reason: the objectives of economic growth which serve as markers in the planning are too dispersed, when they do not gravitate around a single axis of development--to the detriment of other regions which are left out--and intentionally?--of the development process.

In that connection, listen to one testimonial: Gbado-Lite is on the way to becoming one of the main attractions of the so-called Equatorial region. The birthplace of the president, it could soon perhaps rival Yamoussoukro, the home town of the Ivorian president, Houphouet-Boigny, who has made the latter one of the most important places in the country.

"It is to Gbado-Lite that one must go to hear the Zairian head of state describe his personal views on the future of his country, and in addition explain how he intends to make his native soil a veritable showcase of development" (Philippe Decraene, "Le Guide Supreme aux Champs," LE MONDE of 25-26 February 1979).

Leopard-Spot Development

As one can see, economic planning African-style is far from being a synthesis between regional and central development, between central authority and regional autonomy, between the wishes of the president and the deep, impalpable desires which stir in the national soul. From this concentration of planning at the top levels of the country, and/or a particular region apart from the national context, comes unbalanced development, "leopard-spot" development, in which, for example, a railroad, or a port city, or even a simple village, might be the objective.

In short, African economic development, in terms of its planning, cannot be understood as a process of change which gradually links up with all sectors of the country, but is more of an isolated factor which moves toward "progress" against the grain of other domains that are committed to inertia. This piecemeal, not to say unipolar development, results from the absence of a national consensus on planning which moreover does not adequately take into account both endogenous and exogenous factors--such as internal and external conditions that are counterproductive for the economy--which continue to slow down its progress in one way or another.

In addition, various fortuitous events and circumstances upset the same scientifically established agendas.

Among these hazards, one of the most important is international competitivity, the repeated fall of the market price for raw materials, whose malign effects are a stumbling-block for the take-off of African development plans.

All this is only to say that the latter are not designed to signal, much less flash a warning light, in the face of impending crisis, to alert those responsible to look for appropriate measures to be taken. This is why the distinction between enterprises that are "sheltered" from and those "exposed" to external competition—though inscribed in capital letters in the physico-financial economic model--does not appear in the African plans. Now such a distinction is vital, if not indispensable for the implementation of any policy intended to distribute export credit in such a way as to benefit enterprises "exposed" to the foreign competition that is an intrinsic part of an open economy. In short, it is indispensable to planning-based "liberalism." Moreover, African planning seems to completely ignore the distribution of credit among the foreign enterprises with branches in Africa.

This negligence exposes it to many pitfalls in devising an autonomous monetary policy. Thus, economies are hit by waves of imported inflation, the perverse effects of which constrain household purchasing power and disorganize production apparatus. As an example, Zairian inflation: according to the (July 1980) report of the General Planning Commission, import prices in Zaire increased by 12.4 percent between 1977 and 1978.

This price inflation reached 95 percent in early 1979, while the successive devaluations of Zairian currency decided upon during 1978 and 1979 contemplated an increase in import prices of at least 75 percent. The result was a deterioration in terms of trade from 39.6 points (1978) to 29.7 points (1979), and this despite the fact that copper--the principal export product--held up well, the price, described as "favorable to Zaire," being 58,113 FB [Belgian francs] per ton in 1979, compared to 49,865 FB per ton in 1978, or a 36 percent increase.

Copper's good performance did not make much of an impact on inflation, which eroded purchasing power by about 36 percent during the year 1979.

Thus, seen either with the naked eye or magnified with a telescopic lens, the increase in the price of imported goods on the kinois markets was 136 percent, or more than the 10 percent by which Zairian currency was devalued in 1979.

Despite the 72 percent wage increase, the increase in the tidal wave of inflation betrays a certain imbalance between supply and demand. This has led to a series of devaluations that by the end of 1979 increased import prices (in zaires, of course) by 100 percent.

It has also led to inflation in the price of consumer (family) goods of 2518 [sic] points for 1979, or an increase of 97.4 percent over 1978. Broken down by product, it was distributed as follows: food products, 89 percent; clothing, 123 percent; housing, 146 percent, and miscellaneous, 157 percent.

By fueling sectoral disturbances, imported inflation at the same time imperils the implementation of African development plans, which have already shown themselves to be slow to take off, burdened as they are by the public debt, and is another source of financial dependence. All these facts work together like so many shackles, to remove man, and the miserable fate he endures, from African planning.

No Trace of Man

In effect, his lifestyle, the quality of life, does not appear at all in African planning. Nor does the social infrastructure which attests to the quality of the structure of life. Among those instruments of social cohesion which make life beautiful, one of the most important is housing.

On this crucial question, one finds nothing but a thick curtain of silence: one example, among many others: since the 1st Algerian plan and all the way up to 1978, "housing got only the crumbs: 16.6 percent of the cement consumed in 1973 and 15 percent in 1977. Now numerous investigations have shown that the dearth of housing in Algeria is a major contributing factor to the absenteeism and instability which are developing in the factories and in everyday life."[10]

The absence of man, along with the absence of subsistence agriculture, shows that African development plans are trying to regulate the general advance of the economy in a direction opposite to the trajectory traversed by the industrial revolution, which used agriculture as a point of departure. In other words, industrialization comes after the agricultural revolution, which, after having eliminated the centers of famine in Europe, went on to produce a food surplus. The latter, in turn, engendered both [new] food needs and energy needs. Then in turn came the birth of cotton thread cloth mill industries that would have failed but for the introduction of iron and the steam-engine. Thus, we have the famous formulation of Bairoch: Industrial Revolution = Agriculture + Cotton + Iron + Steam-Engine."

But the African countries are trying to get out of the rut of underdevelopment in a way that is contrary to the process of the industrial revolution, in other words to the development "model" of the "rich" countries which is in fact their very frame of reference.

This system of development which goes counter to the process of the industrial revolution cannot, so long as the liberal planning option remains unchanged, lead to positive results. For it relegates subsistence agriculture to the sidelines; though it is the base on which the industrial revolution takes off.

Now agriculture is a not insignificant source of the income that is an indispensable prerequisite for the formation of savings. The continuing erosion of the latter in Africa is due precisely to forgetting the driving force of agriculture in the process of growth, as well as in achieving the pre-eminence of industrialization.

The result: the capital intended to finance development plans cannot be found, for the primacy of industry over the agricultural sector "is going to be," writes Abdoulaye Wade, "a hindrance characterized by the absence of capital available for future investment."[12]

COMMENTS ON DOS SANTOS-MITTERRAND MEETING

Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Oct 81 p 6

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti: "Dos Santos' Official Visit to Paris"]

[Text] Awaited in Paris on 14 October for an official 2-day working visit, President dos Santos of Angola, the 15th African head of state to be received by France since 21 May, will meet with Francois Mitterrand on Thursday.

President dos Santos had wanted to come to Paris for many weeks, in order to erase the misunderstanding caused by the "joint communique" affair in Luanda. This "communique" had been published there following the August visit to the Angolan capital of Messrs Guy Penne and Regis Debray. At that time, these two officials had denied signing a communique denouncing in rather undiplomatic terms the U.S. attitude in Southern Africa. In fact, it seems that rightly or wrongly, disappointed by the welcome granted by Paris 2 months earlier to a special envoy carrying a message from dos Santos to Mitterrand--he had, nevertheless, been received by Guy Penne--the Angolans had decided to accord a rather cool welcome to the French president's emissaries. President dos Santos believes that the incident is now settled, as does the French side.

Bilateral relations are rather satisfactory. Commercial exchanges have significantly progressed these last few years, reaching 400 million francs in 1980. This year, moreover, contracts amounting to approximately 1 billion francs have been signed between Angola and French firms. Luanda wishes that cooperation develop more rapidly, notably in the fields of oil, mechanics, coffee and fishing.

The Namibian question will be at the heart of the talks between the two chiefs of state. The French have repeatedly supported the Angolan position according to which the presence of Cuban troops in Angola (between 15,000 and 20,000 men) could not be tied to a settlement of the conflict. Nevertheless, President Mitterrand doubtlessly will not fail to remind his counterpart that France expects to see, in the wake of a Namibian settlement, a progressive withdrawal of the Cuban troops stationed in the country for nearly 6 years.

Practically frozen since the failure of the Geneva conference in January 1981, the Namibian negotiations should reopen the last week in October on the occasion of the Southern Africa tour of the representatives of the contact group led by Chester Crocker, the U.S. undersecretary of state for African affairs.

The delegation, which is supposed to visit Luanda, Cape Town and Windhoek before visiting the other "frontline" capitals should, in principle, negotiate the constitutional guarantees to be granted to minorities in Namibia at the time of eventual independence. The Quai d'Orsay points out that above all, a renewed emphasis should be given to the "mechanics" of the negotiations in order to reach an agreement in 1982. In case a modus vivendi could be reached on the basis of these guarantees, negotiations could then center on the subjects of a "second phase": the modalities of a UN mission--within the framework of a peace process--and especially the definition of its "impartiality," a point very important to the South Africans.

In fact, it seems that negotiations between Washington and Pretoria--notably on the occasion of the September meeting in Zurich between Messrs Crocker and Fourie--have already produced an agreement on a settlement on the basis of UN Resolution 435 on Namibia. Chester Crocker reportedly pointed out to his South African interlocutor that the United States would give up tying the question of the Cuban military presence in Angola to the Namibian problem, and that Pretoria should not wager on a U.S. alignment along the South African positions.

This relative U.S. firmness could possibly explain why the Angolan minister of foreign affairs, a few days later in New York, evoked the fact that negotiations had "progressed." Aware of the U.S. policy, Pretoria has reportedly accepted since that time to discuss the modalities of the application of UN Resolution 435, the only basis for negotiations acceptable to African states.

However, South African leaders do not seem to have reached a decisive choice. Some of them reportedly remain persuaded that the United States, if it found itself with its back to the wall, would align itself with South Africa. Others reportedly believe that the Reagan administration, well disposed toward them, is offering them today a unique opportunity to settle the Namibian question under the best possible conditions. All agree in doubting the timeliness of offering constitutional guarantees to Namibian minorities, no matter who they are. "And what if, after such a precedent, they would ask us one day to give such guarantees to domestic groups?" is a question heard in Johannesburg today.

According to the statements made recently in the Seychelles by Guy Penne, Paris had decided, after "some hesitation," to remain within the contact group and to play in it, at the request of those African states primarily concerned, the role of the "eye of Africa." Angola does not ask for more, and dos Santos will no doubt repeat this to Mitterrand.

In exchange, Luanda will perhaps have to take more into consideration, in the future, the reticence of the Elysee vis-a-vis the "Cuban garrison" used as protection by a regime which, at least officially, refuses to open any kind of dialogue with the "rebels" within its country. The extremely active guerrillas of Jonas Savimbi have too wide a base--particularly ethnic--to be characterized as mere "puppets of the South African racists," as Angolan officials do.

REASONS FOR INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD, CEMENT NOTED

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 609 12 Sep 81 p 2

[Article by Dominique Mbango: "Measures That Speak for Themselves"]

> [Text] In its 9 September 1981 meeting, the Council of Ministers decided to increase the prices of bread and cement and the Lina-Congo tariffs. This important decision has given rise to much discussion in different walks of life. It is desirable therefore that we explain to our readers the combination of factors that have led the government to this decision.

Let us remember first of all that the government would never deliberately make decisions against the general public. The PCT [Congolese Labor Party], the party of the workers, the farmers and the revolutionary intellectuals, guards jealously over the interests of the masses. This means that the party's heart literally bleeds when it finds itself compelled to accept a price rise. At every meeting of the Central Committee, its National Policy Directorate discusses at length the questions of the cost of living and the purchasing power of the people. Everyone knows that these questions are extremely sensitive ones insofar as their solutions are strictly dependent upon the interaction of several parameters that are not under our control. These include the prices of products we import, which are not fixed by us. The economic and monetary chaos of the capitalist system necessarily affects our circumstantially dependent economies.

The Matter of Bread

Let us point out that, although the wheat producing and exporting countries raise their prices year after year, our price of flour has not changed since 1973. Its cost to the Congolese state, however, has become a very heavy burden: 100 million CFA francs of CFA francs worth of subsidies a month!

This explains the fact that for some time now in the Congo, a 130-gram loaf of bread has cost 20 CFA francs, whereas in France a loaf of only 100 grams during the same time has cost 50 CFA francs!

For some years now, the bakers have been applying to the Congolese government for permission to raise the price of the 130-gram loaf to 40, even 50, francs.

Other parallel sources, based on their calculations, have proposed a price of 35 francs. The government, however, in lieu of 35, 40 or 50 francs has drawn the line at 25 francs. It is thus a governmental and sovereign decision, which limits waste at consumer levels. Because of its concern, the government has had to increase its subvention to 125,347,000 CFA francs per month. In addition, the bakers are very dissatisfied.

At the Pool bakery, the manager says: "The increase in the price of flour is 45 percent while that of the price of bread is 25 percent..." At the Ouenze bakery, the accountant says: "The price of bread should go to 30 francs at least... ."

Cement

The increase in the price of cement has also generated considerable comment. What exactly are the facts?

Based on current production costs, the wholesale price of cement f.o.b the Cidolou [expansion unknown] plant should be 46,448 francs per ton, and the retail price at the Brazzaville warehouse should be 53,170 francs per ton.

Now, it is out of the question for the Cidolou to align its sales prices on its full production costs; the consequences at the consumer level would be disastrous.

The National Commission on Prices, after integrating all the pertinent data, submitted comproposals to the government, which then agreed to subsidize the Cidolou plant to the extent 200 million CFA francs per year. Following are the prices set by the government:

--32,000 francs/ton (f.o.b. plant);

--36,000 francs/ton (wholesale price at Brazzaville);

--38,000 francs/ton (retail price at Brazzaville).

The Lina-Congo Tariffs

The last increase in Lina-Congo tariffs dates back to 1974. Of course, when the habits of almost 20 years are upset, there is bound to be some resultant unrest.

But let us give it some thought. Which is the more important: On the one hand, our habits, or, on the other hand, the interest of our state enterprises, our interest in the growth so diligently being sought by our state productive sector?

Can we be sure, very sure, that since 1974 the factors on which Lina-Congo tariffs are based have not changed by so much as one franc? Everyone knows that year after year the cost of fuel rises by some 15 percent, while the costs of operation and maintenance of the planes increase by more than 10 percent annually.

To the above must be added other variable parameters such as the expenses of the flight crews, airport taxes, landing fees, etc.

Such are the factors entering into the calculations that have resulted in establishing the following schedule of fares:

--Brazzaville - Pointe-Noire: 19,700 in lieu of 11,215;

--Brazzaville - Loubomo: 14,800 in lieu of 8,225;

--Brazzaville - Djambala: 10,000 in lieu of 6,290;

--Brazzaville - Epena: 20,000 in lieu of 19,940;

--Brazzaville - Impfondo: 20,000 (no change);

--Brazzaville - Ouesso: 20,000 in lieu of 18,945;

--Brazzaville - Owando: 20,000 in lieu of 14,290;

--Brazzaville - Betou: 20,000 (no change);

--Brazzaville - Kelle: 20,000 in lieu of 15,240;

--Brazzaville - Mossendjo: 16,300 in lieu of 9,240;

--Brazzaville - Ewo: 19,100 in lieu of 11,150;

--Brazzaville - Makoua: 20,000 im lieu of 15,500.

This schedule has the effect of setting a ceiling rate of 20,000 francs, all taxes included, beyond a radius of 392 km. This provision is especially beneficial to those traveling to remote localities.

This will enable Lina-Congo to fulfill its role as an instrument with which to open up the country. It is on this basis that the rate per kilometer has been set at 30 francs in lieu of 46 francs for travelers between localities in interior regions.

As can be seen, the increases that have been decided take into account, among other things, economic factors beyond our national boundaries, operating costs of production units, and the imperatives of readjustment. In every case, the government has sought diligently to ensure that the increase would not be deeply catastrophic for the masses.

It will be up to the latter to organize and maintain vigilance to prevent ravenous merchants from seizing the ball on the rebound and adding unilateral and anarchic price increases of their own making. Monoprix, Score, Le Presto, SCKN [Kouilou Nicri Company] and the corner merchants must not be allowed to increase their prices on the excuse that the government has increased the price of bread! Let us be vigilant, comrades!

COMMENTS ON SENEGALESE UPHOLDING OF UNPOPULAR GAMBIAN GOVERNMENT

Dakar AFRIKA in French No 133 Aug-Sep 81 pp 33-34

/Commentary by Agathon: "What Should Be Done About Gambia?"/

/Text/ According to the "man in the street", although not without a little uncertainty, the problem is resolved: "I'm there, I'll stay there." What is the logic behind this?

"The cost of blood. An incapable government made us look; it required going there to die in order to uphold it."

"Is that sufficient?"

"This unpopular government was spewed out by all classes. It was necessary then, it is necessary now, for forces from our country to protect this "chief of state" against his people. To what end? All that is needed is to turn him around."

"Would that solve the problem vis-a-vis the Gambian people?"

Here the logic wavers a little, and the "man in the street" answers with hesitation: "Aren't we the same people?"

"The man in the street" is both right and wrong. He is right when he joins the anthropology that studies the Woloffs of Gambia and Senegal, as well as the semis-Bambaras and Joolas as a single people, but he is wrong in respect of a history that cannot be remade and that carries colonization in its train. This colonization crammed down the throat of Senegal a so-called English Gambia. After that there was the famous OAU decision on the frontiers, as though colonization had been a sacrament and the frontiers it drew were an act of God.

But the new circumstances raise questions for Senegal that must be answered for today and tomorrow. Twice within one year has there been armed intervention. This seems to indicate that the so-called Gambian nation is incapable of establishing itself with validity. Moreover, the second intervention was no picnic. Much blood was shed: Senegalese blood, Gambian blood. Thirty-four Senegalese deaths and the customary proportion of wounded, and at least 600 Gambian deaths. This is enough to forge an irreparable gulf between the two peoples and brand batred into the heart of Senegal.

Unless something is done, immediately. And this something, with all due respect to the "man in the street" cannot be quite simply an occupation, a colonization which would add to the hatred. The Gambian people must be called together, not to some prefabricated electoral consultation, which would bring us back Diawara and his team, but to a referendum which would offer a choice between forms of autonomy which, while having respect for history, would also take into account the needs of the present.

The first necessity, it must be said crudely, is to make an end of the institutional existence of a complex of smugglers, locals or ex-patriates, whites, blacks or Moors, from the small store to the large firm. To make an end to this wound with a good customs union to be established on Senegal's terms, and with a cordon of customs agents at all road junctions, on all the beaches, agents who know each other well, through having been used openly, not to say officially, under the regime of a union group of bribing rogues.

In truth, it is at the borders, or what remains of them, that the Senegalese uniform is needed, not at the gates of a false Buckingham Palace guarding a false king against a people already frustrated by his revolutionary vistory over a decayed regime.

Mr Diawara is good enough (and bad enough) to have offered as a price for Senegalese bloodshed a few palliatives and some innocuous forms of cooperation that go in the direction of making his position permanent. We are still awaiting Senegal's true response, beyond the polite protocol.

FRENCH JOURNALIST'S VIEW OF SITUATION IN MALI

Dakar AFRICA in French No 133 Aug/Sep 81 pp 59-61

[Article by Francois Misser: "The Malian Labyrinth"]

[Text] We were certainly prisoners of the absurd, during our long trip through Senegal. In Mali, and not only because of what we did, we were to be involved even more in the absurd, lost as we were in a labyrinth of administrative complications erected like so many walls.

Added to this for good measure was one of the most confusing problems involving our maps. In the capital, Bamako, which was slowly emerging, at the end of March, from an epidemic of meningitis, which the government had been at some pains to keep quiet as long as possible, we were to note, not without some consternation, that the level of the river had reached its lowest point since the great drought of 1973. It would apparently have been like going through hell to drag ourselves again, like snails, between the rocks from Bamako to Koulikoro, for the pointless glory of having carried out our expedition's program to the letter. During all this time the flow of water in the river continued to decline, and the difficulties we encountered threatened to continue over the nearly 3,000 km until we reached the confluence with the Benoue River, near Lokoja in Nigeria. Neither could we wait for the rainy season at Fouta-Djallon, which would not raise the level of the Niger River until June, at Bamako, and September, at Niamey.

We therefore had to leave Bamako as soon as possible. However, the busybody officials there were not concerned about that. Quite to the contrary, directly or not, deliberately or not, they were to teach us very quickly that an expedition like ours, despite all of the physical obstacles, was first of all an administrative game which had to be lost or won in the government bureaus.

Atmosphere of Spy-itis in Bamako

Moreover, it was very difficult for us to do everything that we were required to do in a city which was continuously paralyzed during the 10 days of our stay by the visit of three chiefs of state.

When finally we had obtained authorization to take movie films and photographs on Malian territory, the authorities hastened to add to this act of generosity a measure which was doubly constricting for us--financially and psychologically. As always in such cases, we were assigned a guide whose travel costs we had to pay and whose role was revealed by this astonishing phrase from a high official of the Ministry of Information: "Excuse us, but we must assure ourselves that you are not hippies come to do I don't know what."

This kind of constraint seemed unacceptable to us, the more so as nothing could justify it apart from the climate of vigilant spy-itis which has raged in Bamako for a very long time. This began after plots were hatched by Col Qadhdhafi for the apparent purpose of creating a Sahara federation under the leadership of Libya, as a proud chief of the Gao group, deeply hostile to "Arab imperialism," was to confirm to me. The strange, attempted coup d'etat carried out last March ended with the immediate expulsion of the counselor for military affairs of the Soviet Embassy. This could only strengthen the climate of mistrust.

The Tourist Does Not Escape Accusations

It seems that you have to look elsewhere for the reasons for the fear felt by Malian officials. Elsewhere, that is to say, everywhere: on the highways, which are more tightly controlled than ever (15 checkpoints, at least, on the 600 km from Bamako to Mopti), in the high schools and at the university. Outside the high schools and above all, the university whose students were suspended from their courses or who still languish in jail, some of them, for having demonstrated in 1977 against the "guillotine examinations" set up to prevent entry into an overcrowded administrative service. Unless they toil away somewhere in the depths of the salt mines of Taoudeni, for having demanded explanations on the subject of the mysterious death of their leader, "Cabral." All Bamako whispers that he was executed by the government.

Everywhere, we say, even among the hostesses at the "Trois Caimans" [Three Crocodiles], a night club on the banks of the river, among whom there were some, proud of having read "the word to the black women" ["La parole aux Negresses"], whom the authorities also accused, revealing the fact that the pursuit of drug traffickers by the police only covered up a large dragnet operation intended to assure them of a monopoly over this traffic.

The paranoia in the atmosphere is such that children are ready to denounce you if, by chance, you are unfortunate enough to aim your camera at a subject likely to tarnish the image of Mali. The tourist himself does not escape accusations. Thus, two young Frenchmen were jailed a few months ago for having confused photography and recording the real situation.

We were far from having any intention to involve ourselves in the secrets of the regime. However, the simple fact that we had expressed the intention to travel freely on the river caused such concern that it would have aroused the curiosity of the most inattentive of passers-by. They tried to dissuade us from continuing with our trip. They advised us to give up the Malian stage of the trip as if they regretted having prematurely given us authorization to travel across the country.

As if this were not enough, our guide, frightened at the idea of being devoured alive by a mother hippopotamus or crunched by a father crocodile, tried to put off our departure each day. Finally, we had to decide to leave anyway.

Finally, we were placed before the following alternatives: give up or be evasive. We therefore left stealthily, tired of this Kafka-like universe which sent us from one dead-end to another.

The Other Victims of the Drought

The town of Mopti, which I had already visited in 1978 and 1979, seemed more affected by the drought than in the past. The Peul and Touareg camps at the gates of the Venice of the Niger River (so the tourist folder said) had grown. The "garibous" (talibes) [sic; not otherwise explained] swarmed as always in the covered market and in the already dried-up river basin. Beyond these external signs of decay, there was another kind of depression, more worrying because it affected the traditional activity of the town: fishing.

First of all, as it happens, the bad winter season of 1980 in the Fouta area had involved the drying up of many places where the fish normally reproduced, we were told in several villages of the delta, which were members of the cooperative of Bozo fishermen. Further, the continuation of the drought had prevented the fish from completing their period of growth. Fewer fish caught, therefore, and caught younger--you can see the danger. To all of that, it is appropriate to add still other factors of a structural order. The union of the Bozo people with the river, which the doctor would baptize in his jargon, "biological equilibrium," has been broken for a long time. Other ethnic groups (the Rimaibe, captives of the Peuls; the Sonrai; and the Bambara, principally) are reportedly also engaged in catching fish on a seasonal basis.

The customs longest established among the Bozo people have also been changed. The migratory tradition of this people, according to which men, women, and children once followed the fish to Gao, has been broken by the efforts to send the children to school, to organize them and to settle them, in general carried on since the cooperatives have been established. This creates a new imbalance.

Subsequently, the pressure of demand from Bamako and from other importing countries (Ghana, Ivory Coast, and Upper Volta) has grown. "Operation Fish," a state organ charged with promoting production as well as collecting, processing, and shipping fresh fish, continues to create problems for the fishermen's cooperative, a souvenir of the Modibo period. The price of nets, of motors, and of fuel has continued to increase, whereas this year a comparison of the price for a kilogram of fish indicated that there had been a fall of 40 percent from February, 1980, to February, 1981, despite a substantial decline in production. This decline is explained by the relative decline in the tonnage of "captain" fish caught.

In these circumstances the distribution of food under the AM (World Food Program), in which USAID is participating, and there are sacks of corn distributed by the ACDI (Canadian aid organization), is like putting mustard plasters on a wooden leg. Intended to provide a nutritive supplement which the growers of millet can no longer furnish, these products of foreign aid are found on sale, unfortunately, within sight and sound of everyone in the Mopti market.

A Circuit Through the Desolation

There is nothing astonishing, therefore, that in view of these problems everything was done in this town to make the preparation of a simple, technical film on fishing almost impossible to achieve. Certain persons from the state organ, "Operation Fish," even displayed surprising conduct when they saw a camera. Moreover, we just barely avoided mouldering away in prison for having filmed an off-duty soldier, by chance, in a canoe.

Hardly had we escaped from that labyrinth, than a new complication appeared before us on the river. This was the matter of the many branches in which the "Djoliba" (Niger River, in the Bambara language) divides in the delta region. Without the help of Ousmane, our Bozo guide, we would perhaps still be there, the more so as the bottom in places is only about 15 cm from the surface, such as on Lake Debo, for example. Only the cleverness of our mechanic, in lifting the motor of our boat, permitted us to cross. If this had not been so, over the entire 30 km we would have gashed our feet on the fresh water oysters as we dragged our boats, instead of the five kilometers we had to pull them.

From Tombouctou to Gao the river proved to be more navigable. This permitted us to make frequent stops in the Touareg villages on the sides of the dunes, where we were often committed to the difficult task of eating, without frowning, the rice with rancid butter which was offered to us as a dainty dish.

It would have been bad taste on our part to have made any more excuses for our digestions. The deep regret of the Peul shepherds, who were often very sorry over not being able to offer us the milk which their gaunt cattle could no longer give, made us feel even worse.

It was difficult, in this area, to see this situation other than in painful terms. Farther on, after Gao, it was even harder when difficulties with the maps and problems in communicating with the Sonrai and then the Djerme bush people combined in taking away any pleasure from the rest of the trip.

Five kilometers after Ansongo, a troublesome turning point in our trip, a veritable forest of bushes growing out of rocks forecast a new labyrinth, scattered with rapids, this time. These were rapids which we had to climb above at the price of a thousand detours, when an apprentice guide, anxious to force our hands, deliberately misled us into a dead end.

Niger: Arrival of a Shipwrecked Crew

When we were worn out from having walked and groped our way all day in river bottom lands which our bitter mechanic compared in comfort to the bed of an Indian fakir, we set up our bivouac at the first shepherd's home which luck threw our way. Then spectators gathered to watch us. Each of our meals in the region between Ansongo and Niamey, where no one in the brush area spoke French, was watched by eyes from a kind of court of miracles which was more intrigued by the strangeness of our behavior than concerned with begging some favor from us.

In passing the few hippopotamuses which deigned to wallow peacefully on their sand banks no longer looked like nuisances but rather as agreeable distractions in the race against the declining level of the river, which dropped more rapidly until we reached Niamey.

The gate was quite narrow which finally let us flee from Mali. At Labezanga, the frontier town, one of the canoes was ripped open on the rocks in the rapids. We thought then that we were out of our difficulties, fooled by the approximate English words of the Haoussa harpooners who had come from Nigeria. However, we had to drag ourselves along between river banks up to the Nigerian capital, with the people at times fleeing at our approach. On 20 May we arrived like shipwrecked sailors in our broken-down canoes with wobbly silhouettes and with the propellers on our motors well worn down after 2,000 km of grinding against rocks. We will not speak of ourselves, dressed in rags, who drew the pity even of the people selling mangoes.

SSR THREATENS STATE OF EMERGENCY;POSTPONING ELECTIONS

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 28 Aug 81 pp 1,4

[Report: "SSR Once Again Raises the Threat of Proclaiming a State of Emergency and of Postponing General Elections"]

> [Text] He is ready to ally himself with any party whatever for the sake of governing the country;
> Municipal elections were postponed "because of violence."

Once again, in the course of his press conference, held yesterday, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam threatens to impose a state of emergency and postpone general elections should violence develop in the country in the forthcoming weeks and months. Actually, SSR claimed that indications already existed to the effect that some political parties, particularly the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] and the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement] ("both are parties of trouble," he believes), could develop a climate in which "violence, threats and intimidations" would prevail.

Pressed by the journalists, however, SSR nevertheless admitted that he was prepared to contemplate an alliance with any party, including the PMSD, the Rally for Progress and Freedom (RPL) and the MMM. He did not exclude an alliance with the MMM after the next general elections.

Nevertheless, he thinks that the MMM is an "antidemocratic party," and is planning to call upon "all democratic parties," i.e., the PMSD headed by Eliezer Francois and the party headed by Gaetan Duval (if they approach me, I will settle the situation between them, said he), as well as the RPL, and asked them to rally against the MMM and the PSM, in order to defeat the "antidemocratic" aims of the latter.

As to the climate of violence which, in his view, could be instigated by the MMM and the PMSD, Sir Seewoosagur particularly alluded to the day of 6 September, when the General Workers Federation (GWF), a trade union federation close to the MMM, will be celebrating its 10th anniversary in Port Louis, and to the day of 7 September, or the day following the great demonstration which is being prepared currently by Sir Gaetan Duval, who is relying on the mass participation of all Mauritians who are dissatisfied with the current situation, particularly the unemployed. SSR stated again that he had been informed that supporters of the PMSD would even block the streets of the capital.

"The Voter Must Not Be Intimidated"

In answer to a journalist who asked whether the government was not actually looking for a "pretext" for proclaiming a state of emergency and thus postponing the elections, Sir Seewoosagur simply answered, "If you are seeking in that direction, you will find it." SSR emphasized that general elections must take place in an atmosphere of peace which will favor the freedom of the balloting. "An atmosphere of violence and threats would intimidate the voter and thus deprive him of his freedom to vote as he wishes."

One of the main topics raised in the course of the press conference held by SSR yesterday was the preservation of democracy. He let it be understood clearly that his model is democracy as practiced in the West, "specifically in Europe and the United States." In his view, among all third world countries, Mauritius and India alone have pluralist democratic systems. He emphasized that the Mauritians must not be ultimately deprived of the political freedom they are enjoying today. Within this context SSR charged the MMM and the PSM of willingness to inaugurate a dictatorial regime and to organize a real witch hunt, specifically by persecuting cadres. He pointed out that the MMM had already drafted a "blacklist" of cadres of which it will get rid once in power.

SSR called upon the civil servants to beware of MMM intentions. "I would like to caution the civil service against this danger," the prime minister emphasized.

The Press Should "Contribute Its Share"

SSR reminded the press of the freedom it is enjoying under the current system. It is true, SSR stated, that there was a period of censorship the purpose of which was the re-establishment of a normal situation in the country. However, this was a "short period." SSR emphasized that currently the press is free to criticize the government. However, he added, this same press should "make its contribution" and acknowledge the achievements of the labor government.

SSR proceeded to list the main accomplishments of the labor government. At one point he conceded that other parties such as the PMSD, the CAM [Moslem Action Committee] and the IFB [Independent Forward Bloc], which participated in the coalition governments, had also contributed to its achievements. He accused his adversaries of wanting to put an end to the system of free education and reminded the audience that it was the Labor Party that introduced numerous measures aimed at improving the life of the farmers, compared with their previous situation.

Sir Seewoosagur vigorously defended the thesis to the effect that there was no danger in Mauritius becoming further indebted and that Paul Berenger ("who considers himself an economic expert, whereas he is not") is misleading public opinion by claiming the opposite, namely that the island of Mauritius has reached the limit of indebtedness. The prime minister stated that loans borrowed from abroad are used for a good purpose, such as the development of infrastructures. He cited as proof the Bulk Sugar Terminal which today brings far greater revenues to the country than the amount borrowed for the implementation of this project.

The Island of Mauritius: 'Still the Best Country in Which To Live'

The other major thesis of the prime minister's press conference was that, in his view, the island of Mauritius is still by far a better country in which to live than others, for the following reasons:

The people have a great deal of money: "Look at the way they play the horses, for example! The Mauritian has money to burn. The country is prosperous, there is no misery!"

There is no waiting in line, as in some other countries, for buying foodstuffs in stores throughout the country. "We have everything."

Mauritius is one of the countries where vegetables are the least expensive. Prices are rising in general "but not like elsewhere."

Stability and harmony prevail in the country. Mauritius is outside the violent political and social crises which are shaking up the world and cost the lives of thousands of people every day. "Human life and even the life of an animal" is sacred in Mauritius. "In Mauritius we respect human life whereas elsewhere human life is not respected."

It is the Labor Party, SSR emphasized, that deserves the credit for maintaining in Mauritius such a situation, which is so greatly conducive to peace, freedom and prosperity.

Municipal Elections: 'Postponement Because of Violence'

Asked about the postponement of municipal elections, which is a violation of democratic principles which the Labor Party claims to support, the prime minister stated that the elections were postponed because of too much "disturbance" in the municipalities, for which reason elections could not be held, in any way, "as long as an atmosphere of violence existed." When a journalist asked if it were not better, in accordance with democratic procedures, to let the electorate freely decide through elections if the municipalities had been properly or improperly managed, rather than to assume for himself the right to judge instead of the voters, SSR gave an evasive answer, repeating that there were no elections "because there was violence" (editor's note: such was not the case at the time the elections were postponed).

EDITORIAL REACTION TO SSR PRESS CONFERENCE

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 28 Aug 81 p 4

[Editorial by Lindsay Riviere: "Guardians of the Nation?"]

[Text] Evasive and mysterious as always, alternately reassuring and threatening, avoiding embarrassing subjects by winning over the laughers, as usual, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam had properly "prepared" his performance of yesterday: to speak for more than one hour with the country without telling anything truly new or consistent, but saying enough for promoting doubts on a number of points; giving oneself the good role of defender of great democratic principles but refusing to justify the string of antidemocratic decisions made by his administration (specifically the postponement of municipal elections); embodying stability and law and order, whereas it is his policy which today triggers instability, disorder and defiance of the law; finally, making public opinion swallow the enormous fact of an eventual postponement of elections, under the pretext of a premature defense of the right of the electorate to vote freely.

Unquestionably, SSR is the only one who could play such a comedy with such impunity and be able to confuse matters and minds in such a stupefying manner with such simplicity!

Current difficulties? "We are not alone?" Unemployment? "Mostly fictitious!" Massive public indebtedness? "Nothing to worry about; we are far from the critical threshold." The postponement of municipal elections and the arbitrary nature of the central administration? "There was a risk of troubles and, furthermore, one cannot have elections every day!" The other political parties? "All of them are antidemocratic." Why then discuss with them and offer them coalitions? "Because we let all people of good will come to us." General elections? "This is my business."

Who in Mauritius or under any democratic system could get off so easily and remain credible with broad population segments after such statements?

Yesterday's performance of the prime minister is an insult to the intelligence of the Mauritians. SSR may be mixed up as far as the times and the public are concerned if he believes that a society as aware and responsible as ours has become after 13 years of independence would be content to accept as an explanation of the current crisis and its consequences yesterday's and today's "agitation on the part of the opposition."

Yesterday, clear answers were expected of the prime minister concerning the major problems of today and the concerns which are apparent these days in the government: What is the base for claiming the existence of troubles and the risk of troubles? How big are such troubles? As minister of the interior, what measures does he intend to take if he is certain of the gravity of the situation? SSR answered by claiming that it is not even the police who informed him of the severity of the situation, "mais dimoune pe cause." Is this something which merits the threat of postponing the elections? SSR's answer to this appeared as though the general elections, which are the supreme right of the population, were a favor which he was granting the people and a decision which was his to make ("This is my business!).

Only one step separates this from the view of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] and the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement], expressed this morning (read about it elsewhere) that it is a "provocation."

The imminent general elections and the hope for a change in personalities and, perhaps, in politics, either within the framework of the same system or of another, may be that which today is still restraining the feeling of frustration, which is growing among the population with every passing month. Anything which could postpone such elections may cause important consequences affecting the morale of the nation and worsen the Mauritian malaise. The mystery with which SSR surrounds the elections and the rather arbitrary right he assumes on the holding of the elections have triggered a heavy feeling of political suspense over Mauritius, which hardly contributes to improving the situation in the country.

For many years the laborists have behaved as if they owned the country. By virtually confiscating the right to the holding of elections (regional and national), by insisting that "this is my business," and engaging in a sort of blackmail of the population, SSR is now behaving as the guardian of the nation in making decisions on its behalf. Yet we believed that the island of Mauritius had reached maturity on 12 March 1968.

LIBYAN DIPLOMAT ADDRESSES MYT MEETING

Port Louis THE NATION in French 14 Aut 81 pp 1, 4

> [Text] The MYF [Muslim Youth Federation] held a reception at Margaret Hall Sunday 9 August to celebrate id-al-fitr. The reception was honored by the presence of Ibrahim al-Jaddy, secretary of the Libyan People's Bureau in Mauritisu. Also attending the reception were Hassen Heerah, honorary president of the MYF, and several representatives of various clubs and social organizations.

Mr Imbrahim al-Jaddy, secretary of the Libyan People's Bureau in Mauritius, was asked to make a speech. He said that it was a great pleasure for him to attend the reception given by the MYF to celebrate id-al-fitr, but at the same time that id is celebrated, several questions should be asked. He went on to say that one should celebrate id, as well as any other holy day, because holy days are in accordance with religious teaching. But at the same time, he said, one should ask some questions. It goes without saying, he added, that many other peoples are celebrating id and if we are also celebrating then we are joined and linked by a number of ties with others celebrating id wherever they may be: in Libya, Syria, or anywhere else. And if we are linked with those who are celebrating and rejoicing, we should also be linked with those who unfortunately are unable to celebrate or rejoice. We should share their suffering and their pain. Our duty is to search for ways, however humble, even if only in terms of moral support, to alleviate their pain and distress, said Mr al-Jaddy. Today, we are celebrating id, but do we not also have a duty to those who have no home in which to celebrate id, who have no land, no country, no mother, no father, no children, and no family? The example that I take today is in fact that of our Palestinian brothers.

He continued his speech by noting, in reference to assistance, that Islam and the Muslim nation have three holy places, specifically Mecca, Medina, and Jerusalem, and that when making the pilgrimage (Hajj), Muslims are supposed to visit these three places. "We have lost one of these places, Jerusalem, and if we are not careful, we will lose the others. We could lose any other place the same way we lost Jerusalem. The Zionists already control the Golan, a part of the Nile, the Taif, and tomorrow they may take another site. Besides, they are already saying, as they used to say about Jerusalem, that the Kaaba Shariff (which was built by the prophet Abraham) belongs to them. We cannot rest with arms folded and say, 'no, no, the Kaaba is ours,' that will not change anything. We must act."

It was in these terms that the secretary of the people's bureau put the audience on guard against the underhanded tricks of the Zionists, adding that the latter desire only the destruction of the Arab nation, the Muslim nation, and whatever affects the Muslim nation affects us as well, and we must act if we do not want to wake up some day and find we can no longer go on the pilgrimage.

Dignity

He also added that Islam preaches peace and is a peaceful religion, but Islam also preaches the dignity of man, and one must fight to maintain that dignity instead of resting with arms folded whild Menachem Begin makes scandalous, provocative statements and the Israelis bomb the people in Lebanon. We should fight for our language, for our dignity, for our religion, our homes, and freedom. For it should be rememberdd that "only he deserves life who dies for dignity." Allah himself is a liberator, the Prophet Muhammed was a liberator, he freed us from evil tendencies and evil ideas.

Discussing terrorism, Ibrahim al-Jaddy asked the audience to reflect on terrorism in the following way: What is terrorism? Is it the fight for dignity? Is it the fight of a people without a homeland, who have been expelled from their native soil? Is it the struggle for stability in Lebanon? Is it the aid and support given to a people suffering from injustice, exploitation, and domination? If these struggles are what is meant by terrorism, then indeed we should all wish to be called "terrorists." But if, on the other hand, terrorism means imperialism, fascism, Zionism, the CIA, colonialism, domination, pillage of the resources of others, exploitation and deculturalization, why then we should not wish to be called terrorists, we who are meeting here today. We are linked by solid ties, whether the imperialists like it or not, and whatever affects the Arab world also necessarily affects us, and similarly, as we belong to the OAU [Organization of African Unity], whatever affects the African world must also affect us.

He ended by expressing best wishes to the Muslim brothers and sisters on the occasion of id, both by reassuring the Mauritian people of the love and support of the fraternal Libyan people and also by urging the audience to coexist peacefully with the other communities of interest.

The honorary president next took the floor. Hassen Heerah for his part extended best wishes to the Muslim brothers and sisters on the occasion of id and asked the secretary of the people's bureau to transmit to the most great Muslim leader, Col Qadhdhafi, and the fraternal Libyan people, our salutations and felicitations. He then expressed his faith in the young people of the MYF, for, he said, they are inspired by the youth of the Jamahiriya who themselves are inspired by the glorious revolution of El Fateh. He also announced that a 15-member delegation will leave for Tripoli to attend a conference on Islam. He went on to say that when these youths return they will have more knowledge, which will enable them better to serve the Oummah and raise the flag of Islam higher still.

Mr Heerah also vehemently denounced the statement made by Mr Chester Crocker, published in L'EXPRESS of 21 July 1981. He said that he considers that statement an attempt to discredit the guide of the revolution of El Fateh in his sublime battle to give a voice to the voiceless, names to the nameless, power to the powerless, He ended his remarks by congratulating the secretary of the people's bureau for his sensible retort to Crocker and by assuring the guide of the Libyan revolution and people of our unconditional support.

The president of the MYF, M.S. Chetty, also made a speech. Giving a summary of the history of the 24 years of the federation's existence, he said that the federation's aim is to work for the well-being of the Muslim community. He then spoke about the federation's various activities.

RESPONSIBILITY, ROLE OF THE PRESS DISCUSSED

Prime Minister Criticizes Press

Port Louis THE NATION in French 28 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/ "The government is an institution that makes decisions. The opposition criticizes. But the press, which may be in agreement or not, should remember the fact that the opposition has a job as such. The press cannot only blame us for certain decisions and talk only of the opposition's program"

Sir Seewoosagur was speaking of the threat of a dictatorship that hangs over Mauritians, putting people energetically on guard.

"I have been told that the MMM/PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] has a black list. Do Mauritians not have the right to think freely? The PT /Labor Party/ has never resorted to witch-hunting. I am putting both civil servants and Mauritians in general on guard. They must tell themselves that certain parties want to introduce a system of spying that takes away freedom in the home, at work, that simply takes away freedom and which would install a dictatorship. I ask them then to be vigilant."

The prime minister who, right at the beginning of his speech spoke of the responsibilities of the press,said that certain journalists often misinterpret the government's decisions or miss certain facts. He cited an old Turkish adage and recalled that the Labor Party has always militated in favor of freedom of the press.

When democracy was in danger and activists had to seize power by violence, it had to be restrained somewhat, but not for long. The Labor Party wants the press to be free so that it can share in the development of progress.

Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam stressed that in the Third World, in Africa and in Asia, few countries enjoy such freedom of the press. But it is necessary for the press to show proof of its high sense of responsibility.

Throughout the world there is talk of more or less perpetual crises, violence, wars, death, hunger. Mauritius has up to now enjoyed a certain stability. Mauritians should do everything to preserve it.

In a newspaper it has been said that the Labor Party is "doomed". Why is it then, asked the prime minister, who, while not minimizing the support of the PMSD /Mauritian Social Democratic Party/, the IFB /Independent Forward Bloc/, and the CAM /Moslem Action Committee/, stressed that it was the PT which gave universal suffrage and the right to vote for youths of 18 years old. The PT assumed its responsibilities, it gave Mauritians a new direction, without confusion or violence, without threat or bloodshed. In Angola, for example, life has no value. People kill every day. In Mauritius, even the life of animals is respected. Is it not then an irony to claim that the Labor Party is doomed?

Attitudes of Press

Port Louis THE NATION in French 31 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

/Text/ A seminar on information started this morning at the University of Mauritius and followed very closely the reproaches made by the prime minister at a press conference last Thursday. It must be said in defense of those who are in the profession of offering their readers a newspaper every day that often their good faith can be abused by an informer who takes advantage of peak hours to appear. On the other hand, it would be a very unwise person who would believe straight away everything that appeared before his eyes or that he heard, without making a little effort to discriminate.

It should also be emphasized that, in the area of information, the government allows itself to be completely preceded by masters of systematic indoctrination. The most recent example is the fuss made regarding the visit made by the president of the MMM, who was said to have been invited by the head of the White House for a private interview. And only about 10 days ago, when the spokesman for the sugar industry had stated that the signs of a second devaluation were apparent, the government waited for a number of hours before publishing an official denial.

Nevertheless, it is clear that some people take pleasure in or feel it their duty to leave their readers with little hope for the survival of the country. They occupy themselves almost totally in stopping any momentum, in spreading panic in all quarters. They want to prove the failure of the agricultural diversification, pretending to forget that the star performers of the opposition, who were present at the national conference last year, quickly changed their tune when they heard the technicians tell them what they did not know either through stupidity or dilatory tactics.

If they were to be told, on this subject, that Mauritians do not want to grow vegetables in their back gardens because housewives can get them in the markets or even in the supermarkets, when these vegetables are frozen? If they were to be asked how many coconut palms, litchis, mango tress, tamarind trees, and banana trees have been cut down to make room for the construction of housing?

No one can deny it: freedom of the press is a safety valve for democracy. It is thus desirable that the government's faults be pointed out, but is systematic opposition democratic, logical, or desirable in a developing country? Should we not also criticize the opposition, which has had a remarkable performance of more or less camouflaged defiance for the generally accepted rules of national assemblies?

And when the prime minister wants to exercise his constitutional right to decide the date of the elections, does he become "guardian of the nation" then? Can objectivity become subjective?

RECORD BUDGET DEFICIT, FINANCIAL CRISIS DISCUSSED

In 1981-1982 Budget

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The country is headed toward a record deficit in the 1981-82 budget, which may run to 1.4 to 1.5 billion rupees, as compared to the original estimate of 1.151 billion (current budget and development).

Meeting with representatives of the employer and labor sectors yesterday (see following article), the minister of finance stated, we have learned, that the estimated 1981-82 budget deficit will in fact be substantially greater. The recent wage increase granted by the government will bring the deficit to 1.376 billion rupees, the finance minister made it clear. If expenditures are increasing, revenue is declining steadily, which will further increase the deficit.

Thus, with the reduced tax bite (reduced to only 600,000 tons or less), the government will lose some 100 million rupees in various incomes. The slowdown of the economy is also leading to reduced sums collected in income taxes.

The expenditures initially planned for the rice and flour subsidies (230 million rupees) will be increased with the rise in the dollar (17 percent on an average in a few weeks), and as the government will not increase the price of basic foodstuffs, the state will thus have to absorb the additional expenditure.

All these factors together will put the state budget deficit at 1.4 billion rupees or even 1.5 billion rupees, it is now estimated.

Serious Economic Situation

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 20 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] The economic situation in the country has again become as serious as it was prior to the October 1979 devaluation. There are deficits in all accounts, destiny has plagued us with successive declines in agricultural production, unemployment has reached an "intolerable" level, and the 1981-82 budget deficit will be larger than initially planned. Thus the time has come for sacrifice and cooperation by all. This is the message voiced by the minister of finance, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, in the course of the meeting of the first National Economic Council (NEC), including representatives of the government, the Employers' Federation and the trade union sector. The minister of finance stated forcefully, however, that there will not as a result be a further devaluation (see below) and that the program for structural readjustment of the national economy drafted with the assistance of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund will be fully respected.

This first meeting of the NEC was on the whole satisfactory for all three parties involved in the development of the economy. A second meeting is scheduled for 2 September.

Yesterday's session was devoted above all to a long explanation by Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo of the general economic situation and the current difficulties being experienced by the sugar industry and the state.

The prospects are gloomy, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo revealed yesterday, since employment in the large establishments in the country has declined, with a drop of 199,000 in 1979 to only 197,000 in 1980, representing a decrease of 2,000 (when the creation of several thousand new jobs was hoped for). Employment has increased only in the small and average enterprises, and if in the final analysis the total number of employees increased from 286,000 in 1979 to 291,000 in 1980 (i.e., an increase of 5,000), this was above all due to the small enterprises. But an additional 5,000 employed is far from the figure required to overcome unemployment. The official unemployment figure had reached 59,000 at the last estimate, and if this figure includes some who are fictitiously unemployed, it is nonetheless "intolerable," the minister of finance stated.

Moreover, deficits are increasing. The trade balance deficit had already reached 1.4 billion rupees for the first half of 1981. The balance of payments deficit will be sizable also. The state budget deficit for 1981-82 (see below) will be very large, probably 1.4 billion rupees or more. National consumption is holding steady: 80 cents out of each rupee go for consumption.

However, Sir Veerasamy defended the current orientation of the government policy of cooperating with the International Monetary Fund (IMF). "If we cease to work with the World Bank and the IMF, the country would cease to function" he said as a warning to those in the opposition who deplore the fact that Mauritius remains under the "sponsorship" of the IMF, which dictates its economic policy to it. Without the aid of the IMF, it would henceforth be impossible for Mauritius to obtain foreign loans, in eurodollars or otherwise, he explained.

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo said that the government keeps it commitments to international institutions, and it will continue to work with them, as other countries do, moreover, since Mauritius is not the only one to find itself in this situation. A World Bank team will come to Mauritius to study the development of the situation shortly, and another team fromthe IMF will come to study the situation prior to the new negotiations with the Mauritian government with a view to the release of new credit facilities. The social partners may, if they so desire, meet with these teams, Sir Veerasamy said.

The minister of finance also stressed the current difficulties in the sugar industry. He expressed his conviction that the MSPA [Mauritius Sugar Producers Association] "exaggerates" the difficulties of some of its members. He reiterated his opinion that the problems of the sugar industry (see yesterday's LE MAURICIEN) cannot be dealt with overall, but should be analyzed plantation by plantation. For despite the poor crop last year, some plantations made a profit, he said. It is also necessary to make a clear distinction between the immediate problem of liquid assets (certain plantations do not have enough liquid assets to cover their payrolls), which the government plans to cover with the aid of the Bank of Mauritius and the State Bank, and the longer range problem of the profitability of the industry. The government has no desire to see the profitability of the mother industry threatened, and it will take all the future steps necessary.

Three World Bank experts who are at present in Mauritius are working actively on setting up a sugar unit which will be attached to the Ministry of Economic Planning and Development.

This new unit will have the task of studying the finances of the sugar industry and will be functional "rather soon." Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, who devoted the greater part of his address to the situation in the sugar industry, admitted that the government does not for the moment have the practical means of checking on the finances of that industry. "The government is not suitably equipped to undertake the work of verification that it would like to," he said. Although the government is unable to establish an exact idea of sugar profitability at the present time, Sir Veerasamy explained that in his view, the level of the sugar plantations' indebtedness "is not as alarming as they would have us believe. They have substantial assets and can borrow much more."

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo took this occasion to denounce the "psychosis and scenario" promoted by the MSPA just after the parliamentary vote on preferential wage compensation to the workers in the sugar industry.

At this point, the minister of finance stated that the government favors the appointment of a commission to investigate the sugar industry more than ever. However, he explained, the government does not have any intention of appointing such a commission prior to the coming general elections. "The government believes that in this pre-election period, people's minds are not calm," Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo said.

Gift to Handicapped

Port Louis THE NATION in French 1 Aug 81 p 1

> [Text] A gift of 100,000 rupees has been made by Libya to handicapped Mauritians, as part of the International Year of the Handicapped. The national committee has decided to allot 40,000 rupees for acquisition of 10 wheelchairs and accessories.

The following institutions will receive allocations :

"Physically Handicapped Welfare Association": 3,000 rupees for the prrchase of 20 chairs to be used by those who work on machines.

"Cheshire Home": 5,000 rupees for enlarging the gardens.

"Apeim": 8,000 rupees for equipment.

"Rodrigues Handicapped Committee": 4,000 rupees for four wheelchairs.

"The Mauritian Fraternal Association of the Infirm and Handicapped": 10,000 rupees on condition that those who return from Reunion teach what they have learned abroad.

"School for the Blind": 8,000 rupees for a tape recorder and other necessary items.

"Mauritius Mental Health Association": 8,000 rupees for acquisition of tools.

"School for the Blind": 6,494 rupees.

Gift of Ambulances

Port Louis THE NATION in French 6 Aug 81 p 1

> [Text] Three ambulances, a gift from the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, will soon be made available to the Rodrigues hospital service.

These vehicles, originally bearing the Daihatsu brand, have been reconverted into ambulances by Leal and Company, Ltd. The cost of each ambulance amounts to 90,000 rupees.

Two of these ambulances will be attached to the health centers of La Ferme and Mon Lubin. The third will be put at the disposal of the Roche-Bon-Dieu police and will be utilized for transport of emergency cases from the sourheastern part of the country.

These ambulances will be officially turned over to the acting prime minister tomorrow by the secretary of the People's Bureau of the Socialist Libyan Arab People's Jamahiriya, Mr I. al-Jaddy.

They will be sent to Rodrigues by the next boat.

TWELFTH ANNIVERSARY OF LIBYAN EVOLUTION CELEBRATED

Labor Party Delegation

Port Louis THE NATION in French 25 Aug 81 p 1

> [Text] The Libyan Arab Socialist People's Jamahiriya has invited a governmental delegation to attend the celebration marking the 12th anniversary of the 1 September revolution.

The delegation is headed by Sir Kher Jagatsingh, minister of education, who left yesterday afternoon for Tripoli. He will be joined in the Libyan capital by Razack Peeroo, minister of labor, Kailash Purryag, minister of social security, and Burty David, president of the Labor Party, who are leaving today. They will return on 7 September.

The 12th anniversary of the Libyan revolution assumes special importance this year, in wake of the violation of Libyan territory by the Americans. Hundreds of foreign representatives will be meeting in Tripoli to condemn that provocative act taken against a country which will be heading the Organization of African Unity next year.

Exhibit At Cultural Center

Port Louis THE NATION in French 26 Aug 81 p 1

> [Text] "The Jamahiriya on the March": that is the theme of an exhibit which was officially opened Monday at the Libyan Cultural Center by the secretary of the Libyan People's Bureau in Mauritius, Mr Ibrahim al-Jaddy, before a group of the center's students and a number of luminaries.

This exhibit recounts the great achievements in Libya since the 1 September revolution. Many publications dealing with the economic, social, and cultural development, as well as the Green Book, are prominently displayed in the exhibit, which will remain open up to 27 August.

The exhibit is part of the series of activities marking the 12th anniversary of the Libyan revolution. Various other activities are scheduled, including a competitive quiz, film showings, a forum dealing with the Green Book, and a cultural day at the Port Louis Theater.

Invitation Declined

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 29 Aug 81 p 1

[Article: "The PSM Declines Libyan Invitation"]

[Text] The reason: The Libyan Embassy wanted to choose its representative itself.

The Mauritian Socialist Party (PSM) has declined an invitation from the Libyan Embassy in Mauritius to send one of its representatives to Tripoli to attend, along with other Mauritian members of parliament, the celebration of the 12th anniversary of the Libyan revolution. The reason was that the party wanted to choose its own representative, while, according to the PSM, the Libyan Embassy insisted on a particular individual, in this case Dr Y. Maudarbaccus.

Under these conditions, according to PSM sources, and as a matter of principle (the party believing it has the right to choose to be represented by a person of its choice), the PSM declined the invitation and criticized the position taken by the Libyan people's bureau.

It is known that several ministers and members of parliament both of the Labor Party and the Mauritian Militant Movement [MMM] are presently attending the celebration in Libya, including Ministers Jagatsingh, Peeroo, Burty David, and Jean-Claude de L'Estrac, deputy secretary general of the MMM.

PUBLICATION OF NEW ISLAMIC JOURNAL LAUNCHED

Port Louis THE NATION in French 4 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] AL DAAWA AL ISLAMIA (Call to Islam) has begun publication. The first issue of the newspaper, whose editor is Hassen Heerah, came out on Sunday, the day of the Eid-Ul-Fitr holiday.

In an editorial, Mr Heerah wrote:

"We adore God, we turn toward one Kaaba and we are guided by one koran. Islam and all Moslems must be one. Small quarrels accumulate and become great manifestations of hatred and division, and have done immense harm to the Moslem community. Our goal, through this publication, is to work body and soul, to extent of our capacities, to contribute to uniting us and making us proud of ourselves."

The newspaper also carried a message from Mr Ibrahim Al-Jaddy, secretary of the People's Bureau of the Libyan Jamahiriya, and the address delivered by Dr Mohamed Ahmer Al-Charif, secretary of the Libyan Call to Islam Organization during his recent visit. The printing is done by Regent Press and the artwork by APC--Publi-Conseil Ltd.

TALKS ON PREFERENTIAL OIL RATES FROM IRAQ IN PROGRESS

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN 18 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] The import of oil from Iraq to serve our domestic needs may be arranged at a preferential price on the governmental level. This possibility was mentioned by the ambassador of that country, Mr Alkassab Ihsan Ali, who presented his credentials to the governor general, Sir Dayendranath Burenchobay, yesterday. The ambassador then met with the prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, to whom he delivered a message from President Saddam Hussein, and the minister of foreign affairs, Sir Harold Walter.

When questioned about this possibility, the ambassador stressed that two countries, Madagascar and Mozambique, benefited from such treatment before the outbreak of the Iraqi-Iranian frontier war, which led to a substantial reduction in Iraq's oil production. The policy of granting preferential treatment on exports to "brotherly and friendly" countries depends on the oil-producing countries themselves. Such a step, the ambassador believes, would allow the countries of the Third World to guarantee their own economic survival. In addition, Mr Alkassab noted that world inflation is not exclusively due to increasing oil prices, but to industrialized countries as well.

With regard to bilateral relations, Mr Alkassab said he favors the signing of a cultural and economic cooperation agreement between the two countries, which would make it possible to contemplate the import of oil on a preferential basis. Within this framework, it was said, the ambassador's visit constitutes "a step forward in this direction."

Speaking of the Iraqi-Iranian frontier conflict, the ambassador said that Iran had "always had claims on Iraq" and that this war has gone on in fact for at least 500 years. The present conflict, Mr Aklassab said, was launched by the Iranians on the Kurdistan frontier, where they used 75 mm guns. The Iraqi response came immediately on 4 September, and the army has been able to push the Iranians about 40 km back into Iran. "We want to live in peace and as good neighbors with Iran, and this is why we accepted the Security Council proposal, as well as that of the nonaligned nations. But the Iranians do not want to hear of any such thing. They reject negotiations and are continuing the war, even during the month of Ramadan," the ambassador said.

Questioned about the fall of President Saddam Hussein, predicted recently by some Iranian emissaries to Mauritius, the ambassador smiled slightly. "A number of Iranians, including Bani Sadr, want Saddam Hussein ousted, but it is Bani Sadr today who is in exile under Khomeini's dictatorship," he said, adding that the people of Iraq stand behind President Hussein.

BRIEFS

ETHANOL PROJECT--The ethanol project may benefit from financial aid provided by the African Development Bank (ADB) and the European Investment Bank (BEI). Discussions between the government and these international bodies are in progress. The establishment of an ethanol corporation within this context is a possibility. Questioned on this subject, the minister of economic planning and development, Sir Rabindrah Ghurburrun, refused to say what the cost of the project and its structures will be. However, he stressed, the government has given its endorsement for the advancement of this project. It is already known that tests on vehicles were undertaken by the Shell Company at the request of the government. Some 20 vehicles were operated for almost a month using the gasoline-ethanol mixture, and the owners subsequently filled out a lengthy questionnaire concerning the efficiency of this fuel. It has been learned from company circles that other tests of the same sort will be undertaken during the summer season. [Text] [Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 19 Aug 81 p 1] 5157

U.S. ROLE IN NAMIBIA DESCRIBED

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 8 Sep 81 p 2

[Editorial by H. Feddersen: "The Role of the United States"]

[Text] Following the meeting of European foreign ministers which took place over the weekend with Lord Carrington presiding, Europe seems to agree with the United States only in one question: for the last 5 months "substantial success" has been "achieved in the Namibia question" although no significant breakthrough can be expected. Apart from the joint veto by the United States, recently there were sufficient examples of a separation between the United States and Europe. Questions of trade, defense expenditures, El Salvador, disarmament talks with the Soviet Union, the neutron bomb and the natural gas pipeline to the FRG revealed that even in 2 weeks no unified front would appear when the UN General Assembly resumes "normal" meetings on 24 September.

Now Secretary of State Haig has announced it, and the Western Five responded: In spite of South Africa's incursions in Angola, U.S. contacts with Pretoria have become more intensive and more important than a public condemnation. The FRG and France are still appealing to South Africa to pull back its troops--an appeal which fell on deaf ears on 26 August--but both find economic sanctions inadvisable since these would primarily harm the blacks.

The Republic of South Africa [RSA] is proceeding on the basis that free elections may only take place if no terrorism is to be expected from Angola. South Africa hopes that the United States, through its reassessment of the communist danger, can unite the Western allies. And we are reminded that Reagan, during the election campaign, promised that he would strengthen the Western alliance.

Are the differences of opinion between the United States and Europe thus just a screen behind which the West is regrouping? It almost looks like it because while the United Nations increasingly more clearly is losing credibility, the United States is assuming a leading role. We should not let the signs of the time deceive us for the substantial successes could read in clear text just as well this way: through the new contact with the South Africans, the American succeeds in getting the former to give in to a decision which they otherwise would not have made. On the other hand, the RSA revealed some of its hardest side just recently. It showed that the fight is being waged "with its back to the ocean." Even the internal parties are finally(!) putting common obligations (as a "front against the SWAPO") in the foreground.

Since America should have learned something from the Vietnam crisis, our subcontinent might well become a "Vietnam crisis in reverse." For this reason the West can speak of "successes" while the USSR is not getting any tougher. Yet it must be kept in mind that Russia must not lose face in respect to its African allies. The conflict continues to be complicated, even if the United States appears to be assuming the leading role. The meeting of the EC foreign ministers alters nothing about this.

POSSIBLE NEW PROBLEMS EXAMINED

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 11 Sep 81 p 2

[Editorial by H. Feddersen: "New Powers—New Problems"]

[Text] When on Monday new government powers are given to the National Assembly and the Council of Ministers is increased by three seats, these steps will not necessarily mean only that problems have thus been eliminated. Quite the contrary: there can even be new problems.

At first the idea itself suggests that the general administrator will concentrate on his special area (city administration). For he has only three major areas of responsibility and the function, as the representative of South Africa, to counteract the appearance of a unilateral declaration of independence. The responsibility of foreign policy will hardly be assumed by Excellency Hough; instead we have Dr Brand Fourie and Pik Botha. In the problem area of defense, the situation is similar: three generals (Malan, Viljoen, Lloyd) are in control and will remain so. That leaves only the sector of "questions of regulations."

Since the necessary proclamations and laws about the First and Second Levels have been completed, the general administrator will be left the task which he has wanted since taking office: the expert for municipal administration may devote himself to the Third Level, and we wish him success.

The next session of the National Assembly which is to be increased by 22 representatives will open on 20 October. The Damara government is already turning down any kind of cooperation. But that is not the only problem if one considers that before a national election a basis of trust must first be reestablished. New powers could become a disadvantage for the DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance] since a governing party can easily be criticized and its credibility becomes the focal point of this criticism. People have a "scapegoat"--only rarely is praise offered.

The three additional seats in the Council of Ministers could well soon turn out to be a "drag." It is not clear who made this decision. It is likewise uncertain whether the different ministers will now assume responsibility over specific departments or whether these will continue to be the concern of various committees.

If the three additional members of the Council of Ministers ought to belong to the DTA, then there is the question of the criteria for qualifying. If an AKTUR [Action Front for the Preservation of Turnhalle Principles] member can become minister, why can't Messrs Garoeb or Kloppers, too? Other questions: What about the loyalty of these additional members? Can they claim, vis-a-vis their constituencies, in each instance that they are not conforming to a decision of the Council of Ministers or remain aloof from it? Doesn't the credibility of the Council of Ministers, which all too often has to make "cabinet decisions" behind closed doors and about non-partisan questions, perhaps suffer from this then? Since the thought arises that it is to be a question of three nonpolitical experts, there is a further question: Will these experts have the rank of minister? Must experts be ministers? Or the reverse: Must ministers be experts? (They have a large staff of experts available).

If policy in the immediate future should be primarily concerned with municipal administration—and there are signs that it will—then probably one of the next ministers would have to be A. Arnold. Through the actions on the northern border and in the United Nations once again some time has been gained for the domestic policy process. The problems, however, will not be so easily solved as they appear in theory at the green table and by decrees. Even France is occupied with the problem of how to accommodate four communists in a socialist cabinet. However, it is easier to control the distribution of NATO's secret files than to form trust among the people of a country which at last became very skeptical. Mainly: by what criteria will the masses be convinced of the necessity of three new ministers (and then: why these!)?

PROBLEMS OF CREDIBILITY NOTED

[Editorial by Arthur Suren: "Being Credible"]

[Text] Once again a delegation of our politicians has returned from the FRG after an intensive round of discussions; DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance] President Peter Kalangula and Dr Ben Africa and Hans-Juergen von Hase, members of the Council of Ministers. Not only their own reports, but also those of observers and the response in the German press attest to the fact that in the meantime a way has been found to represent better our interests and points of view than had clearly been the case until now. This includes a certain reluctance to assert our own demands which is not an expression of servility but rather of self-consciousness, as well as honesty related to the issue.

The difficulty for our politicians has its beginnings in the fact that neither our National Assembly which emerged from the 1978 election nor our Council of Ministers is recognized abroad. However, if one insists on holding discussions in his capacity as a member of one of the two institutions, one must expect that authoritative partners in discussion will not be available abroad. However, as the leading representatives of our multiracial party alliance of the DTA, one is welcome.

Thus, it was smart to undertake a recent political "recruiting trip" as the DTA delegation. Following obvious diplomatic practices, the members of the delegations subordinated themselves to their highest ranking colleague, Peter Kalangula. That had to leave a good impression and be recognized.

When, as members of the Council of Ministers from here, the DTA delegates gave up demanding an FRG minister as the only official partner of equal rank, they were also in a position to declare that they had no right to judge the scheduling of the minister of foreign affairs. In so doing they eliminated any suspicion of possible intentional provocation. They in no way embarrassed themselves, but rather the Foreign Office in respect to the public. For even in the German public it is expected that the Federal government will do the same things for the party leaders of the DTA as for the party leader of Nuyoma.

There is complete justification for the expectation of politicians here to find more understanding for the situation of the Southwest than in any other country not only because of strong mutual German connections, but also because of the political situation there. Kalangula was deeply impressed by the Berlin Wall. Afterwards, whenever he drew the comparison that his people, the Owambo, are similarly divided by a somewhat spiritual wall—on the one hand the adherents of a communist ideology of the SWAPO, on the other hand the defenders of a democratic freedom—, he can be certain everywhere of the attentiveness of his listeners. In his human words then, at least one remains credible: the good will of a sincere effort on his part and on the part of his colleagues in the party alliance.

For anyone who really has something to say, it does not matter in what capacity he does it. The credibility of his statements does not depend on his offices. Likewise, on the other side of the partners in the discussion, it is not the position but rather the influence which is decisive. Thus, it is not surprising that the delegation encountered the striking concern of FDP Bundestag delegates. Ultimately, this party supplies the minister of foreign affairs. This means: if the decisive discussions took place even in the "basement," their results will nonetheless reach the floor where the boss is, with lasting effect.

Based on the content of the discussions, the DTA delegation was confronted with two ranges of criticism: the racial discrimination which has, of course, been formally removed, but in practice continues, and the close tie to South Africa.

From a European point of view the assertion that our Southwesters' political organs have an independence apart from South Africa in now way has the effect of being credible, rather ridiculous. In this, only honesty can bring it about that the realistic-political appraisal of the state of affairs becomes believeable through our politicians. Thus, it was useful that the DTA delegation did not attempt to conceal the relationship between South Africa and South-West Africa, the economic involvements of South-West Africa with South Africa and the definitely common interests of both countries, but on the other hand rejected any repudiation of South Africa. Such a demand is evidence rather of political fantasies by our critics.

The circumstances and reasons which tie us to South Africa, particularly in the question of the high financing of our national budget and military protection, are ultimately more convincing than grand acts of lip-service by Western countries as support of our democratic forces. When side reservations are simultaneously included that the prerequisite for financial "development help" to Namibia is its internationally recognized national independence, then the taint of not being credible is no longer within us.

If another country or the community of Western powers could convincingly guarantee us better financial help and military protection, we would gladly do without South Africa. That would suit South Africa itself because then it would have available more of the funds, which reach into the hundreds of millions, for its own purposes.

The DTA delegation did well with the same honesty not to minimize in a foolish manner the occurrences of everyday racial discrimination. Only in this way will we find an ear among our critics abroad, to be able to explain the more immediate circumstances of such occurrences and to reveal that the reorientation processes in the mass of people take more time than one really has.

Our internal laws can be just as good, our politicians can be just as honorable, but if an end to practical and flagrant racial discrimination does not become visible, we will neither become nor remain trustworthy abroad.--But also at home these "trifles" repeatedly destroy the credibility of our democratic forces among those concerned. If we, vis-a-vis our real enemy, the SWAPO with its promises, want to prevail among the majority of our people, it is high time to put a strict end to acts of discrimination--even if it involves the use of existing penal provisions. This could not be stated clearly enough by the DTA delegation in Germany nor here either.

CONTACTS WITH FRG DISCUSSED

[Unattributed article: "Effective Contacts"]

[Text] Council of Ministers member H.-J von Hase, who returned to Windhoek yesterday with his colleagues Dr B. Africa and DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance] President P. Kalangula, said that he had found considerable good will in the FRG. He reported about the intensive discussions which were received with interest by the partners in the discussion in Berlin, the Rhine Palatinate and Mainz and about discussions with the recently created "Namibia discussion group" in which all Bundestag parties are represented. The ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG (AZ) had already given an extensive report through its Bonn correspondent.

The DTA delegation was led by Kalangula and was able to hold 12 press conferences, 3 television and 3 radio interviews--enabling them to address a great number of people--and was able to speak with representatives of all political parties, 3 foundations and various churches.

As representatives of the DTA the three delegates were at all times listened to, which would not have been the case if they had come as representatives of the NV [National Assembly] or the Council of Ministers. AZ asked: "It is striking that visits by representatives of internal political forces give preference to the FRG. Is it thought that the FRG government within the group of Five has decisive influence?" Dr Ben Africa answered that because of the strong links of the German-speaking part of the population of South-West Africa/Namibia with Germany in Europe the best understanding could be expected. The FRG government, with its development help, is, however, also more committed in Africa policy than other countries.

Von Hase made it clear that all three delegates had been put to work from morning to midnight, for the most part. "We were able to make our point of view clearly known in a very intensive form and achieved more publicity than we had expected." For example, they participated in the birthday celebration for former Bundestag president, Dr Eugen Gerstenmaier (75), and on this occasion were able to speak with a number of important politicians.

In this connection a discussion with the German minister of foreign affairs himself did not have any such weight. As much as the delegation would have liked to speak with one of the highest representatives of the FRG government, it was naturally explained that as guests it was not up to them to judge how a minister of foreign affairs divides up his time.

According to a report in DIE WELT, Genscher is ready to receive the DTA politicians; the date is firm: some time in October.

Using impressive words, von Hase made clear how hard a time the Southwesters' representatives had abroad: "Our friends, as our enemies, obtain extensive information from the other side, too. We must not believe that we can say anything new to those who concern themselves with us in decisive areas. They know a great deal about us and naturally recognize the weak points right off."

"Small events, such as the case of Dan Seemueller or the cadets of St. Paul's School, often have enormous impact. These things are viewed as pure discrimination. In this it does not matter that we can point to our laws if we repeatedly engender incredulity by such practice and thus provide our friends with no opportunity to intercede for us. If we do not alter that immediately, we will have big difficulties," explained von Hase.

There were discussions with various agencies about development projects: especially education, transportation and water systems awakened considerable interest and contacts relating to these were initiated. "We need this support now, not after independence." As an example, von Hase mentioned the PSS project in Katutura for which donations from Germany can be expected shortly.

Dr Africa, who had stayed in New York for 3 days, was asked how the transfer of rather extensive powers to the Council of Ministers was viewed abroad.

"Many groups--for example the SPD--demand that we should dissolve all ties to South Africa in order to become more credible." He had had to make it clear to these people that this would be comparable to a unilateral declaration of independence and who would then take South Africa's place? "Outside South Africa no one is prepared to give us money," said von Hase in response.

After a visit in Berlin, Peter Kalangula, who unfortunately could not participate in yesterday's press conference, repeatedly made it clear to the Germans that his people, the Owambo, are also divided by a border. He expressed his fears by saying that with the help of the Russians a situation similar to that in Berlin could develop.

Von Hase emphasized in answer to AZ: "FDP Bundestag delegate Rumpf and his party friends, as well as two SPD delegates (who had shown themselves in their visits in South-West Africa to be extremely critical) were anxious, in a spirit of commitment, to have the meeting with the 'Namibia discussion group' become a success."

DTA DISCUSSIONS IN BONN

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 11 Sep 81 p 7

[Unattributed article: "Fruitful Discussions in Bonn"]

[Text] The president of the DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance], Peter Kalangula, in a discussion with members of all three parties, again urged Bonn to provide Namibia with financial support even before achieving independence.

At the first meeting of the Namibia discussion group Kalangula declared before delegates from the SPD, FDP and CDU/CSU that only with material and spiritual support from Western industrial countries could the dependence of the DTA on South Africa be softened. At the meeting, in which even Hildegard Hamm-Bruecher, minister of state in the Foreign Office, participated, the delegates said that such help is not possible because the FRG government, like the other governments of the West, would not recognize the Namibian Council of Ministers and regarded even the elections of 1978 as "null and void."

The discussion with the fractions' Namibia experts was the highpoint in the DTA delegation's trip through the FRG and West Berlin. The initiator of the Namibia discussion group, FDP delegate Dr Rumpf, said in response to the ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, that the conversation with Kalangula, Dr Ben Africa and Hans-Juergen von Hase had been a complete success in the view of all participants. In the process there had also been talk on matters "which cannot be stated openly." Kalangula had declared that the DTA was conducting a two-front struggle in Namibia: on the one hand in the north against the SWAPO and then in the interior against certain South African officials who were staking everything on torpedoing measures to do away with apartheid. Dr Rumpf said that for the politicians in Bonn the discussion had been a good beginning for strengthening the activities of Namibia. He pointed to the fact that the discussion group wants to invite a prominant representative of the SWAPO next November.

Prior to the meeting with the Namibia experts, the DTA delegation had met with delegates of the CDU/CSU and with Wolfgang Beitz, general secretary of the Otto-Benecke Foundation. In this conversation the politicians of the Union pointed to the fact that it was not a matter of achieving independence for Namibia at any price, but rather of giving the people an opportunity to decide, in guaranteed peace and freedom, their own fate.

In connection with this meeting Kalangula regretted the fact that an appointment with the delegation led by him had not been kept by the SPD. It was the second time that the Social Democrats--contrary to their often emphasized nonpartisanship in the Namibia question--had cancelled a previously firmly set appointment on short notice.

The Otto-Benecke Foundation is the supporter of extensive programs to train skilled workers for African countries. Among other things, with the help of the foundation, several hundred experts were trained for Mugabe, the current prime minister of Zimbabwe. Even a number of Namibians, who are selected following recommendations by the SWAPO, receive training stipends from this institution.

In the discussion with the foundation Kalangula urged General Secretary Beitz to contribute to the training of Angolan refugees in Namibia. The DTA president pointed to the fact that for several months increasingly more refugees from Angola were fleeing to Namibia because of the catastrophic political and economic situation in their country. The Council of Ministers in Windhoek is not in a position to help these people from its own sources to any appreciable extent.

Beitz said he felt it necessary to discuss this problem with the office of the UN commissioner for refugees.

Kalangula and Dr Ben Africa are expected back in Windhoek on Sunday. They have scheduled a press conference for the late morning. Von Hase will remain in Europe a few more days.

COMMENTS ON RESULTS OF GENEVA MEETING ON NAMIBIA

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 23 Sep 81 p 12

[Commentary by Achille Lollo]

[Text] Chester Crocker, U.S. assistant secretary of state for African affairs, has concluded the discussions initiated at Reagan's order in Geneva, with Brand Fourie, secretary of state of the racist government of South Africa, and representatives of the so-called "internal" parties of Namibia, to find a viable solution that might alter the stands taken within the Contact Group following South Africa's invasion of Angola [RPA] and thus to attempt to bring about a modification of UN Assembly Resolution 435.

There has been, in fact, no official communique describing the content of these discussions, but the political persuasion of the parties to the meeting--Chester Crocker and Brand Fourie--suggest the basic premise of the Geneva discussions.

Crocker is the official naysayer to all the diplomatic initiatives in the months preceding the South African invasion of the RPA. After his first trip to the African continent, he referred to the futility of the "diplomatic charade in search of a Namibian solution."

Now we can understand why Crocker let it be known that the contacts initiated by the RPA, the OAU countries and some Western European countries in search of a swift solution to the Namibian problem did not suit the United States, diplomatically or politically; what the imperialists wanted--and have so demonstrated in Geneva--was that the Namibian question be taken up solely with the racist government of Pretoria and representatives of Namibia's so-called internal parties, organized by South Africa itself.

This is the point of view which the United States will present at the next meeting of the Contact Group, since the veto of the censure of the racist invasion of Angola is part of the Reagan administration's diplomatic support for the Botha and Mallan policy.

Is it possible that, after receiving the Angolan puppets and supporting the execution of "Proteus 81," the invasion plan of the Pretorian racists, the imperialists would then meet secretly with Brand Fourie and tell him that Resolution 435 is the only way to a final solution of the Namibian question?

If this were the case, there would be no need to keep the results of the meeting a secret. On the contrary, the imperialists met with their Pretorian ally to establish a strategy for political and diplomatic action at the meeting of the foreign affairs ministers of the so-called Contact Group countries.

When it brings up the Namibian question, the United States has always talked about "correcting" Resolution 435 on the basis of new facts. Unfortunately for Crocker, the only real fact in the current political picture is the continued occupation of some areas of Angola's Cunene Province after the recent recapture of Xangongo, Mongua and Ondjiva by the FAPLA [Armed Forces for the Popular Liberation of Angola].

Is, then, the continued occupation of Angolan territory and the preparations for a new military attack by racist Pretorian troops the new argument which the United States will present to the Contact Group for revision of UN Resolution 435, which recognizes SWAPO as the sole legitimate representative of Namibia?

It is possible, and this would explain why, just 32 days after the start of the invasion, the imperialists, the racists and the Namibian puppets have met to analyze possible "corrections" to Resolution 435.

Finally, it should be noted that Crocker declared on 22 September, at the beginning of the Geneva meeting, that "we are seeing progress in the implementation of the U.S. project for Namibia." We all know the kind of progress the United States has in mind, however. Maybe the imperialists want to repeat their first neocolonialist experiment in Africa, back in 1821, when the "American Colonization Society" sent 20,000 North American blacks to Liberia and they began to govern the "bush niggers" the North American way.

AGRARIAN REFORM BILL CAUSES VIOLENT REACTION

Government Communique

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 9 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] Communique

1. In accordance with the democratic options of the State of Cape Verde, consecrated in the Constitution of the Republic, the government has adopted and is carrying out the PAIGC policy of submitting draft bills of major importance in the nation's life to prior discussion among the people.

Therefore, pursuant to the constitutional mandate to promote agrarian reform, the government has approved a draft bill for the respective organic law, which has been presented for public discussion throughout the country. The freely expressed opinions of the citizens will make it possible to obtain a national consensus and to draft a definitive Organic Law for Agrarian Reform [LBRA], to be submitted to the National Popular Assembly for discussion and approval.

2. The government is greatly pleased to note that the public meetings to discuss the LBRA have been well attended and generally take place in a peaceful and confident atmosphere, demonstrating the high civic and patriotic spirit of our people and the Cape Verdian masses' proven aspiration for progress.

3. As could be expected, however, the enemies of our people's democratic progress did not fail to take advantage of the discussions regarding the LBRA draft bill. In certain areas of the Concelho da Ribeira Grande (Ilha de Santo Antao), groups of individuals, some of whom are already on record for past antinational activities and whose motives and connections are well known, sought to incite the people to riot. Through threats, intimidation and attacks, they attempted to disturb the public order and tranquillity.

When the local authorities reacted promptly and firmly, arresting some of the rioters, the above-mentioned groups violently resisted the peace-keeping forces, seeking to free their coreligionists. Unfortunately, during an attempt by one of the rioters to disarm a police officer, one person was killed and two were injured.

4. As a result of timely action by the government, however, the situation has returned to normal in the Santo Antao zone affected by the criminal activity of these individuals.

5. Whereas agrarian reform is essential to the development of agricultural production and to the building of a society in which men are not ruled by debased interests for the benefit of individuals, groups or classes; Aware of its basic duty to safeguard, by all means, the conquests of the people, particularly the instituted national revolutionary democracy;

The Government of Cape Verde:

-- Reiterates its firm decision to proceed with democratic public debate of the LBRA draft bill throughout the nation.

-- Declares its determination to fully assume its responsibilities and to firmly exercise the constitutional and legal means to maintain public order and tranquillity and to assert the power and authority of the state.

6. The government, encouraged by the popular masses' continuing confidence in its action, is certain that nothing and no one can halt the path of the Cape Verdian people to their goal of progress and social justice.

Reactionaries Accused

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 9 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

[Editorial by Arnaldo Andrade]

[Text] What action could the "national" reactionaries take against a measure of such vast scope as agrarian reform, which will certainly greatly strengthen grassroots support for the regime? Naturally, the reactionaries had to oppose agrarian reform by every means available, to sabotage anything that could enhance mutual trust between the government and the masses, stimulated by participatory democracy.

Everything indicates that the reactionaries created the incidents in Santo Antao in an attempt to thwart public discussion of the draft of the organic law for agrarian reform. Two conclusions are possible at this time: the reactionaries are losing reputability (which never was their strong point) and ground, abandoning the tactic so familiar in recent years of challenging the "wisdom" of draft bills (remember the constitution, the electoral law, etc.?) and resorting to bungling attempts to impede the discussion process. They even fell into the error of violently attacking individuals whose competence, party considerations aside, has already been publicly recognized. Such attacks are common crimes. There is no limit to the retrogression of our reactionaries.

On the other hand, no one today denies the influence of agrarian reform on a revolution in progress. A regime's reputation is most often based on the way its leaders resolve the agrarian issue in a country undergoing change. Cape Verde's agrarian reform accurately reflects the balanced approach that has guided the direction of the Cape Verdian state since July 1975, deliberately fostering, with specific measures and active institutions, the basic trust essential to the continuation of the changes initiated with national independence.

This regime, growing in strength, motivated by well-known historical reasons and the cause of justice, increasingly evident (agrarian reform is the best example), is responsible for seeing that the constitution is respected and for calling to account anyone who seeks to challenge our basic law. We do not lack moral authority, particularly over those whose colonial past or more recent utter rejection of the Cape Verdian nation were disavowed by the Cape Verdian people 7 years ago.

Meanwhile, the agrarian reform law provides for indemnification of property owners affected by the coming expropriations. Since the ringleaders of the riot in Santo Antao are landowners, it is quite probable that, despite their licentious acts against this regime, the government will be legally obligated to line their pockets with part of the funds so laboriously earned by all the people of Cape Verde.

When life plays such practical jokes on us, we do not have to be philosophers to conclude that patience is a great virtue and, for this very reason, difficult to practice.

JOINT GUINEA-BISSAU-CAPE VERDIAN NAGUICAVE COMPANY DISSOLVED

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 22 Aug 81 p 12

[Text] The Government of Cape Verde will assume the assets and liabilities of NAGUICAVE.

NAGUICAVE was dissolved on 30 July, pursuant to a decision of the extraordinary general assembly.

The resolution was the result of a proposal by the Cape Verdian Government, in light of the "absence of the spirit that guided creation of the enterprise, the company's financial deficit (about 20 million escudos in 1980) and the climate of distrust arising from some insinuations by the Guinea-Bissau delegation" at the last extraordinary meeting of NAGUICAVE on 15 June.

NAGUICAVE was capitalized at 25 million escudos, with Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau controlling equal shares of 48 percent; the remaining 4 percent was held privately by 93 Cape Verdians, generally merchants and chandlers. The company was created in 1978 and had two 3,000-ton ships: the "Santo Antao" and the "Ilha de Komo," purchased with a loan from the Bank of Cape Verde.

A general assembly called for May in Mindelo did not take place because Guinea-Bissau did not appear. Another meeting was called in June, also in Mindelo, and 52 percent of the shareholders voted for the Cape Verdian Government proposal to dissolve the enterprise. Later, in an extraordinary general assembly, a series of steps to liquidate the company was approved. Since there was no consensus regarding the objectives of the meeting held in July, again in Mindelo, the Cape Verdian Government decided to "take over the assets and liabilities of NAGUICAVE, to reassess its property (through a technical commission comprising a representative of Guinea-Bissau, a Cape Verdian representative and an independent representative) and, in accordance with its findings, to proceed to indemnification in proportion to the number of shares held in the company."

Meanwhile, according to Omar Lima, secretary general of the Cape Verdian Ministry of Transportation and Communications, the "Santo Antao" and the "Ilha de Komo" (which are mortgaged to the Bank of Cape Verde) and the rest of the company's equipment will be administered by a management commission to be created.

The eight-member delegation from Guinea-Bissau was led by Moussa Djassi, secretary general of the Guinea-Bissau Ministry of Transportation. The Cape Verdian delegation was led by Commander Herculano Vieira, minister of transportation and communications.

MINDELO SHIPYARDS PROJECT AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH PORTUGAL

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 31 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] An agreement providing $38 million for construction of the port of Mindelo shipyards has finally been signed between the Cape Verdian Government and the joint enterprise CABNAVE. The agreement was signed in the Cape Verdian Embassy in Lisbon by Osvaldo Lopes da Silva, Cape Verde's minister of economy and finance, and by the Portuguese secretaries of state for the treasury and for industry.

"According to the findings of the viability study conducted by LISNAVE [Lisbon Shipyards Co], the Matiola shipyard project should be placed within the broader context of converting Porto Grande into a base of support for the fishing fleets that operate along the coast of western Africa," the Cape Verdian finance minister said.

Lopes da Silva added: "You will have an idea of the boldness of such a decision, involving the adoption of an entire program, taking in several interconnected studies, if you bear in mind that the decision was made only a few months after Cape Verde declared its independence, when the spectre of starvation still threatened the very existence of the Cape Verdian people."

According to the finance minister, thanks to the skill of the specialists involved in the arrangements for the Matiola project and to the tenacity of the Cape Verdian worker, the countless problems blocking fulfillment of the project have been overcome.

The finance minister stressed the part played by the image which Cape Verde has managed to create in these 6 years of independence; a small country, with no industry, it has nonetheless managed to provide the guarantees to secure the huge sum of $38 million "in financing for the project."

The Bank of Cape Verde will provide $8 million for the project, an indication of its importance to our country.

At the same time, CABMAR signed two contracts: one with the General Savings Bank to obtain credit of $12 million, and a $24 million contract with a Portuguese construction firm for the civil engineering works at the shipyard. Earlier, the General Savings Bank opened a line of credit worth $30 million to the Bank of Cape Verde.

Associated in CABNAVE are the Government of Cape Verde and two foreign firms: Portugal's LISNAVE and the Dutch firm Dewaal, which supply the technology.

LIMANN VISITS SWITZERLAND, CALLS FOR INVESTMENTS

Balance of Payments Aid

AB201844 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Switzerland has promised to assist Ghana with balance of payment support to help ease Ghana's present financial difficulties.

According to a GHANA NEWS AGENCY report from Bale, the Swiss Government is also ready to help Ghana with a mixed credit given jointly by the Swiss Government and a consortium of banks or similar financial institutions. The report quoting Ghanaian sources in Bale say the promise for assistance was given after a meeting between President Limann and the president, Mr Kurt Furgler. Details of the assistance will be worked out later between officials of the two countries.

The report says during the talk, Dr Limann, who is on a brief official visit to that country, emphasized his government's determination to push ahead agriculture as its main priority as well as the improvement in the country's roads and transportation.

Earlier at a luncheon given in his honor, Dr Limann reiterated his appeal to Ghana's friends and well-wishers to avail themselves with the opportunities offered by his government to invest in the country.

Assistance Requested

AB211839 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] President Limann, who is nearing the end of his visit to Switzerland, has said that his government is seeking true partnership and not charity in its dealing with foreign governments and investors.

At a dinner given in his honor by the Basel City authorities, the president observed that in solving Ghana's problems, material assistance from friendly countries is very vital. However, such assistance, which helps to bring about political and economic stability, is not peculiar to Ghana alone because some highly industrialized and prosperous countries had once passed through a similar situation and had to be helped with massive funds from friendly countries before they could recover and reconstruct.

Earlier at a luncheon given by the Swiss Bank Corporation, President Limann asked the bank, one of the big three in the country, to come to Ghana either by itself or in concert with other financial institutions. During the visit to the Basel mission headquarters, Dr Limann appealed to the mission to step up its medical services in Ghana and to help in material terms in the establishment of Ghana's University of Agriculture. The president returns to Accra tomorrow.

AFRC CONVICTS ASK FOR PARDON--A group of 12 Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) convicts has appealed to President Limann to grant them what they called unconditional presidential pardon. The appeal was made on behalf of the group by former Eastern Regional Commissioner Colonel Takyi when the minister of the interior, Mr Jantuah, visited the Usher Fort prisons in Accra as part of a familiarization tour of some departments under his ministry. Colonel Takyi told the minister that since they have been in detention for more than 2 years without trial, they will be grateful if the president would use his prerogative of mercy to grant them pardon. He said some of the AFRC convicts have been freed by the law courts and pointed out that even though genuine concern has been expressed by the government on the protracted delay in hearing the appeal, he and his colleagues do not know when judgment will be given. Colonel Takyi thanked the government for its statement urging the Supreme Court to expedite action on the case. Mr Jantuah assured the convicts that he will convey their appeal to the government. PROJECTS STUDIED BY SDCC TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION REVIEWED

[Text] The SATCC (Transportation and Communications Commission for Southern Africa), a special agency of the SADCC (Conference for Development Coordination in Southern Africa) has been maintaining fruitful contacts with various institutions for the purpose of financing four major projects of common interest to Mozambique and Swaziland.

These projects, presented to the SADCC-2, held at the end of November 1980, in Maputo, consist in the rehabilitation of the Machava—Phuzumoya railroad line, the expansion of the Lomahasha—Siteki highway, the repair of the Maputo—Boane—Namaacha road, and the expansion of the capacity of the port of Maputo.

The rehabilitation of the Machava—Phuzumoya railroad line for a distance of 145 kilometers consists in the replacement of the current railroad ties with new ties made of concrete and a portion of the railroad cars. It will also imply some realignment of the right of way to prevent the major downgrades especially in the zone of Swaziland.

Alitalia, along with the SATDD, expressed interest in financing the project. A specific proposal should be received in Maputo at the end of this month or the start of next month.

The investment for this project has been calculated at about $30 million, of which 80 percent will be in foreign exchange. It is believed that the work will last about 3 years. In accordance with the traffic increase estimates on this line, it is expected that 2.8 million tons will be moved in 1990 on this outlet from Swaziland to the port of Maputo; this is more than three times the current freight volume.

The restoration and expansion of the Siteki—Lomahasha road in Swaziland, as well as the restoration of the section corresponding to that highway on our territory, that is, Maputo—Boane—Namaacha, are two separate projects, submitted to the SADCC separately by each of the countries but they are intrinsically linked.

The African Development Bank, Sweden, and possibly Norway have expressed interest in participating in this undertaking. It is expected that a joint delegation will arrive shortly in Maputo to discuss aspects relating to financing with the SATDD.

The section in the territory of the Kingdom of Swaziland, from Lomahasha, at our border, to Siteki, is 52 kilometers long. The construction work for a new road on the basis of the currently existing road has been estimated at about $16.5 million and the work is expected to last 3 years.

The repair of the road on the territory of Mozambique, consisting of 75 kilometers, has been estimated at about $7 million and it should take one year to complete.

The increase in the capacity of the port of Maputo is of interest to the various countries in the hinterland because this is their main outlet. That applies to Botswana, Zimbabwe, and other countries, but particularly Swaziland. The overall project presented by Mozambique to increase its capacity consists of three undertakings.

One of them involves deepening the access channels leading to the port to permit vessels with a capacity of 80,000-100,000 tons to get in. Right now, the conditions of the channels do not permit free circulation of vessels with more than 20,000 tons.

According to sources close to the SATCC, Belgium has granted a gift for the drafting of the project through which discussions will be launched regarding project financing. A Belgian delegation is expected to arrive in Maputo during the first week of October with whom the contacts intended to work out the project will be finalized.

Another undertaking to increase the capacity of the port of Maputo-Matola involves its provision with the equipment necessary for the construction of a container terminal. Various countries have already submitted some financing proposals for the acquisition of this equipment.

A third undertaking consists in the construction of a coal terminal at Matola. The work consists in the conversion of the current terminal, enabling it to handle 3.5 million tons of coal annually, with a possibility of increasing this figure by more than 5 million tons if the volume would justify such a step.

A delegation from a British group is currently in Maputo to discuss this third undertaking; a coal purchasing company is included in that delegation. There is also an Austrian group which has expressed interest in this project.

There is vast mineral wealth in Botswana, Swaziland, Zimbabwe, and other countries in the region, especially coal and iron, whose exploitation is only awaiting the creation of port and transportation conditions that would make this operation feasible. Swaziland, for example, expects within 3 years to be exporting about 2 million tons of coal per year.

Overall, the undertakings necessary to increase the capacity of the port of Maputo-Matola have been budgeted at $183.3 million, 85 percent of which will be in foreign exchange. The development of the projects will extend for about 4 years.

In addition to these projects which are of particular common interest to Mozambique and Swaziland, some other undertakings, presented by the government of that neighboring country, at SADCC-2, have also been the subject of contacts with the Transportation Commission.

IRRIGATION PLANS FOR SOFALA, ZAMBEZIA, TETE; BEIRA DRAINAGE PROJECT

Lower Zambeze Irrigation Project

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Fermino Rafael]

[Text] A planning study is in progress for the Lower Zambeze region, more precisely, Marromeu, Mopeia, Caia, Mutarara and Morrumbala, to select a total area of 210,000 hectares for irrigation.

The full study for the systemization of the hydrographic resources of the Lower Zambeze should be delivered by the end of this year.

Covering Sofala, Zambezia and Tete provinces, the systemization project is the responsibility of BUREP (Office of Project Studies), a department of the National Water Directorate.

Marromeu is the largest of the four zones already marked out for inclusion in the irrigation project, taking up an area of 60,000 hectares, followed by Mopeia and Mutarara, with 45,000 hectares apiece, and finally the zones of Caia and Morrumbela, with 30,000 hectares apiece.

The implementation of the Lower Zambeze project will be accelerated with the Cahora Bassa electric power connection 3 years from now. This includes a 220-kv power line from Songo to Caia and a 110-kv line from Caia to Morromeu.

Speaking about the progress to date, Engineer Stoyer, director of BUREP, said there had been problems ever since the project was begun a year ago, because there were no basic topographic surveys of the region.

What is available now is only on a scale of 1/50,000, which is inadequate for major projects. To minimize the problem, the competent agencies have been asked to provide surveys on a scale of 1/20,000--for the preliminary planning--and of 1/5,000 for the definitive projects.

The first phase of systemization of the Lower Zambeze includes basic soil and hydrological studies, which should be concluded by the end of this year.

Following this, in addition to several other extremely important activities, the project to construct a flood control dike will be initiated. According to the first estimates, the dike will be 50 meters wide and about 3 meters deep.

Significance of Project

According to Engineer Stoyov, the systemization of the Lower Zambeze has enormous social significance. For example, in the Marromeu zone, half the irrigated area is to be used to grow cane, and another sugar plant should be installed. The remaining 30,000 hectares will be made available to integrated livestock and agroindustrial complexes and cooperatives. The idea is to make the region one of the poles of socioeconomic development in the country.

The BUREP director feels the possibilities for progress are greater in that the region now has a better show of infrastructures.

Citing some more notable examples, he said: "There are some factories in Caia. There is the bridge crossing the Zambeze River, the power line that passes through the region, the Central-Northeast highway, the Beira Moatize rail line...."

Failure of Drainage Project

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The drainage project for the city of Beira, commonly known as Project IR/2, is virtually doomed to failure. Among the reasons cited for this failure is the lack of awareness among certain members of the City Commission and the Executive Council of the City of Beira assigned to the project, as well as its technical concept, since it was essentially designed on paper.

Project IR/2 is basically aimed at controlling rain water by means of floodgates and, at the same time, adapting marshland for agricultural activities. With its failure, the country stands to lose vast sums of money; almost 50,000 contos obtained from a foreign source have already been spent.

Initiated in 1977, Project IR/2 came about as a result of another project introducing a system of trenches, built by "Tamega," to improve the living conditions of the residents of the capital of Sofala Province, particularly affected by the fact that the city is situated at sea level.

According to Joao Gomes, project director for the Provincial Directorate of Agriculture in Sofala, if the project fails, about 50,000 people who could benefit from sacks of rice will be deprived, not to mention the health hazard which the stagnant water represents for the inhabitants of this urban center.

BRIEFS

CONSTRUCTION STUDENTS IN GDR--Berlin,15 September--At this time, 31 Mozambican youths are being trained in the construction materials industry at the Zehdeninck Brickworks, in northeast Berlin, capital of the GDR. They will be ready to work in construction within 4 years. Starting in June, they have been acquiring knowledge in the scientific and polytechnical fields in the German language. Their ages vary between 18 and 25 and they were first familiarized with the way of life in the GDR, for better school integration. Going to the movies, sports competitions in the hotel, and visits to historical places in the city helped the young Mozambicans fill out their spare time and to feel at home. Tomas Chacata, secretary of the OJM [Mozambique Youth Organization] of the group told the official GDR news agency that his colleagues in the factory and the inhabitants of the city were very nice and helped them get used to the environment. "We already have contact with athletic clubs in the factory and a few of us are already engaging in sports in the clubs. We already feel at home in Zehdeninck," he added. During a solidarity meeting organized by a group of journalists in the neighboring city of Granses, the young students had an opportunity to present some Mozambican musical numbers and cultural aspects to the audience. POWER SUBSTATION PROJECT--Beira (Delegation)--The construction of substations on the north-central electric power line in Tete, Caia, and Mocuba, in the provinces of Sofala, Tete, and Zambezia, respectively, will be started next November. Miscellaneous material has already come in from abroad (Italy and France) for the first phase of line installation. This information was issued by Professor Masi Franco, of SAE, the Italian firm with which Mozambique signed a contract to handle this project. Professor Masi Franco, who is in charge of the assembly of these substations, revealed that, right now, the work on putting in the foundations is in an advanced stage; this is a part of the program to start the entire project. Under the terms of the contracts signed with the supplier enterprise, miscellaneous equipment items, which arrived at Beira, from Italy and France, including 76 "Land Cruiser" cars, 38 "Mercedes Benz," four bulldozers, five cranes, four excavators, and six "Mercedes" trucks, plus logistics material. This entire equipment is in a local warehouse where it is being assembled, after which it will be shipped to the various work sites. The next shipment of equipment destined for the north-central line is scheduled to arrive in Beira during the second half of October on a "roll-on-roll-off" vessel, as planned. The north-central line, which carries energy from Cahora-Bassa to various points throughout the country, was one of the big undertakings of this decade from the viewpoint of, in the future, permitting the rapid development of the agribusiness projects. This grid will actually supply the irrigation projects earmarked for the sugar and textile sectors, plus others considered to be of great importance in the context of the national economy's growth. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Sep 81 p 3] 5058.

USSR FLOATING DOCK REPORTED--Moscow is now strengthening its capability to cut Western oil tanker traffic from the Persian Gulf with the setting up of a naval base at Maputo, Mozambique. For some time Western naval intelligence has been closely studying increasing visits by Russian warships to Maputo, but now a floating dock has arrived there to facilitate underwater repairs to destroyers, frigates and submarines. The dock is in addition to that which the Russians have had for some time in the Dhalek Islands in the Red Sea off Ethiopia and the submarine-refitting pens at Aden. It means the Russians will be able, among other things, to keep warships on more or less permanent patrol along the East African coast. INTERNATIONAL MACHINATIONS FOR CONTROL OF COUNTRY SEEN

'Underworld' Involvement

Windhoeok REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 17 Sep 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] Today or tomorrow, West German and American involvement entailing millions of rand in development projects in Basterland may take final shape during the most delicate of the delicate negotiations involving internal policy. This Gordian knot has already been cut abroad.

In the process, shadowy figures from the American underworld who have pinned their hopes on a SWAPO victory, have now joined the Greeks under the pretext that "they have connections." Their point of departure is that if SWAPO fails to win then the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance should not win either and a third group should walk off with South-West Africa/Namibia.

This revealing information came from breakaways who had gone along with the planners of the NCDM [National Coalition for a Democratic Namibia] and then quit. Some of them say that they really live in fear of "Mafia" retaliation and therefore they refuse to give their names.

Some of these breakaways from the once loose coalition admit that the coalition's aims may have changed quite a bit from the initial London contacts. However, they fail to see how the main targets (the rich resources of the South-West) can ever be relinquished.

The mere fear of such foreign domination over the interests of South-West Africa/Namibia induced most of them to pull out, while only three recognized internal parties (the Liberators of Capt Hans Diergaart, the Liberal Party of A. J. F. Kloppers and the NPPN [National Progressive Party of Namibia] of Johannes Kuraihe) are trying to cling to the alliance.

The lure for recruitment was a sum equal to $128,000.00 and it is a certain "professor" Mburumba Kerina (Getsen), an exile from South-West Africa/Namibia, who wields control over this sum. According to the original agreement each member party would get 6,000.00 rand upon joining.

As the American involvement in the coalition declined, Greece came to realize that SWAPO is a losing horse in the politics of the South-West. A hasty change of procedure was then made in the Greek approach and in the process the rest of the coalition was absorbed by the American one. This led to the involvement of characters such as Jack Summers and George Osserman.

However, Greece is setting the entire country as a precondition, meaning...up to now it has been the biggest stick in the spokes of the coalition to be established, because considering the Liberal Party, the Liberators and the NPPN, these are simply factions of three of South-West Africa/Namibia population groups. But, the politically astute Kerina is coming out with the pretentious claim that he enjoys large and influential Herero support.

The efforts of the founders is also aimed at being able to exercise control over the country's government, being able to have a rather free hand in the gambling houses and actually have a sole voice over minerals (especially diamonds). They also want basic business rights in newly developed towns.

In their meticulous planning, the founders of the NCDN have been carefully observing the moves of the South-West's politicians so as to save money. Thus there have been efforts to make contact with the emissaries of South-West Africa/Namibia in London, New York and Geneva.

This also explains the presence of "professor" Kerina at the conference on the South-West in Geneva.

'Athens Connection'

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 17 Sep 81 p 1, 2

[Article by Des Irasmus]

[Text] Shock and confusion over the realization that SWAPO will never win the armed conflict over South-West Africa/Namibia was one of the motives for the Athens connection in the politics of the South-West. Thus here, from the heart of Greece, the contemplation of controlling the region's diamond fields became one of the main driving motives behind the founding of the National Coalition for a Democratic Namibia.

The very circumspect Capt Hans Diergaart, chief of the Liberators, flatly refused to give an inkling concerning the negotiations at the homefront yesterday, "because that would spoil everything." But he did sketch out some breakthroughs achieved by the Rehoboth government in the two countries involved.

What this involves is the entire agricultural industry of Rehoboth, the conversion of the Tsumis Agricultural College to the level and status of a university, the construction of a gigantic dam and the building of a cement and glass factory.

While Captain Diergaart did not wish to mention a word about the present negotiations, or with whom these are being conducted, he promised to shed light on this in a few days in the course of a press conference of the Rehoboth government.

He described the development help promised by outside countries as a breakthrough for the whole of South-West Africa/Namibia. "Nobody else has yet made so much progress and in the cases of West Germany and the United States both governments were notified before the possibilities assumed greater proportions."

As far as he is concerned, he is satisfied that there is absolutely nothing wanting with the conditions with which the aid will be granted. "This is a healthy basis in every respect."

With respect to West German help, he said that the entire agricultural industry of Rehoboth stands to benefit. He even mentioned the possibility that Tsumis College can be converted into a university. Some of the possibilities mentioned by the West German developers is the dispatching of professors who have been separated from their positions.

In addition, West Germany has promised making available an engineer to the Rehoboth government for the purpose of planning and developing a large dam.

"However, we know our place in South-West Africa/Namibia and we want the project to be undertaken with the consensus of everybody. It is obvious that the help will be granted when the outside countries know that there stands nothing in their way of granting it. If this cannot be attained, such a situation can become a stumbling block."

With respect to American help, Captain Diergaart said that this involves the erection of a cement and glass factory in Basterland and progress in this matter has gone as far as a feasibility study.

According to Captain Diergaart, the same requirements that apply to West German involvement also apply to the Americans.

STRATEGIC STUDIES INSTITUTE CALLS FOR POLITICAL SOLUTION IN NAMIBIA

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 18 Sep 81 p 6

[Text] In a documentary under the title of "Operation Protea" the Institute for Strategic Studies of the University of Pretoria states that a political solution for South-West Africa/Namibia is absolutely necessary and the hope is being expressed that now, after South Africa's incursion in Angola, this will receive more support.

The document reads as follows:

Worldwide international reaction to South Africa's military measures in Angola has tended to leave an important aspect of it in the background and the aspect is the reason why an action on this scale was actually necessary.

It has also tended to ignore the fact that South Africa knowingly took certain political and military risks, not for its sake, but rather for the sake of the security of the inhabitants of South-West Africa/Namibia.

Continuous attacks on the civilians of South-West Africa/Namibia and the injudicious use of landmines makes it clear that SWAPO is basically not involved in a war against the security forces of South-West Africa/Namibia, but in a terrorist campaign against the local population.

The first duty of any government is to take care of the security of the inhabitants of its country.

Weapons

The fact that SWAPO operates from bases in southern Angola makes it necessary that the building up of such bases be prevented.

In a strategic sense, the attack on these bases must be regarded as a combination of preventive and retaliatory action as well as an effort to discourage future terrorist actions of this nature.

The confiscation of terrorist weapons, propaganda material, terrorist plans and documents is a secondary matter.

The installation of missiles and radar for the purpose of preventing attacks on SWAPO bases also necessitates preventive actions.

A situation has arisen much like the one in Lebanon with Israel stating that it cannot condone missile installations intended for the protection of PLO camps in Lebanon and restraining Israel's freedom of action against these camps.

Retaliation

Although the measures of the security forces are not of the "hit and run" type in the strictest sense of the word, it is a part of the legal international system of retaliation and self-defense and more specifically, preventive self-defense.

The requirements for self-defense in this sense of the word includes proportional and quick withdrawal.

The necessity has already been demonstrated. As far as the proportionality is concerned, the fact that the attack on the SWAPO bases was of greater magnitude than the previous attacks is largely due to the promises of military aid to SWAPO by FAPLA and Cuban forces.

South African security forces had to make an effort aimed at fending off interference from those forces because the idea was not to get involved in a regular skirmish.

Aims

South Africa has repeatedly stated that the measures were aimed against SWAPO and not against Angola itself.

The withdrawal of South African and South-West African forces was also begun immediately after the completion of the operation against SWAPO. This has put an end to rumors that South Africa was invading Angola and also the rumors that South Africa is trying to set up a UNITA government in southern Angola.

UNITA's campaign is aimed at the MPLA and that of South Africa against SWAPO. The aims of South Africa and those of UNITA are, therefore, entirely different.

It is very clear that the MPLA-government is very sensitive about the UNITA problem.

Resistance

The fact that the South African security forces can undertake action in Angola at will shows the lack of MPLA control in the south and also illustrates the inability of the MPLA to control UNITA.

It would appear that the MPLA is presenting the argument that UNITA's resistance will fade out as soon as South-West Africa/Namibia becomes independent and especially if there is a SWAPO government in South-West Africa/Namibia.

To a certain degree this explains why the MPLA is supporting SWAPO. It is clear that South Africa is running political and military risks by attacking SWAPO bases in Angola. Above all, political condemnation entails not only implications with respect to a settlement of the South-West Africa question, but also with respect to South Africa's international image.

Determined

The fact that South Africa is willing to run these risks is an indication of the importance being attached to the security of the inhabitants of South-West Africa.

Although it is being emphasized that counterinsurgency is 80 percent political and 20 percent military, military actions are necessary.

Political solutions are not rendered any easier by the decision of the UN General Assembly in accepting SWAPO as the actual and true representative of the people of South-West Africa/Namibia.

The frontline states and the OAU in particular appear to be determined to see a SWAPO government. The question is whether a revolutionary group is entirely interested in an election.

Delay

In connection with this, the guideline of a well-known revolutionary reads: In a revolutionary situation the "joke of an election and the so-called political situation" must be rejected and violence aggravated.

Military action against and by SWAPO cannot, in itself, bring an end to the problem of terrorism and settle the South-West Africa independence question.

However, the longer a political solution is delayed the greater the risk that the military struggle will be aggravated.

Therefore, a political solution is necessary and it is to be hoped that this will receive more support after the recent incursion into Angola, although the short-term result of the incursion could be a hardening of international attitude.

REALISTIC COMMENTS ON DIFFICULTIES CONFRONTING SETTLEMENT

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 18 Sep 81 p 6

[Article by M. Hough of the Political Department of the University of Pretoria: "The SWA Question Cuts Much Deeper"]

[Text] The South-West Africa question has again taken the headlines as a result of two events.

First, the South African military actions against SWAPO bases in Angola has, as could have been expected, evoked sharp international reaction and secondly, South Africa has been denied a speaking turn in a UN debate over this affair.

In a certain sense, the South-West Africa affair has many implications which range further than the fact that a terrorist war is being waged by SWAPO.

In reality the OAU, the UN General Assembly and the "frontline states" have essentially committed themselves to a SWAPO victory in South-West Africa. On top of it all, Angola seems to be reasoning that UNITA will disappear as a movement if there is a SWAPO government in South-West Africa.

This situation, as well as the fact that SWAPO often creates the impression that they are basically not interested in elections, has naturally created suspicions in South Africa regarding the possibility of a free election in South-West Africa. Yet South Africa has committed itself to an internationally acceptable settlement in South-West Africa and the question is how to bring this about.

Before it is possible to obtain an agreement on the practical implementation of an independence election, it is, of course, important that the climate for a settlement exist. The problem in connection with this certainly arises from the continued SWAPO attacks on the civilians of South-West Africa, the United Nations attitude, which makes things more difficult, and the South African attacks on SWAPO bases, which have evoked sharp criticism, even though this is a necessary aspect of counter-insurgency.

In a sense, it is doubtful that a completely favorable climate could ever be created for an independence election. To a degree, this comes down to making the best of a bad situation and under these circumstances make an attempt at finding a satisfactory solution.

To be truthful, it is also possible to have an ideal election situation in a state of revolution: The revolutionary group will often be inclined to prevent an election for as long as possible and often take part in the election under strong pressure; the group will try to maintain its military position of strength by prolonging its warfare as much as possible, even after a cease-fire agreement...as was the case after the Lancaster-House deliberations...and thus the danger of intimidation during the election is great.

Besides creating a favorable climate for an election, there is, therefore, the additional problem of an effective cease-fire and of the overseeing of the election.

But even the situation which could possibly arise after an independence election is a factor. If there is no prior agreement on the guidelines of an independence constitution and the victorious side sets up its own constitution, then, for example, the guarantees for the minority groups could be ignored.

On the other hand, constitutional guarantees are not always an absolute factor and there are many constitutions in Africa which have already been suspended.

There is another question and that is whether a revolutionary group will accept an election defeat and be willing to be allowed to take part in the political process as an opposition party along normal channels. Should a revolutionary party win an election, then the question arises as to what its orientation will be after the election. If such a group has been receiving support from the communist bloc, there will, of course, be pressure on the group to adopt a pro-Russian or a pro-Chinese orientation. Moreover, for the purpose of complying with certain expectations from their supporters, the revolutionaries will be inclined to latch onto socialist solutions for confronting economic problems.

To a large extent, all these factors are thus also related to the situation in South-West Africa. The problem is finding a middle course between what will seem to be conceding to international pressures and terrorist demands and a situation where there is no willingness to settle.

This is, to a certain measure, the essence of the problem. Revolutionaries really have no interest in a peaceful political settlement and it is exactly for this reason that it is so difficult to find the conditions within which a political solution could be reached promptly.

However, this must continue to be the objective, because the alternative is a military "solution" which on the long run could hardly be a real solution.

COMMENTARIES ON INDEPENDENCE, COUNTRY'S STATUS

Progress Toward Independence

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 14 Sep 81 p 7

[Editorial: "Great Strides Ahead"]

[Text] Each of the South-West's administrators general have, in a very special way managed and helped a particular phase of the South-West's becoming a self-governing state.

Judge M. T. Steyn came here to establish the administrator general's authority and led the country through the first general election to the point where today's Constitutional Assembly can convert its wishes into law and practice via the administrator general.

Dr Gerrit Viljoen, in turn, came to grapple with the constitutional machinery and, in Proclamation AG-8, establish a workable constitution for an interim order of things against the background of both the Turnhalle deliberations and the developments which followed them. As a result of this, the paperwork for the government system was tabled. One of the logical outcomes from this was that the Ministerial Council could be ordained with the result that the country took a great step forward on the way to self-government.

Then it was Danie Hough, the present administrator general, who took over. Proclamation AG-8 had to be brought to its realization.

Among the things necessary for this was the holding of elections for representative authorities. This has been accomplished. Now, along with the central government, it has been possible to bring about the appropriate functioning of the second level authority machinery.

Also, finally the point has been reached where the central government can be provided with all the powers it needs to be able to conduct complete home rule.

This step has been taken in a calm and peaceful manner after the ship of state had to go through stormy waters in the course of past years. Therefore, the step which has been taken is by no means a small one. In a certain sense this is the prudent fulfillment of a long process.

From here on the South-West will be governing itself, with the administrator general in the position of chief of state and, as far as this function is concerned, it too has entered a new phase...inevitably the last step before independence.

The fact that from now on we will be holding the reins of the executive authority entails simultaneously several achievements of dignity the most important of which are:

1. South Africa and its administrator general in the South-West have shown, visibly and by experience, that there are no South African desires for forcing the South African stamp of approval on the South-West's internal decisions.

2. South Africa and the administrator general (its proxy) retain authority only over those matters concerning which, because of their international character, the South-West may not at this time have any decisionmaking rights, namely, managing foreign affairs and making constitutional amendments.

With respect to the country's security it is obvious that the South-West's government cannot accept authority over the South African forces and, moreover, that the South-West's security is the responsibility of South Africa. This speaks clearly of South Africa's honesty, even vis-a-vis the outside world, in its declared policy of attaining a settlement through negotiations.

From now on those who want to talk to the real South-West will be fools for not wanting to talk with the government of the South-West. The story that this government is not being recognized because the election through which its members were appointed is not being recognized by the international community, simply does not hold up... since, for example, Angola's MPLA-government is being recognized while no elections of any kind have been held there!

3. Within the South-West it will have to be clear to our population that from now on our Ministerial Council is our day-to-day government with respect to all government matters pertaining to first level government.

It is against this background that we will now continue to move forward on the road to responsible government, self-determination and independence.

In Defense of Country's Status

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 15 Sep 81 p 6

[Editorial: "The Truth About Relationship"]

[Text] The South-West's relationship to South Africa continues to turn up in the international struggle in which this region has been placed.

We who have been born and bred into this relationship realize only too well that this is no simple and uncomplicated relationship.

Many South-Westerners are bound to South Africa through bonds of blood, culture and history, but in no way does this apply only to a large group of the South-West's whites. Many of the coloreds also fall under this category; there are also the Tswanas whose cultural world extends from the eastern region of the South-West, through Botswana, to deep into the Transvaal and other South African regions and there are the Basters whose historical past goes back to the old Cape Colony.

Incidentally, for the sake of presenting the entire picture, mention must also be made of the fact that there are other population groups of the South-West who have special ties with other nations of southern Africa. Thus the Hereros have a large number of national comrades living in Botswana since the early part of this century. One hundred kilometers from there the Kunene River cuts through the Owahimbas (these are also Hereros) who are dispersed through Kaokoland and South-West Angola and moreover there is the border between Ovamoland and Angola which, like a sort of Berlin Wall, cuts across a people...and a great segment of it.

These sorts of ties between people and family groups and between subsections of nations belong to another field than the one with which international bystanders might try to tamper.

Consequently, economically and strategically, the South-West is most closely (and obviously) bound to its strong neighbor to the south.

But the South-West and South Africa are strongly allied even from an outlook of life point of view: They want to be democracies, they want a Christian input in their government, they stand for free trade, they are unconditionally anticommunist and they want to see southern Africa grow in prosperity. Their ties are healthy and defensible.

But the foregoing is one side of the story. The other side appears different. How often are charges like the following being made?

"Your leaders are puppets of the South African government."

"Your leaders are more interested in the well-being of South Africa than that of South-West Africa."

"The Turnhalle ideals and their adaptations thereafter are South African inventions."

"The system you advocate is an extension of apartheid."

"Your ties to South Africa make it impossible to defend you abroad; you render us powerless; you are making fools of the Western countries."

...and so on and so forth.

How must we defend ourselves against these charges?...and defense is necessary for the sake of ourselves, for the sake of South Africa and for the sake of the Western World.

Our leaders are no puppets, no handymen and no agents. The motto of our leaders is "South-West first!" Our new order in the South-West is no clever South African ploy to have apartheid go on under a new aspect; moreover, it was never conceived by South Africa, but strictly by us and only by our leaders during the lengthy Turnhalle deliberations.

As far as policy and practice are concerned South Africa and the South-West are each following their own independent road.

It is necessary to set forth the truth in an impartial manner for the sake of South Africa which has given this freedom of action to the South-West in good faith, for the sake of our honest intentions for building a special and unique order in the South-West, and for the sake of a general clarification of the variegated relations which fluctuate from points of conformity and agreement to points of divergency and difference.

This is because all the games would not be worth the candle if the South-West's independence were necessarily to be interpreted as a local arrangement for officiousness to South Africa, and they would be worth just as little as the good which could portent for South-West Africa in either a cold or a hot war against South Africa.

HOUSING OF SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN SOUTH-WEST HOUSE DISCUSSED

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 14 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] Consideration is being given to setting up office spaces in the same premises where the South-West House is now located and the plan is to turn the entire complex into a South African embassy in South-West Africa/Namibia once independence is achieved.

John Viall, the chief director of the Office of the Administrator General, told the REPUBLIKEIN that this matter is still under study and this is being done in consultation with South Africa.

Under normal circumstances, the residence of the ambassador is usually in other premises than the embassy, but there are countries in which both are housed in the same premises. As far as security is concerned this is achieved easier when the two are located in the same premise.

Last week, as the representative of South Africa, the administrator general took up residence in the South-West Africa House and will reside there until independence. South Africa has bought these premises. On a previous occasion South Africa also bought the Berg Hotel complex where the offices of the administrator general are now located.

It was originally believed that this complex would become the embassy's complex after independence. It is possible that South Africa will now sell the Berg Hotel complex back to South-West Africa/Namibia.

According to a statement by Attorney Viall there is already an agreement in principle between South AFrica and the White Representative Authority concerning the South-West House.

If South Africa now sells the Berg Hotel complex, at least a dozen offices will be needed for the personnel of the administrator general.

MINISTER GIVES DETAILS OF FISCAL YEAR 1982 BUDGET

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 23 Sep 81 pp 3, 4

[Excerpts] The budget for the fiscal year 1982 is 93,853,819,000 francs and includes an endowment for the general budget from the National Investment Fund of 29 billion francs. There has been an increase of 13,229,344 francs, or 16.41 percent, over the original 1981 budget. The annex budget for the export of public works material has been set at 1,999,462,000 francs.

We must remember that this budget has been adopted at a time of falling uranium prices, on the one hand, and high interest rates and a strong dollar on the other. A priori, it seems surprising that such an increase was approved, given the often mentioned difficulties of the present economic situation.

The explanation is as follows:

1. Debt-servicing has risen by 8 billion;

2. The remaining 5 billion increase reflects operating costs which cannot be cut. Given the present economic climate, the steps adopted by the government in deciding on these figures are mainly meant to contain operating costs. To justify the increase in the budget, we must tell the citizens of Niger that we cannot afford to halt the implementation of certain projects in the sectors of Schools, Health, Rural Development, and Hydraulic Engineering.

For this reason, so as to ensure continuity in these projects, the State of Niger has received a subsidy from a friendly Arab country.

Let us see how the amount mentioned at the beginning of this article was arrived at.

Revenue Forecasting

I must inform the public that fiscal measures have been adapted to implement certain recommendations of the fiscal reform commission. These measures are designed to simplify trends in real estate taxes by deducting a number of taxes while maintaining tax revenues at their present level. Two taxes have been dropped: that on net income from properties built at a rate of 5 percent and the tax on the rental value of professional premises at a 2.5 percent rate.

At the same time, the real estate tax of properties already built goes from 20 to 25 percent and professional licenses duties are raised from 10 to 12.5 percent. These two increases offset the elimination of the two above-mentioned taxes.

In the case of licenses it was a spirit of equity and yield that prevailed. These duties have not changed in 10 years, nor have the limits in this field. Turnover: we should perhaps recall that these are state taxes turned over to local communities. Among the new provisions we should also stress those regarding insurance companies formed as corporations with capital, which are authorized to deduct 35 percent of their credits acquired but not collected. It is a question of adapting practice to legislation.

Having reviewed the main features of the fiscal measures adopted, let us consider the State's resources in 1982. The following division of receipts is expected (in francs):

--Fiscal receipts: 61.552 billion, or 65.5 percent of the budget;

--Miscellaneous products: 10,812,341,000, or 11.5 percent of the budget;

--Exceptional resources: 21,489,478,000, or 23 percent of the budget.

Tax revenues are still the State's chief source of revenue this year. Nevertheless there is an increase of 3.47 percent this time, whereas in 1981 the increase was only 0.5 percent. If we analyze the details of tax receipts according to the nature of the tax concerned, we note that direct taxes have gone from 15.375 billion francs in 1981 to 12.58 billion in 1982, with a decrease of 2.795 billion francs. Indirect taxes go from 15,930,249,000 francs to 16.97 billion francs, with an increase of 1,039,751,000 francs. Customs receipts go from 25,029,696,000 francs to 28.15 billion francs, with an increase of 3,120,304,000 francs. Registry fees go from 3.135 billion to 3.835 billion, an increase of 700 million francs.

This can be explained as follows:

The decrease in direct taxes is mainly the result of taxes on industrial or trade profits. Mining companies do not expect profits, so their taxes, which were 4.2 billion under this heading in 1981, will be missing in 1982. Nevertheless, this drop is offset by measures regarding the yield from existing taxes, including the tax on salaries and wages, the general income tax, the rental tax and the apprenticeship tax. Indirect taxes increase mainly because of the turnover tax. The increase in customs receipts is a result of inflation and seems perfectly feasible. As for registry fees, this is all part of registry fee receipts. We should point out the drop in the tax on real estate income, which is above all a result of the failure of mining companies to distribute dividends.

Let us return to miscellaneous budget items. They drop by 43.58 percent. In 1981 they benefited from a 5.25 billion contribution from the uranium reserve fund, and from the extraordinary revenue of 8.5 billion francs. In 1982 there is no remaining entry from the reserve fund. We should also note the decrease in the income from real estate belonging to the State; the main part of dividends comes from the exploitation of uranium mines.

We must now consider forecasts for expenditures. The amount of expenditures foreseen is naturally the same as total receipts. I wish to point out that the measures adopted by the government to arrive at the amount for expenditures are very old. Unavoidable expenditures have been basically retained, given the growth in the public debt. Operating expenses are practically extended, the State has not planned on recruiting more auxiliary personnel, and will only hire staff already planned for.

The overall picture of expenditures is as follows, in francs:

--The public debt: 16,641, 455,000, or 17.73 percent of the total budget.

--government: 465,890,000, or 0.5 percent of the total budget;

--Means of services: 37,286, 210,100, or 39.73 percent of the total budget;

There is therefore an increase in public aid and a decrease in public interventions. The analysis of various expenditures will make it possible to identify the reasons for certain differences between 1981 and 1982 more easily.

Thus the public debt has gone from 8,738,512,000 to 16,641,455,000, an increase of 7,902,943,000 francs. Public works has gone from 438,775,000 to 465,890,000, an increase of 27,115,000 francs.

Services have gone from 32,326,281,000 to 37,286,210, an increase of 4,959,929,000 francs. Public interventions have gone from 39,120,907,000 to 39,460,264 thousand, an increase of 339,357,000.

The products of the government and public interventions have hardly varied. The products of public aide have increased by 7,902,943,000, and those of services by 4,959,929,000 francs.

The increase in the public debt is an accentuation of a trend already noted in the past, and reflects the simultaneous presence of two factors, namely important deadlines and the rise in the dollar and high interest rates.

An analysis of projected expenditures according to their nature gives the following results:

--Personnel for 1981: 19,127,986,000;

--1982: 23,064,541,000;

--Material: 8,855,075,000 in 1981; 10,333,344,000 in 1982;

--Transportation: 3,576,424,000 in 1981; 3,616,435,000 in 1982;

--Housing: 732,780,000 in 1981; 737,280,000 in 1982.

The increase in personnel credits is large. There are many reasons for this. For the credit of material, the only increases are for the ministries of National Education, Health, National Defense, the Interior, and Rural Development, as well as the grants division of the Planning Ministry. These measures prove, if there is any need for proof, the government's wish to follow an even stricter austerity policy than in the past.

Stability is relative, public interventions can be explained by the retention of 26 billion of the allocation of the National Investment Fund. Nevertheless, credits for training, grants for intermediate training, increase by 75 million francs.

FORECAST OF ROLLING MILL PRODUCTION NOTED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 Sep 81 p 16

[Article by Sehinde Dagunduro]

[Text]

OSHOGBO Rolling Mill is to turn out an initial figure of 210,000 tonnes of rolled products (reinforced steel) annually when it swings into full production next year.

The production is to be carried out by two main shifts of workers and supplied billets of 120 millimetres square by 12 metres would be used as inputs.

These production arrangements were revealed to the New Nigerian by the project manager of the Oshogbo plant Dr. R.O. Animashaun last Monday.

He said when the phase two extension of the plant was put into operation, its annual output would rise to 420,000 tonnes while the third phase would increase the annual production further to 720,000 tonnes.

Dr. Animashaun said all products, rolled out from the plant would be used mainly for wires and bars.

Approximately 57,000 tonnes out of the initial output of 210,000 tonnes which is provided for the production of coils.

The balance of 143,000 tonnes he said, would be used to produce bars, he added.

He said, work on the construction of the plant was moving according to plan adding that apart from commissioning of the base plates for some of the rolling stands, the laboratory for quality control of connected products had [illegible] stage.

Dr. Animashaun said the gate house [illegible] where the incoming billets and the going products would be monitored had been completed to a level of 50 per cent and the work done so far on the ancillary building and other related civil works had gone above 75 per cent.

According to the project co-ordinator, the erection of the steel column, trusses, tiders roof and wall sheetings had been completed in all the main production units while erection and installation work had been completed on five cranes to handle billets.

KANO LEGISLATORS PASS BILL PROVIDING THEMSELVES IMMUNITY

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 25 Sep 81 pp 1, 4

[Article by Abdulhamid Babatunde]

[Text]

A BILL recently passed by the Kano State House of Assembly on the immunity of legislators from police summons is now the subject of controversy in police circles in the state.

Known as the Legislative House (Powers and Privileges) Revival Bill 1981, it provides that a legislator in the state Assembly could only be summoned by the police after clearance from the Speaker had been obtained. The bill is, however, awaiting the governor's assent.

A top police source told the New Nigerian in Kano that a recent occasion when police had to invited a legislator from the Assembly to answer questions in connection with an alleged attempt to swindle two intending pilgrims was almost thwarted by arguments based on the bill.

The two intending pilgrims had complained to the police that they had paid their fares to the legislator who promised to arrange for their pilgrimage.

However, as the airlift progressed, it became clear that the intending pilgrims had backed a wrong horse as they never even got passports.

The police source said that a legislative spokesman even offered to refund the pilgrims their fares rather than concede that the bill could not restrict police from carrying out their duties regarding the matter.

The source also explained that section 122 of the criminal procedure code empowered the police to invite anyone within its districts to come to the police station to answer questions if the need arose.

The source could not understand the basis of the immunity bill since section 267(3) of the constitution had clearly spelt out those entitled to such immunity comprising the president, the vice-president, governors and deputy governors.

Meanwhile, a New Nigerian investigation has shown that so far seven members of the Kano State House of Assembly have been invited by the police on a variety of cases two of which have gone to court.

Observers in Kano believe that the immunity bill passed by the state Assembly is not unconnected with the increasing tendency of the legislators to attract police attention.

CONCERN OVER YAM PRODUCTION EXPRESSED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 28 Sep 81 p 26

[Text] Authorities of the Federal government-owned National Root Crops Research Institute (NRCR) at Umudike, near Umuahia, in Imo State, have expressed concern over the declining yam production in the country.

They have warned that unless Nigerian farmers could show enough interest in yam production, a time would come when yam would no longer be within the reach of the poor.

In a bulletin issued out from the institution titled: "Yam research, a foundation for Green Revolution" the researchers wondered why the farmers in Nigeria could only produce a total of 10 million tonnes of yams yearly.

The researchers however observed that, apart from the lack of interest in the production of yam by farmers, yam production had failed to catch up with food crops because "planting materials are insufficient and scarce." Labour cost of production is high." "Diseases and pests damage crops, both in field and storage." "Storage losses are high."

The bulletin further indicated that the institute was making the serious efforts in educating Nigerian farmers on modern methods of yam production. The authorities of the institute have therefore appealed to the various state ministries of agriculture, to assist the institute, by ensuring that farmers in the rural area were informed of the modern methods of yam production as designed by the institute.

The bulletin emphasised that "researches on yam at the National Root Crops Research Institute formed the base for the successful implementation of the Green Revolution programme, this would bridge the gap between the supply and demand for yam and also to save yam-based industries in Nigeria from closing up.

RICE PRODUCTION TO BE ADEQUATE BY NEXT YEAR

[Article by Kola Ojo]

[Text] The Minister of Agriculture, Alhaji Ibrahim Gusau, has predicted that Nigeria would be self-sufficient in rice production by next year.

He made the prediction while opening a four-day national seminar on the "green revolution," at the Ahmadu Bello University's Institute of Education, Zaria.

Alhaji Ibrahim said: "The implementation of our green revolution is now in full swing."

The national programme for boosting rice production took off early this year.

He said that by next year, when all machinery and processing equipment ordered would be functioning fully, rice production would be increased by at least 150,000 tonnes yearly, until self-sufficiency was achieved.

Priority

Alhaji Ibrahim also emphasised that priority attention would be given to the production of maize, cassava and guinea corn.

Programmes for the rehabilitation of major cash crops, especially cotton, cocoa, groundnuts, rubber and oil palm, would also be vigorously pursued, he announced.

Under the groundnut rehabilitation programme, more than N7.5 million had been spent on the purchase of seeds, sprayers, chemicals and other inputs and large plantations have been established.

Twenty-one oil palm processing mills are to be established in strategic places in the oil-palm belt, the minister said. Five of these would be big industrial mills to be located in oil palm estates in Cross River, Bendel, Ondo and Imo states.

Alhaji Ibrahim commended the "vital role" of the river basin development authorities in the successful implementation of the "green revolution" programme.

He also spoke of plans to boost livestock agriculture, saying grazing reserves were being established in Borno, Bauchi, Gongola and Kaduna, states, while ranches were being built or improved in Oyo, Ogun, Ondo, Borno and Bauchi states.

BRIEFS

ANTI-IGBO RIOT IN GBOKO--Many people have been reported killed and property worth thousands of naira destroyed in Gboko, near Otukpo in Benue State. A dusk-to-dawn curfew has been imposed in the town and some squads of the anti-riot policemen drafted to the area to impose peace. The situation is a result of a bloody clash between the Tiv and Igbo inhabitants of Gboko last week. The incident followed a misunderstanding between an Igbo boy and his Tiv colleague in the Gboko market in which the 19-year-old Tiv boy was allegedly stabbed by his erstwhile Igbo friend. The police have arrested 34 people suspected to have taken part in the rampage that followed, while many more are reportedly being looked for. Meanwhile, the state Police Commissioner, Alhaji A. Malumfashi, has warned the general public to be law-abiding. He stressed that any person found after six o'clock in the evening would be arrested. And last Saturday, the Benue State Governor, Mr Aper Aku, expressed his disappointment over the incident. The governor who addressed the entire Gboko community appealed to the warring parties to uphold law and order and eschew bitterness. It is suspected that both the Igbo and Tiv boys who started it all perished in the event. It is also understood that many Igbo inhabitants of the area are fleeing in town for their homes in Anambra State, and commercial activities in the area are already paralysed. SENATORS UNHAPPY OVER ABUJA--Senators unanimously voted on Tuesday night in favour of a motion asking President Shehu Shagari to declare 1982 unrealistic for the movement of the seat of government to Abuja. Of the 11 senators that debated the motion none felt happy with the progress so far made in the new Federal capital. Before the decision was taken, the Senate leader, Dr Olusola Saraki, had presented the report of the Senate Committee that visited Abuja on September 4. He told the Senate that the committee felt disappointed over what it saw at Abuja. Senator Saraki blamed the slow pace of work there on the civil servants and ministries whom, he said, never knew of the sufferings of Federal legislators over lack of offices to work. He told the Senate: "People say we shall move to Abuja in 1982 or 1983. But to my mind, we have a long way to go." It was his opinion that the job of building the National Assembly at Abuja should be taken away from the hands of the Federal Capital Development Authority. PAUL VERGES' SPEECH REVIEWS CHANGES UNDER MITTERRAND GOVERNMENT

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 10, 11, 12-13 Sep 81

[Passages enclosed in slantlines printed in italics]

[10 Sep 81 p 3]

[Text] Paul Verges' speech last Sunday at Riviere Saint-Louis was of epochal importance. At this important juncture of our history the secretary general of the PCR [Reunionese Communist Party] sketched out clearly the path to be followed if we are to succeed in bringing change to the country. All communists, progressive people, and citizens of Reunion in general love their country, and if they study this path and immerse themselves deeply in it, with the determination to follow it, they will know just what to do. This is why we thought it useful to publish lengthy extracts from Paul Verges' speech in TEMOIGNAGES. Our readers will find it very interesting.

In the first part of the speech, which we are publishing today, Paul Verges analyzes the situation in our country 4 months after the victory of 10 May. From this analysis emerges the line of struggle to be carried out to bring change to Reunion.

Four months ago Giscard was beaten, and the candidate of the Left was elected president of the republic. Two and one-half months ago the Left won an overwhelming majority in the Ntional Assembly.

The leftist government in Fance has already taken a number of important measures in this short time. It has already passed the first part of the decentralization legislation. It is presently preparing the nationalization bill. It has taken a number of measures in the field of foreign affairs and shown a firm position on South Africa, a subject which is of special concern to us.

This explains why those in France who voted for the Left sense the beginning of real change; and in all the recent polls the government has the support of a large majority of the public.

Thus, the initial measures taken in France inspired confidence in the president's majority. We think it is a good beginning for the long struggle the leftist government will have to wage to resolve the two most pressing problems in France today: Inflation, on the one hand, and unemployment, on the other.

It is with this aim in mind that the government is presently putting together the 1982 budget, which will be drawn up by the Left, debated by the Left and passed by the Left to implement the Left's policies.

Faith in the Government

All this explains the great faith the people repose in the government. But all the same, the French people have no illusions. They know that rightwing policies over a period of decades have left a disastrous legacy.

When it is announced that there are 1.85 million people unemployed, the French people know that Giscard's policy is alone responsible.

Even after his 10 May defeat.

When inflation continues, they know that this too is the legacy of the Right. When that inflation climbs to more than 14 percent per year, they know that all this has been caused by the Right.

The people of France understand that the heavy legacy of decades of rightwing policies cannot be liquidated in only 4 months. This is why they believe in the government in the leftist majority, which are in the process of establishing the governing structures for decades to come.

A Serious Situation

What is the situation on Reunion?

We have struggled for more than 35 years against a colonial-type policy.

The record of these 35 years of rightwing policy includes, first of all, the ruin of our agriculture. Those still cultivating cane, geraniums, vetivers and vanilla know they are living on borrowed time, and their livelihood is threatened by inflation in the cost of fertilizers, herbicides and transport and by increases in social costs. Now prices for agricultural products are not going up at the same rate.

The record is also one of disastrous unemployment among the workers, and this hits young people hardest. There are 84,000 people of working age who cannot find work. Some 37,000 of them are members of ANPE [expansion unknown].

We are also familiar with the problems of the working classes. The majority of workers have been ruined. Farmers and workers are often driven to irregular means to survive, for if they had not done so they would long ago have disappeared. We must tell the truth about the desperate plight to which the rightwing government has reduced the farmers, the workers, etc.

The current situation is a serious one for workers, farmers, the jobless and young people without work. The less work available, the more welfare required to alleviate things, and social inequalities are then exacerbated.

In a country as small as ours--a country of 500,000 inhabitants--we see social injustice growing rapidly. The jobless, the small farmers, the agricultural day-laborers, left far behind, become poorer and poorer; while the others, the minority, continue to enrigh themselves.

This, then, is the legacy of the rightwing policy, and it is 10 times as bleak as the one left in France. This explains why, if Reunion has been bequeathed 10 times the problems, it has also been 10 times as hopeful since 10 May.

It is enough to recall the demonstrations which took place the very night of 10 May, and on the next day, 11 May, and on the folowing days. The people of our country greeted the 14 and 21 June elections with the same sense of hope.

It is true that Giscard's bureaucracy, with its ingrained habits, was left in place. It is true that fraud has continued.

But worse yet is the attitude of the candidates and leaders of the Socialist Federation; even though we, despite our known differences with them, played loyally for the leftist team, in the face of the Right and the bureaucracy. We never attacked the socialist candidates, and our candidate withdrew in favor of the socialist candidate in the third electoral district.

Well, we have seen the candidates and leaders of the Socialist Federation oppose us in the first round, and even in the second round to play for the rightwing team.

The result is that on Reunion two of our present deputies--Michel Debre and Jean Fontaine--are among the worst of reactionaries.

And the Right continues to repeat that the socialist candidate was only elected thanks to the open support of the Right.

We say this not to engage in sterile polemics but because these are the deplorable facts, facts which still remain in everyone's memory. And we must learn our lessons from that.

Hope and Disappointment in Equal Measure

What have been the practical effects of the events of June 1981?

The Right, which was so frightened of what would happen after 10 May, regained confidence after the legislative elections, since it salvaged the two most reactionary deputies and thinks it can lean heavily on the socialist deputy.

Starting from there, we have seen how the Right has tried to profit from the difficult situation faced by the cane growers and maneuver them into opposing the government.

We have also seen how the big trading firms immediately increased their prices, how businesses are continuing to try to lay people off, while the workers are in the process of fighting against the measures the Right is trying to impose with the establishment of the Reunion Regional Mutual Fund.

Disappointment among the workers is now being felt as keenly as the hope that inspired them in the aftermath of 10 May. They are asking questions.

"So where is the change?"

"Where is Reunion headed?"

"Are we going to continue long to put up with the consequences of the rightwing policy, or are the changes in France at last going to be felt here on Reunion, too?"

Every worker, indeed every citizen of Reunion is asking these far-reaching questions.

In France, the workers and the general public can perhaps understand the fact that the legacy of Giscard cannot be rectified in only 4 months, because change has already begun, and the government is opening up prospects for the future.

Be Ready

The workers on Reunion could likewise have understood--and still can--the fact that the legacy of 35 years of rightwing policies--with consequences such as unemployment, the problems faced by farmers, the hopeless position of young people, inflation, etc.--could not be effaced in just a few months or even a few years; but it would have been much easier if the workers of Reunion were certain that the political victory of 10 May meant the beginning of change in price and income policies.

But the political victory of the Left in France was not accompanied by an equally stunning victory on Reunion last June, even though the conditions for achieving such a victory existed.

Once again, it is not a question of indulging in polemics, but today we see the consequences of that situation in all the ills the people of Reunion are suffering.

The experience of these last few months shows clearly to all of us, both those on the Right and those on the Left, that if we communists and socialists had been united everywhere, if we had stood together, today we would have at least two leftist deputies, one of whom would be a communist.

That would have created real faith that things are going to change.

Instead, even though Bertile was elected, the people's will was thwarted in the victory of Debre and Fontaine, and this has eroded the confidence needed for things to change.

This is why we must attach great importance to the possibility of voiding the results of the election in the second electoral district. We should be ready for that contingency in the months, or even weeks, to come.

[11 Sep 81 p 3]

[Text] We must rely on ourselves, on our own struggle. In recent weeks the workers have shown the way. Through strikes and demonstrations, and thanks to the policy followed by CGPER [General Confederation of Planters and Livestock Raisers], SEAR, and the former CDJA [expansions unknown], the growers have stood up against demogoguery and the determined policy of revenge of Virapoulle and Fedecanne, and have been able to establish a dialogue with the government. This positive path is also open to the other classes of farmers.

Broaden the Battle Front

The workers, answering the call of the CGTR [General Confederation of Labor of Reunion], have also shown the way with their big strike of 21 August. They said that there must be an end to the excessive inflation and rightist maneuvers against the government, and that real change must begin. We must widen the struggle, broaden the battle front against the Right. This is our task, now and in the days to come, in alliance with the leftist forces in France, supporting the government and its policy.

Important Political Crossroads

But there are also some important political crossroads to be faced. In the next few days, in this very month, September, the government is to lay down the principles of regional reform as they affect the overseas departments.

In order to unite our people, in order to unite the Left, we said following 10 May tht we considered the Defferre bill that was introduced in the previous legislature an acceptable framework, along with the regional reform proposed today by the government. We also have a precedent: The government's proposed legislation on Corsica.

We think tht the "overseas departments" (DOM's) should be reformed quickly, and that this reform should be modeled both on the regional reform to be implemented in France, and above all on what is done in Crosica and on the provision of the Defferre bill, introduced in the preceding legislature, which takes into account regional differences, underdevlopment, etc....

The reform should be implemented rapidly both in our own country and in Corsica, even before implementation of regional reform in France, if need be.

So we are asking for the passage of this bill during the upcoming session of the National Assembly; we do not want the March 1982 elections to serve merely to reinvigorate the current reactionary general council.

The issue then will be the establishment of our country's departmental council through elections conducted on the basis of proportional representation.

Against Cutting Reunion in Two

We must defeat the efforts of reactionaries who want to cut Reunion in two and create two departments.

In that connection, Corsica's example is instructive, as is the so-called solution to that island's problems. Corsica (8,722 km^2) is three and one-half times as big as Reunion (2,500 km^2): The number of civil servants would be increased, while the number of farmers and workers would decline.

LE JOURNAL DE L'ILE DE LA REUNION has given the Right's view on this subject: It said that though the idea is "stupid" it should be revived; for the existence of two general councils, which it hopes would be controlled by the Right, would neutralize the regional council, where the Left has every chance of being in the majority.

One Proportionally Representative Assembly

We say that we must defeat this reactionary effort. What we want here is one sole assembly based on proportional representation. The Left can and must win that election.

Things must be done quickly if the Left is going to win the departmental council elections and pave the way for a great victory in the municipal elections a year and one-half away. For here again the Left should carry the majority of municipal councils in the region.

All this will depend to a great extent on the attitude of the leadership of the Socialist Federation.

As soon as 10 May was behind us, we proposed to them that we close ranks to oppose the Right. They preferred to make their peace with the latter, in opposition to Leftist unity. We see the results of that today.

But we have renewed our offer to the Socialist leaders. Soon there may be elections in the second electoral district, and more elections to the departmental council six months from now. Finally, a year and one-half away, are the municipal elections. It is essential for us to meet, discuss, and reach agreement on opposing the Right everywhere in our country.

Leftist Unity For the Sake of Change

The Socialist Federation leaders must be responsive both to the hope and to the will of the people of Reunion to bring change to our country at last.

We must learn the lesson of the elections of 14 and 21 June, in which Debre and Fontaine were able to hold onto their seats.

At this juncture we must recognize and reiterate that many socialists in various communities, who had campaigned for their own candidate in the first round, did the honorable thing in the second round by campaigning at our side against the Right.

A longer-term alliance between communists and socialists is absolutely necessary.

On the basis of that alliance, we will be able to widen the leftist front and bring into it entire classes of people who still do not dare to enter active political life: Democrats, decent people, all those who want development, democracy and freedom on Reunion. Today they represent the great majority of the people of Reunion.

Alliance is Indispensable to the Struggle

This alliance is indispensable to the struggle. Change on Reunion, therefore, is going to depend on the people of Reunion themselves. This change should be reflected immediately in the FR3 news. There can be no democracy without pluralist news media. In other words, there must be an end to the rightwing bias of FR3.

Everyone, including the Left, should be able to express his opinions on FR3, and the voice of the Left should carry as much weight there as it does in the country, so the people of Reunion get equal treatment.

Understand the Gravity of the Economic and Social Situation

We must look far beyond the political alliance of the Left. We must understand the gravity of the economic and social predicament of our country.

FR3, the press and the rightwingers have done everything possible to mask this reality and anesthetize the sense of urgency felt by the people of Reunion.

Now in reality our country is in a catastrophic predicament. There are 84,000 people of working age who cannot find work. The farmer is in a difficult spot and may be ruined at any moment. The workers are never sure from one day to the next whether the business that employs them will shut down. The young people are uncertain about their future. Never has our country been in such a serious situation.

Dialogue

It is because of this that, in addition to the political alliance, we are calling for a discussion, a dialogue, between the heads of all the economic sectors of Reunion. We must have meetings and discussions between the unions of agricultural day laborers and the growers' associations, between the trade unions and the employers' federation.

There must be dialogue with all sectors of the working class.

We must restore our country's health, bring the economic sectors back in balance and give highest priority to production, that is to agriculture, and then to industry.

Reduce Social Inequalities

Social inequalities must be reduced.

It is inconceivable for a farmer to be part of that 98 percent of cane growers on Reunion who work all their lives but never attain a net monthly income equal to the interoccupational minimum growth wage.

It is inconceivable for a worker to start off earning less than the interoccupational minimum growth wage and at the end of his life be earning barely more than that.

It is inconveivable for those who are the producers of wealth to live in such want.

It is unacceptable for the average real wage of workers in the private sector, or the average real income of farmers, to be three or four times less than the minimum salary in the civil service.

While the mass of workers in the private sector are suffering such tribulations, a number of executives here are making more than people in France in positions of equivalent responsibility. That should no longer be tolerated.

At all costs we must restore the worker--whether he be a farmer or a laborer--to his pre-eminent place in Reunion society.

[12-13 Sep 81 p 3]

[Text] To Bring the Economic Sectors Back in Balance

While it is important to make steady progress toward narrowing the gap between benefits in the public and private sectors, it is equally necessary to make sure that the wages and real income of day laborers, workmen and farmers do not amount to less than the value of certain welfare benefits.

It was entirely correct for old-age pensions and assistance to handicapped adults in our country to be increased. But if we look at realtive annual income, we see that the majority of workers and growers today earn much less per year than the elderly on pensions.

When some welfare benefits are seen to equal and even exceed ordinary salary levels, how is our country to develop?

When someone who works for a living in reality earns less than someone on welfare, how is development possible?

We must correct the injustice of inequality between incomes in the productive sector and incomes in the service sector. Until we have done that, it is useless to talk about Reunion's development. Reduction of social inequalities is the prerequisite to any real development in our country, to any restoration of balance among the various economic sectors.

Defend the Poorest

This is why our policy must be to defend the poorest, the most humble.

Solidarity in our country must be translated into action, through social transfers that take from the richest and give to the poorest, and, most importantly, through action to increase production.

Our purpose is not to sacrifice any one sector in order to develop another; we want, rather, to restore balance to the various economic sectors.

The Party of the Presidential Majority

In addition, our party should assume its rightful position as a member of the presidential majority, the government coalition.

It is absolutely essential for us to shoulder our own overwhelming responsibilities.

But also, the government should understand the gravity and the urgency of the situation on Reunion. It must demonstrate with the least possible delay that there is real change.

The people of Reunion are not demanding "everything right now;" they are only demanding that the government at last show the political will to bring change to Reunion.

Immediate Measures

That will to change should be expressed by taking immediate measures to slow down and then halt further deterioration in the situation. The poeple of Reunion must be given reason to have faith in the future.

The interim plan over the next 2 years will really have to demonstrate the resolve to reorient the policy pursued in our country. The development plan will have to lay the basis for solid confidence.

Be Confident, Enterprising and Combative

But that requires first of all that Communists themselves measure up to their responsibilities.

Every supporter, every militant in the ranks must feel that he is a member of a party that takes responsibility, by what is represents, for the whole country, for in the future and for the development of Reunion.

In reality, Communists have never faced responsibilities as demanding as those they face today.

It may be that too many PCR supporters are still holding on to the habits acquired during 35 years of being in the opposition, while today the future is opening up before us.

We must fight against the sectarianism that still prevails here and there in our party.

We are not "old veterans" of the struggle against the colonialists.

Today we are the vanguard of our country's future. We must be confident, enterprising and combative.

Give Up the Welfare Mentality

We have too long denounced the welfare mentality established by preceding governments for us now in turn to become political mendicants waiting for change to come solely from the French Government.

It is up to us to take the initiative for change on Reunion, rather than wait for it to come from 10,000 km away.

No New Sarda

It was more than 130 years ago that Sarda Garriga came from France to free the slaves of Reunion. It was a great moment in the alliance between the people of France and the people of Reunion.

Today, 130 years later, we do not have to wait for the arrival of a new Sarda Garriga. It is up to us to free ourselves right here from the colonial structures that a[illegible] a burden to our country.

Every part militant, every supporter and above all every official should feel himself personally responsible in the battles to be fought.

Take Responsibility; Calling Oneself a Revolutionary Is Not Enough

We communists, because of our 35 years of struggle, have behind us dozens of comrades who have been killed, imprisoned, beaten, fired and repressed. This is our lot.

But this lot does not entitle us to be conceited at all.

The problem for communists today is to understand, to articulate and to explain what remains to be done. This is more important than all we have done over the last 35 years.

That means that we must not permit ourselves to be conceited; on the contrary, we should feel that we are the most unpretentious of our country's fighting men.

More than ever we must bear the brunt of the work ourselves, rather than claiming that we Communists are revolutionaries and sitting down to rest on our past struggles. I have heard too much of that, frequently even at high levels.

Our task is not to assert--much less believe--that we are exemplary revolutionaries; we have to show through our actions that we are with the people and that we are struggling tirelessly for the people of Reunion and for the country's development.

An Open Party; Critical Tasks

We must be an open party that welcomes those who want to struggle; we should not take on the appearance of a party of influential people enjoying political pensions for life as officials or leaders.

We must put our faith in the coming change, in the young people, in the workers, in the women. It is with their help that we are going to build the Reunion of tomorrow. We should consider even the "smallest" everyday tasks to be of critical importance: Defending TEMOIGNAGES, improving the newspaper, collecting for subscriptions, getting new ones.

So many militants, so many TEMOIGNAGES readers want change and want to move ahead; but so many, when it comes to paying for their subscriptions or making punctual installment payments, not only fail to stay ahead but actually get further and further behind.

We have 10,000 members in our party. We should be able to transform that 10,000 member force at every level into a conscious force, a force capable of taking action, of advancing and of directing the political battle in our country.

Only by these struggles will we preserve our influence and authority with the masses; the struggles ahead are going to restore our people's faith that in the 10, 20 or 30 years during which the Left will be in power in France it will also be in power on Reunion and take responsibility for the country's future and development.

Prepare for the Future

We must face our present problems squarely, but we must prepare for the future.

We must call on the government--for we have waited long enough--to take action on the price of large consumer goods.

It is outrageous that every week the workers see the price-tags changed and the prices go up.

We must call for an urgent dialogue to resolve the critical problems of the growers, the workmen and the laborers. There must be real change in FR3, and radio and television in a leftist country must be accessible to the Left.

We must prepare ourselves for the possibility of an election in the weeks or months to come.

It is possible that within 6 months regional reform will be a reality, and that the elections of March 1982 will result in the establishment of the departmental council whose governing body and president will be invested with responsibility for the direction of Reunion's affairs. After that victory is won, we must also prepare ourselves for victory in March 1983, a year and one-half from now--early 40 years after Verges, Lepervanche, Lucas, Hinglo, Piot and the others who at that time rallied the people and swept the Right away in the mayoral elections all the way from Bras-Panon to Saint-Pierre; and this is now our task over the next 18 months.

Tell the People the Truth

We believe we should always tell the people the truth, and that we must face the fact that real change has not yet come on Reunion.

But while we are strengthened by the situation in France--where the Left is in power not just for a few months but for 15 or 20 years, or even longer--we must rely on our own strength, our own struggles, the struggles of the workers, the growers, men and women (the yough especially) and, finally and most importantly, our communist party, which, with the support of the majority of the people of Reunion, will wage the battle to bring change to our country and to open it up to development and to its destiny.

Four months after the election of Francois Mitterrand, though disappointment here and there is beginning to intensify and people are getting impatient, we must cling not only to our hope but indeed to our faith in the future, born of that victory of 10 May which will be a landmark date not only for France but also for Reunion.

PRESIDENT EXPRESSES BELIEF IN THIRD WORLD COOPERATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Sep 81 p 3

[Interview with President Pinto da Costa by Calane da Silva, Joao de Sousa, and Sol de Carvalho: "Cooperation Between Countries of the Third World More Effective Against Underdevelopment"]

> [Excerpts] "Without casting aside the idea of cooperation with the highly developed countries, we believe in cooperation among the countries of the so-called Third World as an essential factor in overcoming the problem of underdevelopment. These are much more effective cooperation efforts, much more advantageous, and we must speed up this type of cooperation," said the president of Sao Tome and Principe, Pinto da Costa, in an interview on board an aircraft carrying him back to his country. Pinto da Costa has just made an official trip and friendship journey to Mozambique and in his interview he takes up a series of questions dealing with the journey, especially cooperation between the Republic of Sao Tome and Principe and the People's Republic of Mozambique. Here is the text of the interview.

Question: Mr President Pinto da Costa, throughout the conversations which Your Excellency had with the President of the People's Republic of Mozambique, questions of cooperation on the level of each party were certainly taken up. How do you think that they can be developed after your first official visit on the level of the MLSTP [Movement for the Liberation of Sao Tome and Principe]-FRELIMO?

President Pinto da Costa: Cooperation on the MLSTP-FRELIMO party level is already in existence. Of course, through the visit which I have just made, I am absolutely convinced that this cooperation will become even stronger. We are going to have an opportunity to exchange delegations so as to work harder on the various problems which our parties are experiencing, both regarding organization and concerning the political and ideological training effort. This applies particularly to the political and ideological training aspect which we believe to be of extreme importance to the specific attainment which are of concern to our two parties.

We are convinced therefore that this visit will even further open the door to cooperation between our two countries and we believe that, by exchanging delegations, we will learn from each other, we will be able to exchange mutual experiences so as to strengthen our bonds of militancy and solidarity more and more.

Question: Mr President, on what level are the areas of government cooperation between the two countries, Sao Tome and Principe and Mozambique, after the conversations which Your Excellency had in Maputo?

President Pinto da Costa: After the conversations, we had the opportunity of signing a general cooperation agreement. In the context of this general cooperation agreement, we will have the opportunity to sign specific agreements; we will have an opportunity for sending various delegations to Mozambique and Mozambique will be able to send delegations to Sao Tome and Principe so as to follow up on the specific aspects of this cooperation.

During our trip we also had an opportunity to sign an air and maritime transportation agreement and we also had the opportunity to draw up working programs on the cultural and scientific levels, on the level of relationships between the ministries of health, and we believe therefore that this visit was extremely important in terms of promoting further cooperation.

Question: We are sure that the areas of cooperation which Your Excellency has just spelled out and which therefore were the subject of conversations between the two parties and the two governments, will contribute much to the development of the two countries in an effort to put an end to underdevelopment.

President Pinto da Costa: Yes. We are convinced that this is so. We think that cooperation between our two countries is a fundamental factor in our development. We believe even more in cooperation between our countries, between the countries of the so-called Third World, than any other type of cooperation, as an essential factor in enabling us to overcome the problem of underdevelopment. We have experience in this field, we have experience in cooperation on the international level, and we have seen that cooperation which we have with countries that have the same guidelines and the same problems as we--for example, the cooperation we pursue with Algeria--constitute much more effective cooperative efforts, much more advantageous efforts, and therefore we must speed up this type of cooperation between our countries because it, in effect, is one of the essential factors in our development, one of the essential factors in our fight against underdevelopment. This does not mean in any way whatsoever that we are playing down the idea of cooperation with highly developed countries; but it is necessary to modify the concept of this type of cooperation. If this type of cooperation continues to be of a colonial and neocolonial character, a unilateral character involving unilateral advantages, then these are concepts which will not in any way contribute to our development. But I am convinced that, in cooperating among each other, among the so-called Third World countries, we will create conditions for modifying the type of cooperation which exists between us and the highly developed countries.

Question: Mr President, we have learned that, throughout the conversations and among the various representatives making up the high-level delegation which Your Excellency headed, there was the prospect of training cadres from Sao Tome in the People's Republic of Mozambique. Could Your Excellency tell us more on that score?

President Pinto da Costa: Even before the signing of any agreement with the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] we had already begun to develop cooperation along these lines. We have some cadres whom we've sent to to the RPM for training. We have some other cadres on an even higher level in Sao Tome who had an opportunity to study at the Eduardo Mondlane University and we think that, through this visit, we have great prospects of being able to utilize the infrastructure facilities of the RPM, especially in the field of education, to be able to solve one of the big problems of our country which is a problem of cadre shortage. With the signing of this agreement we have an opportunity to train some cadres whom we need, through cooperation with the RPM.

Question: Mr President, we would like to put to you another question relating to the fact that, for example, your visit to the RPM coincided with the summit of the Front Line countries held recently in Lagos. As Your Excellency knows only too well, the main idea at the summit was to move from talk to action. In what way can Sao Tome contribute to the fight against the "Boer" invaders of Angola?

President Pinto da Costa: Of course, Sao Tome and Principe is a little country, with few resources. But we are sure and we think that, in this struggle, which we are currently fighting against South Africa, a little country or a big country, with few resources or big resources, must all make an efficient contribution to enable us to meet the common enemy who is South Africa and who has the support of the imperialist countries. Within the context of our country's possibilities, we will study the possibilities we have available to us in order effectively to help the Angolan people fight against the aggression of South Africa. We believe that the moment has come for action and we must move on from resolutions, intentions, and condemnations since South Africa is tired of hearing condemnations which in practical terms do not solve any problem. Along with these ideas, we think that Sao Tome and Principe, although with limited possibilities, will study a specific way of helping the People's Republic of Angola in this aggression which it faces from South Africa.

Question: We would like to put another question to you dealing in some way with cooperation and the road of development for economic liberation, on the one hand, among the countries constituting the former Portuguese colonies, and, on the other hand, development on the regional level. What does Your Excellency think about this matter and what right now is the position of Sao Tome on these two issues?

President Pinto da Costa: Concerning the first question dealing with cooperation among the five countries that used to be colonized by Portugal, we think that this cooperation is of extreme importance. We are all Africans but there are differences among us. There are differences of an ideological character; there are differences of orientation, and we think that we have a common base among the five countries. First of all, we are fighting against the same enemy in the anti-colonial struggle. We formed a single front against the enemy and we have a certain experience in terms of results that can be obtained when we effectively strengthen our unity. On the other hand, we have fraternal bonds among our leaders and among our parties which can rather well facilitate cooperation among the five countries.

This is why we want this cooperation, this is why we want the strengthening of this cooperation. Its intensification can even serve as a move that will be able to contribute to the strengthening of cooperation among the African countries, both on the regional level and on the continental level. Concerning regional cooperation of course we assign importance to that regional cooperation. It is very often rendered difficult by the fact that countries on the regional level have different options. When we talk in terms of cooperation, we must not overlook that aspect. This aspect very often hinders cooperation. Therefore, to make sure that this cooperation will be effective, it becomes necessary for the countries on the regional level to reach a level of sufficient independence which will permit them to tackle the problem of regional cooperation in realistic terms. Regional cooperation presupposes a certain degree of political and economic independence. Without that degree of political and economic independence, this regional cooperation will not help the region's countries but would rather be another way of providing an opportunity for the old colonizers to continue to exploit our wealth and our potential. We naturally assign importance to regional cooperation but it is necessary for it to be tackled in its political aspect, in its economic aspect, and we must take into consideration the need for attaining a certain degree of political and economic independence among the region's countries so that this regional cooperation may effectively do our peoples good.

Question: Mr President, if you permit us, we would like to get back to the question of cooperation among countries formerly colonized by Portugal. We would like to ask whether Sao Tome and Principe views this cooperation from a perspective similar to the one existing in Africa between the so-called French-speaking and English-speaking countries and what will be the establishment of a "Portuguese-speaking front" or whether you view this cooperation on a political basis, as you have just mentioned, in terms of ideological unity between the countries that used to be colonized by Portugal.

President Pinto da Costa: This cooperation cannot in any way have the character of cooperation which we currently have on the African level because we do not want to build a Portuguese-speaking community. We speak the Portuguese language, naturally, but we are not a Portuguese-speaking community. We therefore, as I said before, have the essential factor that means that this cooperation is different from the cooperation efforts which have been developed so far on the continental level; you have the political factor, you have the political and ideological identity of our respective countries. And from that identity we derive the difference that can exist among these cooperative efforts. Of course, we do have a problem and that is a geographical problem, the problem of distance. The geographical problem can limit cooperation to a certain point but it cannot in any way deny that cooperation. When there is identify as to political and ideological viewpoints and common objectives to be attained, then geographic distance cannot prevent the specific expression of this cooperation. We are absolutely convinced that this cooperation will be implemented even though there may be real difficulties. But there is a political determination on the part of these countries and that is important. We are convinced that we will implement cooperation between our five countries gradually in various stages and through different sectors.

FRG DELEGATION MEETS PRESIDENT--The secretary general of Somali Revolution Socialist Party [SRSP] and president of the SDR, Challe Mohamed Siad Barre, received at the presidency last night the FRG parliamentary delegation that is currently in the country. At the meeting, the president and the FRG parliamentary officials discussed strengthening bilateral relations, the Horn of Africa problem and the general world situation. Challe Siad told the delegation about the Somali people's efforts to develop their country. He said that although the large number of refugees being cared for in the country posed a strain on the country's economy, the people were struggling hard to achieve economic and social progress. The president said that the SDR greatly valued peace, mutual understanding and worldwide cooperation, adding that he was confident that relations between the two countries would be strengthened even further. Present at the occasion were: Chairman of the People's National Assembly Challe Mohamed Ibrahim Ahmad; Challe Abdi Salad Haji Mohamed, a member of the Standing Committee of the National Assembly; and the deputy chairman of the SRSP's Bureau of Economy, Challe Mohamed Abdi Ali (Qair). The FRG parliamentary delegation, comprised of Dr Stercken, member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and Dr Kohler, chairman of the African Affairs Committee, held talks yesterday with National Assembly officials on strengthening cooperation between the two countries' parliaments. PRISONERS RELEASED--The Somali Revolutionary Socialist Party [SRSP] secretary general and Somali Democratic Republic [SDR] president, Challe Mohamed Siad Barre, in consultation with the Supreme Revolutionary Council [SRC] and in exercise of Article 83 of the SDR Constitution, has released 5,009 prisoners, comprising people already sentenced, those awaiting trial and imprisoned convicts. Addressing an extraordinary meeting at the People's Hall this morning, which was attended by the SRC, the SRSP Central Committee, the People's National Assembly and government officials, Challe Mohamed Siad Barre said that the amnesty would apply to convicts serving sentences, persons charged with embezzling public property, those facing civil, security and military charges and prisoners charged with security offenses.

The SDR president, who declared the amnesty on the occasion of the 12th anniversary of the October Revolution, said that the amnesty did not apply to those who have committed crimes against the sovereignty, security and unity of the Somali people--spying, banditry, murder and others sentenced to life imprisonment. The revolution's constant calls have been in response to and in (?accordance) with the [word indistinct] pledges of the October Revolution; the advancement of every Somali individual and the revolution's motto of people being the most important when it comes to caring, said Challe Mohamed Siad Barre. Challe Siad congratulated all those who benefited from this amnesty and expressed the hope that they would be useful to their people and country. COFFEE EXPORTS REPORTED TREBLED

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The new chairman of the Coffee Marketing Board Brig David Oyite has blamed the reduction of Uganda's quota in the international markets to the failure of the Amin regime to cope with the required exports of coffee. The Brig was addressing guests at a party organised by the staff of the Coffee Marketing Board in Kampala last Friday to welcome him as their new chairman.

He promised that he and all members of the board of directors will work hard along with the workers to ensure the success of their national obligation of marketing the country's coffee to earn the country the necessary foreign exchange.

The Brig pointed out that since his appointment the board has trebled coffee exports unlike the Idi Amin regime which although boasting of exporting large quantities of coffee actually sold little leading to the reduction of the coffee quota for Uganda.

Brig Oyite who is also the army Chief of Staff called for national support to enable the board to fulfill its obligations. He urged the management of the coffee marketing board to boost coffee production which is the backbone of the country's economy.

He promised to work hand in hand with the board to ensure that the confidence put in him as chairman yields positive results and asked the staff to work as a team.

He strongly advised them to put aside their religious differences and give national priority interests.

Brig Oyite assured the guests that unlike Amin who sold Uganda coffee to buy guns all foreign exchange which will accrue from the sale of coffee will be used to develop the country.

The party was also attended by Cabinet ministers and diplomats.

ANALYSIS OF SIGNIFICANCE OF ORAL REPORTING TRADITION IN AFRICA

Paris LE MOIS EN AFRIQUE in French No 182-183, Feb-Mar 81 pp 95-116

[Article by Michel Deboste, formerly assistant lecturer at the Institute of Media Sciences and Technique (ISTI) in Kinshasa, from 1973 to 1978, assistant lecturer at the Third World College of the Paris Anthropology Institute since 1979: "Radio Kankan: "A Parallel Medium, Power of Analysis or Fait Accompli?"]

[Text] "There are people like that, who do not work, who are hungry, but whose sole pleasure in life is to get up in the morning, find other people and sit down by the shops and wait for news, just as one would wait for goods to unpack them and see what is inside!"

We are in Malinke country, in Kankan, Guinea: Kankan, a high place of trade, but also of dissent, which seems to have given its name to a kind of rumor, well-known in the Third World and particularly in Africa.[1] It is a phenomenon with multiple uses, which becomes sidewalk radio in Central Africa, Radio Medina in Tunisia, Radio Baobab in Dakar and Radio Treschville in the Ivory Coast. It is a baffling phenomenon, without material proof but not without vitality or foundations, both a delight to and need of peoples with an oral reporting tradition.

There is no need to travel miles or leagues to find, nearly everywhere, in any douar or humble district, the peaceful scenes, in the shade of a nganda [house] with its thatched roof or on the terrace of a Moorish cafe, where the people are seated before a bottle of beer or a cup of mint tea. They are scenes greedily evoked by Guinean writer Williams Sassine, but which, for a young Tunisian journalist, Kermaoui,[2] are easily explained among peoples who, seeking the truth, are forced to create and give color to information. And while that information sometimes takes on the dimensions of legend, each time, as Tahar ben Jelloun recently emphasized,[3] it "stresses the flaws of contorted information."

Moreover, this phenomenon also flourishes, in its way, in the countries of the East and can still be discerned in the modest villages of Europe or America, less, perhaps, in the large Western metropolises, where neighbors do not know one another well or at all, where the multiplicity of means of information and dissent take the place of this basic need of man for "information that circulates," to use the expression of Congolese Michel Batala.[4] Nevertheless, it is a fact that this substitute, overlapping "network" that stands up against the official media is found under the cloaks of Muscovites or under the headlines of LE CANARD ENCHAINE. Its delights and strength are the gossip a la francaise, the indispensable counterbalance to media that are too mechanized and therefore monopolized by governments that easily succumb to temptation. "We are," as Roger Fressoz put it, "the king's fools and the republic's keepers,"[5] a definition that could fit the "parallel media" of Africa or the Third World like a glove.

And yet, one must not push the comparison too far or forget that in Europe in particular, rumor has evolved over the centuries and taken on a "different" form, this one almost degenerate, more emotive and more cunning, perhaps more destabilizing as well, or at least, more disturbing. It rises from the depths of the subconscious, even the Middle Ages, bursting the ever so fragile shell of modern societies, however heavily policed, societies always in search of their ethics, even their very equilibrium. But in order to truly understand this sidewalk radio that travels the streets and roads, one has to go back to what Leopold Sedar Senghor calls the "Black African democracy" and to what Williams Sassine refers to as "our gift of the word." Nor must one forget the traumatisms of the colonial shock and perhaps even the more religious motivations of the African civilizations, whether Black, Arab or Berber.

Antenna and Baobab

Actually, what we are seeing is a modernized -- or corrupted? -- expression of the oral reporting tradition. At a time when the radio antenna seems bent upon uprooting the mango tree or the baobab, it is the spoken word that asserts itself, an authentically African word, even if it sometimes seems to be seeking out its channels and truth. At any rate, it is based upon this word that one must try to analyze this "rumor" that is sufficiently powerful to be of concern to political classes that do not know how to control their secrets and formidably effective, to the point that it weighs on national life and thwarts development plans that are excessively bold. It is a word that is no longer perceived as such by certain government, even opposition, circles, dug in behind the high walls of residences that seem more impregnable than the fortified castles of Charles the Bold. Those "big cement walls" built between the roads and the makayas," "perhaps in order not to make them jealous, perhaps in order not to see them," as the Libreville L'UNION note writer penned with stinging, engaging humor.[6]

In the ancestral communities, the word made it possible to communicate, to engage in exchanges and what is more, to humanize conflicts. As soon as there was a problem, the palaver was organized, under the tutelary tree, which permitted a collective handling of information and, as Lancine Sylla so correctly said,[7] "erected the word as a system of jurisdiction and government." Those who spoke were men "with at least two wives," as in Senegal, sometimes youths who had acquired a certain degree of experience, and even, as in the Sine kingdom dear to President Senghor, the representatives of the captives and slaves and more rarely, the women, who could play a fairly important role, as among the Ouatchis in southern Togo. This might last all day long for days on end. It was generally a question of "emptying one's heart," of bearing witness or analyzing an event that might bring the existence or equilibrium of society into question. The chief had to hear everything, even if he had to grimace or grit his teeth because in his turn, he had to speak in order to sum up the different remarks. He would then withdraw with his council in order to debate and find a solution. This might be, in very serious cases, as in the Congo, the sale as a slave or death of the guilty party, who was sometimes buried alive, but it could also be, in the case of a complaint, a fine in kind -- goats or chickens -- imposed on both parties, who then, among the Ouatchis, for example, had to eat out of the same dish.

The same was true when a decision had to be made concerning the government of the compound, a decision that necessarily had to reflect the views expressed by the assessors in the palaver. At a collective listening session organized under the aegis of the municipality of Kinshasa,[8] a Zairian teacher reported as follows: "The chief brought the elders together and presented the problem to them. Then he listened. Often, the wise men would say to the chief: 'The matter is too serious; let us think.' In the evening, the wise men consulted the inhabitants of the village and then went to bed to dream. In the early morning, they would tell their dreams to the chief. Today, the political commissioners say to the president: 'You are great and you are wise. You are like a god and you are always right. Consequently, when he convokes the Executive Council or the Political Bureau, the president has already made his decision. But for form's sake, they say on the radio: 'The Executive Council or the Political Bureau has decided that....' Or, if the decision was truly questioned, one learns of the dissolution of the organ in question."

Such remarks could be heard in most African nations, whether they be in the Maghreb or the Southern Sahara. But they are also valid for their virtual or organized oppositions. The affair of 22 November 1970 in Guinea is symptomatic in this regard. Everyone knew that there was going to be a plot and everyone told "who" would be apprehended. What is more, most of the arrests took place right in the homes of the persons involved, their consciences apparently at peace.[9] Williams Sassine comments: "Another type of leader was in the making. They wanted to act in the name of the people, but they were in fact cut off from the people." This was expressed, in his own way, by Leopold Sedar Senghor when he recently confided that "when an upper-level official, a bourgeois, a politician, comes to tell me of some rumor, some story, I generally do not believe it because while we have qualities, we also have faults, a tendency to make up fables. But when that comes from the people, I take it much more seriously. I must say that out of all these rumors from the people, two-third of the time, there is something there, it is true, for the people, especially the peasants, have their feet firmly planted on the ground and do not waste their time on fairy tales."

Process and Challenge

But while, as a "structure of conviviality, the palaver tree only symbolizes the role of the spontaneous spoken word in traditional cultures," according to the hypothesis of Alfred Simon,[10] the so-called sidewalk radio appears to be more than that: The expression of a "popular disposition restoring to the ruling classes what it had taken from them in order to appropriate it and transform it," it is above all a process and a challenge, taking the form, Sassine says, of a "kind of conspiracy.... Like a whispering, diffuse and consistent," precise but impossible to locate.

Initially, it was a process of the colonial administration that would neglect, even destroy the traditional structures, replacing them with an organization that was more centralized and easier to control, but totally foreign to peoples that used this parallel network as a vector for their aspirations for independence and as a weapon to shake off the yoke that denied them and oppressed them. In a solid doctoral thesis, Congolese Michel Batala[11] explains how the morkes and tam-tams gradually fell silent, often reduced, as in the case of Lower Zaire, to the role of "mission bells." The fact was that the coded language broadcast by the traditional means, from north to south, frightened the representatives of the colonial government, whether religious, military or administrative. Instruments of the devil for the former, weapons of subversion for the latter, they upset those who, in order to translate and interpret them, had to go to their auxiliaries, especially because these spoilsports acted as nap spoilers for the wives of the administrators. Consequently, as progress would have it, the latter hastened to install loudspeakers in the village squares or the market places of the capital in order to broadcast the bulletins and admonitions from their officials and their radio. Whence, according to Batala, the origin of sidewalk radio, with those knowing or guessing the language of the colonizer entrusted with the task, in turn, of translating and interpreting what "the radio on the sidewalk said" for their friends and relatives.

"As you can see," said Guinean Deputy Ibrahim Sangoure,[12] "Radio Kankan is direct communication, a verbal dialog between two or several individuals. That is what made the strength of the PDG before our country's independence. We had no means or radio then, but sidewalk radio enabled us to broadcast news and watchwords, thanks to travelers. 'So that is what is happening in Conakry, that is what they are saying, that is what they have done....' We had nothing, but on the same day or the next, Kankan knew of the events in Conakry, in Boke also, and so on. That is the interest, one of the strengths of sidewalk radio." It was therefore an informal, powerful network that came after the coded transmission of the tavala, a kind of trunk that had to be hollowed out before being covered with hide, a kind of big bush drum that beat out the news from one village to another. Sometimes the tavala gave way to the kirindji, also hollowed out, but on which very fine blades were positioned and which gave out different sounds. However, they also grew silent because of colonization and urbanization, making way for that curious phenomenon found in the Maghreb in the form of the Arab telephone.

Furthermore, it is rather curious to note that the different names used generally refer to a modern technical medium (radio, newspaper, station, chain, telephone, and so on), which is in turn associated with living realities (sidewalk, treschville, baobab, Medina, Kankan, caxito). They are names that partially explain the phenomenon. While the baobab evokes the palaver and caxito a famous bar in Praia, the so-called Arab telephone recalls those Berbers who, from mechtas [villages] to douars, from summits to the passes and from the Rif to Kabylie and as far as the Kasserine plateaus, transmitted news to one another, their hands acting as megaphones, faster than any telephone connection could have done at the time. But a Tunisian researcher, Si Slahah,[13] sees in this a religious origin with its raison d'etre in the requirements of Islam. In fact, he reminds us, the beginning of Ramadan is set by a precise position of the moon which the watchmen follow from a douar. When the time seems right, they call their neighbors, send coursers and messengers and alert mountains and valleys with enough speed so that no faithful follower might be guilty of an infraction. This explanation is perhaps debatable, but it is symptomatic of the sacred value attached to the spoken word and therefore, of the information it carries, vital to society and to the individual, in daily life as well as in their future and their destiny.

Revival, Restoration

But the continued existence, at this end of the 20th century, of such a form of communication proves that whether one is speaking about the sidewalk radio or telephone, we are witnessing a kind of process of passage to independence, what the Zairians quite rightly call a "revival-restoration." Twenty years after the liberation struggles, whether peaceful or violent, the new leaders continue, in the eyes of their people, to put on the boots of the colonizer and to try to impose centralized structures, little matter whether they be capitalist, Marxist or socialist. Do they not still hand down justice by virtue of codes or laws set forth by the former mother countries, to such a point that a return to traditional procedures is indispensable because they are the only ones truly accepted? A tendency toward fairly authoritarian centralism is easily explainable for young emerging nations that inherited artificial borders determined by the famous Berlin Treaty, but it is a tendency that clashes with the community traditions of a number of traditional societies in which the spoken word belonged to everyone.

The mistake lay in believing that the Western media would respond as they were to the exigencies of oral communication. One heard talk of kilowatts and program hours, Africa's windows were abruptly opened onto the world, people dreamed of the most prestigious, modern technology -- "This is the greatest day of my life," General Mobutu wrote in the golden book of the new compound of the Voice of Zaire which he had just officially opened -- but in the dusty side streets of the towns and the douars, the response was brutally clear: "It is a dead word," noted a young Senegalese writer, Serigne Mbaye Sall,[14] "a faceless word which, now monopolized, rapidly intoxicates and leads to lies. The listener also has a voice. To fail to recognize this is already a failure in itself...." "In the kabyle assemblies," Said Boudaoud wrote,[15] "everyone is president while he is speaking, but since, under the African regimes, the people are immediately excluded for economic or political decisions concerning them, they constantly confront the government with the fait accompli of information, giving it the information it would like to receive from them."

This mutation of political power therefore explains the vigorous, urgent, even impertinent vitality of a means of expression that has always opposed, Dominique Soupou correctly observes,[16] "the conquest by Europeans and the conservation by Africans of the power making it possible to control ancestral societies," especially since the institutions that they thereby perpetuate, emptied of their colonial content or their industrialized context, are for that very reason unadapted. The tireless -- although still futile -- efforts to find a "different" formula -- in 15 years under Mobutu, Zaire has experienced seven restructurations of the political government -- this endless quest for a proper model of "democracy" would, on the contrary, seem to justify such popular "resistance." The "sound archives" of these countries are full of warnings against such peddled rumors which are often, according to President Sassou Nguesso, for example, "the work of a handful of people implanted in the capital who undermine the national unity and whose purpose is to divert the attention of the working and peasant masses from the current objective, to wit, economic recovery."[17] That very day in fact, the Congolese chief of state intended to do away with rumors concerning his state of health, concerns not at all devoid of interest when one recalls the rumors stirred up in Angola by the "death" of President Neto." It is true that his disappearance to Moscow did toll the knell of openings initiated as well as of the hopes they had aroused.

Double Face

The information carried by sidewalk radio does seem to present a double face: on the one hand, raw news from the corridors or trenches of power, but also from the stadiums and fountains, handled, pared down, worked over until the truth is tasted; on the other, a rumor whose source is not known, carrying the secret aspirations of the people, who thereby manifest their will to power. The most striking case is that of the government shakeup in Algeria following the most recent congress of the FLN, as recounted by Said Boudaoud: "Consciously or unconsciously, I do not know by what means, it was decided that such a minister should be removed because he was going to be removed.... From that time on, the authorities were forced to take it into account. It was a way for the people to say that they did not like that minister and that they expected him to be removed from the government, to such a point that his case was examined by the higher organs of the party, who kept him in his post, contrary to all expectations, as the LE MONDE correspondent noted."

This shows how much these "people, raised to the status of an information system," undeniably bother those who, according to Pope John Paul II,[18] confiscate knowledge, wealth and power and who, at any rate, have a quite natural tendency to fall back on intellectual complacency, to such a point that one may well wonder whether the multiparty system -- or the multifaction party -- constitutes the real criterion of African democracies, which are prey to constant conflicts between those who possess knowledge, desire fortunes and villas and dream of taking power, strengthening it or expanding it. In all these debates, the masses have the feeling that they are curiously absent, even excluded, while remaining the stakes -- or an alibi, the very people who, since the beginning of time, have held the "secret of the spoken word," that instinct as vital to a community as drinking and eating are to an individual.

Did the traditional societies have such rather parallel circuits of information? It is difficult to confirm or deny this, first of all, because the concepts of radio and sidewalk, for example, have nothing to do with the words and notions of the African languages, even of our days. Second, the African political regimes have varied from one people to another, even if based on tangibly identical basic principles. Nor do diversions of power have recent origins. Quite simply, this phenomenon had no name because it existed in and of itself and expressed the underlying nature of peoples with a spoken tradition. It was not at all institutionalized, but fit quite naturally into the palaver, of which it was one of the constituent elements.

For example, if one looks at the organization of the ancient Berber societies, it was on the whole the marabouts, village assemblies and fountains that held power, mainly that of circulating information. In every Kabyle assembly, inasmuch as not every village had running water, people went to bring it from the fountain twice a day. Men were not admitted, which meant that the fountains were a kind of gathering place for the women and it was among them that information was transmitted. On the other hand, it was in the assembly that all decisions concerning the life of the tribe were made, decisions that were the province of only the men, who deliberated upon them each week, upon their return from the market. However, these decisions would be "opposed" by those made by the women at the fountain. This is how a kind of consensus would be arrived at and how information that was not solely political would circulate. It might also concern the sickness of an individual or the poor harvest of another, and the marabout only intervened on a more religious level at the time of the Friday prayers. This was an essential level, it is true. These decisions, this information from the tribe, would then be learned at the other douars through the traveling peddlers, who acted as a veritable journalist. But at the same time, the information traveled through the markets, in the valleys, wherever all the mountain people might go. The economy was based on bartering in the old days and the market place was the privileged place of trade, in the commercial as well as information domain, and this trade then traveled through all the tribes.

Even today, in the Kabyle mountains, such a system is perpetuated and propagated, from relative to relative, information from the back country, in constant conflict with that from the central government. In various forms, one finds this same opposition in Black Africa, which caused Tevoedjere to say, in "Poverty: Wealth of the Peoples": "The day when the ministers' wives no longer go to the market themselves is the day when they cut themselves, and their husbands, off from a source of information that I believe to be essential in our societies."[19] It is perhaps for that reason that some Zairian ministers have authorization to pay frequent visits to the ngandas of the compound, just another way of getting in on the rumors from the city.

Truth and Liberties

Nor must one forget that in the traditional society, transmitting information constituted a very heavy responsibility. Taken at his word, the witch doctor or messenger naturally had the right to enliven, but not to lie, even by omission. The greater the distance traveled by the messenger, the greater his credibility, because there were fewer distortions. Liberties were not taken with truth easily or, above all, with impunity. In fact, the palaver, from which the attitude to be adopted in the face of events -- and elements -- was nourished by a thousand "readings" of the environment. They might concern the tiny secrets of the living compound and the more serious and formidable secrets of the "sacred wood," reserved for initiates: the murmurs of the forest and the nervousness of animals, the lullaby of the river and the sky's rumbling, the coded messages of the tom-tom and the more voluble ones of the traveler, sometimes concealing the key word in a magical or fantastic fable that the recipient knew how to decipher. But distorting the truth was a veritable crime, a little as if, in a blood analysis in a laboratory, one reversed a few figures, even by accident, thereby diverting the doctor's diagnosis to a completely different path and perhaps irrevocably harming the patient's state of health.

By being unaware of or failing to respect this fundamental rule, the official media, and through them, the government behind them, have compromised their credibility and made that "leap into the unknown," which the "march toward development" is pompously called, even more suspect. By taking liberties with the truth, they have further increased that gap and imbalance increasingly deplored on this continent.

They have nourished a restlessness with pernicious effects. This does not in any way mean that radio or television must not hide anything, while traditional societies instituted the "blood pact" in order to protect their secrets. Moreover, as one young Zairian mother said, "a home without secrets is a home doomed to disappear, but once the sidewalk radio has spoken, our leaders must tell us the truth in order not to plunge us into anguish."[20] Or rejection, sometimes manifested with violence, as in Kabylia or tragically, as in Liberia.

The fact is that if the modern media are too frequently silent, reticent or deceptive, the government, now desacralized despite its pathetic quest for legitimacy, becomes transparent against its will, at least in most cases, out of imprudence or the vanity of those who hold or approach power -- the person who "knows" is assumed to hold a bit of power -- but rather, out of a concern for warning or protecting those close. And this occurs in "a nation that does not yet exist," as one Togolese researcher admits,[21] a nation whose "leader does not himself believe in the efficacy of his decisions," as one Zairian newsman lamented. The president may in turn, like his opposition, be tempted to use such a circuit, even to manipulate it, for propaganda purposes, naturally, but especially by virtue of an old ancestral chief reflex: sounding the people before making a serious decision. There is no need, for such a purpose, to resort to Western institutes or their computers: The panels are too shifting, the environments too fluctuating, and one can, in the final analysis, make a poll say anything, provided that one poses the right question and chooses the right readout. One then starts a report, listens to the rumors and sees what it is good or not good to do. "You know, in our country," President Senghor said, "we have received a European organization, but we want to adapt it to the community virtues of the Black African society. That is why, because of my post, I must be listening to the people, but I always verify rumors and news. And I tell you, part of the time, they are true...."

Sidewalk radio cannot, in fact, be conceived of without the application of real power of analysis which, like the palaver, brings together all the elements of the knowledge of the individual and society. But it is a bastard society, since the city only rarely has available the wisdom of the old people -- whence, perhaps, the growing influence of prophets and witch doctors -- and the villages have lost the young people "who have gone off to school to study," which could perhaps enable them to evaluate the new facts about the world and modern times. "That Watergate," one old Senegalese peasant woman said, "someone ought to make him understand that he is annoying the President."[22] But this power of analysis must also include, insofar as possible, the ancestral knowledge and that profound belief in the "language of dreams." We quote Munsoko wa Bombe, a Zairian journalist who has written a well-documented study on communication in Africa:[23]

"...I can still see my village, not far from Mbandaka, in the Equator region. The women were either in the fields or at the market or even the spring getting water. They told stories and in the evening, my mother would say to my father: 'Listen, I heard this today, they were saying such-and-such,' and my father would have to pay attention, for he had what they call 'clairvoyance.' It sometimes happened that based on the information he received, either from the women -- for he had two wives -- or from my brothers, or from a stranger who might bring news from somewhere else, he would bring the village together to say: 'This is what is happening.' He would say that after comparing the information he received with what he saw in the night.... That is why my mother never had the right to go out at night, even when I was small and was thirsty. My father and only my father would take care of it...."

Fetishes and Modernity

One cannot conceal these age-old beliefs when one approaches the future of Africa, the effectiveness of programs or development projects, especially when it is a matter of communication. "I still believe in them and even more and more," a Togolese armed with diplomas and Christian faith recently confessed. And indeed, how can one not believe in them when one digs under the goalposts, as in the case of a Zambia-Zaire match, in order to be sure that fetishes are not buried there, when a chief of state consults his witch doctors before making a decision, when another questions marabouts and a third makes the compound warriors one of his principal sources of information? How can one not understand that the Western techniques are not yet "transferable," but rather, plastered on, even imposed, for reasons that are not always -- or even rarely -- innocent and unselfish? How can one fail to ask such questions when it was necessary to call on a witch doctor to calm the anger of the ancestors, the alleged cause of the death of several Voice of Zaire employees in Matadi? The new radio station had been built, either carelessly or unconsciously, on the site of an old, although abandoned, cemetery. The station is still silent today.[24] Naturally, this is pushing the disturbing effect of the modern media, whose contribution is far from negative, to the extreme. Radio has in fact widened the field of knowledge considerably. Thanks to it, the mother who grinds her millet or manioc in the most humble bush or forest village knows what is happening in the capital and even farther away, in Paris or Brussels, where her grandson is studying to become "what he is to be," provided, naturally, that the transmitters are working and that one can buy transistor batteries, which is not always the case. And yet, one thing is sure: The radio fascinates as well as intimidates, opens up fantastic prospects, instantly links the bush peasant with the city worker. But it also connects them with a poorly understood universe because it is so often poorly expressed: There is a gap between the language used on the radio and the language of the people, between the knowledge underlying radio broadcasts and the "rustic knowledge" of the people, for while the people do comment upon the "news from the radio" in the rural communities or urban districts, they very quickly come to the limits of their own knowledge, the exigencies of their own culture, the obstacle of their own language. As one retired man in Kinshasa said: "I do not trust French; I only understand Lingala well.... But when I listen to the news in Lingala and then they tell me what was said in French, I can't believe either because there are so many differences. I then blame it all on the sidewalk radio...."[25]

Having said this much, one must not be deceived about the importance of the media in Africa, even if the local or national radio stations are heard by "90 percent of the population" -- at least in the big cities -- and even if the foreign stations have audiences that might range from "30 to 60 percent" faithful listeners, especially among the young and the elite, who are quite patient about leapfrogging back and forth between the different stations. And even if, according to the MacBride Commission,[26] the number of receivers has increased seven times in 15 years, reaching 30 million. This makes scarcely 2 percent of world distribution for a population that alone makes up 10 percent of that of the globe. In short, the growth in means of communication is lower than the population growth!

This demonstrates the vast importance of the parallel information networks and the great responsibility of these interpreters, humble leaders of opinion, who repeat and explain what they heard through their own distorting prism! If they are not totally up on modern facts (for example, the deterioration in the terms of trade) or if the journalist has done a poor job in spreading information -- which is unfortunately too frequently the case! -- a whole village or district may have a false idea of the real situation, especially if, in addition, the "reporter" belongs to an irredentist, insubordinate or quite simply neglected, ethnic group. Whence the fears expressed in high places -- sometimes justified, often exaggerated and with good reason: Sidewalk radio has instinctively taken its precautions!

Fait Accompli

How does it actually happen? What is striking is not so much the information or the rumor spread as the context in which it is spread: the strange feeling that something, some event, is happening or about to happen, that some decision is being made or about to be made. It is a kind of waiting, a sixth sense, a muted determination, firm and diffuse, "a kind of conspiracy," Sassine writes, "to confront the government with the fait accompli of the information," Boudaoud continues. This is so even before the vague but already consistent "rumor" has taken on enough shape to become "news" -- or a watchword -- whispered from person to person. The author of "Le Jeune Homme de Sable," a poet of the Sahel and of the conflict with the "father," has perhaps described this phenomenon best:

"In general, there is no one in particular who tells you: 'Well, it happened like that and here is the proof.' No! You have the impression that he is whispering it to you and because it is like a whispering, you feel concerned, responsible, all the more because you will hear that same whispering elsewhere. That is what may bother the Westerner, because there is no material proof and you cannot localize it. And that is precisely what makes its strength, because under our regimes, they do not like troublemakers much, that is, people who bathe in this kind of conspiracy...." This is so true that at the time of his recent reelection, President Rene of the Seychelles included as point 4 in his program "making it impossible for spreaders of rumors to do damage." These individuals are the object of preventive action on the part of regimes with ideologies as different as those of Zaire or Angola!

This urgent need for truth, but also for participation in the making of decisions means that sidewalk radio or Radio Kankan -- whatever one wants to call it -- appears to be a power of information and a challenge that controls all secrets, those of the leaders and those of their adversaries, using them as a shield or alarm. And when the authorities -- or the "opponents" -- no longer hear or refuse to believe what they hear, they fall or go to prison, are sometimes even executed. Thus exited William Tobert, who was nevertheless warned by Sekou Toure,[27] who constantly pays attention to the people's rumors -- and knows how to decipher them. As for Colonel Haidallah, he preferred to cancel his trip to Lagos at the last minute for the OAU summit conference, even though the engines of his DC-8 were already running.[28]

For months in 1972, sidewalk radio stood up to President Ngouabi, forcing the Voice of the Revolution to admit -- finally! -- that the vice president, who had left to represent his country at Nkrumah's funeral in Conakry, had in fact chosen freedom, going into exile.[29] On the other hand, the same sidewalk radio "blocked" a decision, however justified, which the government had made in order to rid Kinshasa of parasites and the unemployed. How, it asked, could one send away these "inactive persons" when in their villages, nothing had been planned to take care of them? Is the government thus taking care of my little brother? This measure, salutary but awkward, had violated the sacrosanct African solidarity. There was also blockage, but in Togo this time, of a decree providing for an intensification of cotton growing -- a source of foreign exchange -- in the southern region of the country. In the name of a reliable source of food, the Ouatchi peasants went against this decision of the fa, recommending instead an increase in bean crops for 5 years, for this is the basic food staple.[30] In Gabon, the elimination of the vice president was halted. He was a member of the Fang ethnic group, which has a majority. The post was indeed done away with, but its holder became prime minister and remains so.[31] Do General Diane and Major Sangare owe their freedom to the insistent rumor of their arrest, a rumor sufficiently strong to be taken up by LE MONDE?

Mouth-to-Mouth

Technically speaking, sidewalk radio is the "mouth-to-ear" method or, more precisely, to use a Bantu expression not lacking in flavor and symbolism, the "mouth-to-mouth" method -- does the spoken word not mean dialog? -- that spreads and grows stronger in concentric circles, "like a pebble thrown in the water," blending with others and crossing land and sea before arriving in Paris, before the official media of France and Zaire, to announce the invasions of the Shaba or the "return" to the government of two individuals formerly banned: Nguza Karl i Bond and Cleophas Kamitatu. One may rightfully wonder whether, under Shaba I, the former minister of foreign affairs was not at least partially the victim of sidewalk radio!

"It is a bizarre phenomenon," admits one Ivorian student,[32] "but I believe that it comes from the government. It is those who are in the lower posts of government who transmit this information by radio-treschville and who spread these rumors," in fact, all those whoare anywhere near decision-making centers: the makayas in Gabon and the Kodios in Togo, the president's cook or valet rather than his prime minister or chief of protocol, the militiaman or adjutant rather than the chief of security or chief of staff. But it is also the latter: the ministers or "big shots" who, once out of the meeting of the Executive Council or board of directors, return to their "second office" -- the Zairian name for the second wife -- telling her of the latest decisions made or being prepared (this was, for example, the case of a member, now removed, of the Supreme Military Council of Mauritania). Or he may quite simply go to his stenographer or private secretary. In Guinea, they are trying, with some success, to get back to the source. "Who told you that? From whom do you have that?" And yet, Radio Kankan still functions, less powerful, it is true, but still effective.

At any rate, it is not for nothing that the foreign radios are "questioned" for hours from north to south on the continent, by the lucky owners of short-wave radios, for they are precious sources of information -- and of crosschecking and authentication -- for those assailed, in the bus or on the sidewalk, at the Moorish cafe or in the factories, by the rumors of sidewalk radio. But these foreign voices are not necessarily those from the West or the Eastern countries. In West Africa, Guinea or the Ivory Coast in particular, Radio Lome is more listened to than Radio France International and in Kinshasa, Brazzaville and Luanda win out over the Voice of America. People want to know and understand Africa and the world, but especially what is happening in their own countries. The power of analysis is pushed to perfection because the radio bulletins are compared with one another.[33] At the time of the Gafsa attack in Tunisia, Libyan broadcasts were compared with those from France-Inter! Furthermore, depending on the speed with which official radio reacts, sidewalk radio will flourish or perish because, as one young mother in Kinshasa says, "we wait for the final word from the Voice of Zaire," provided, however, that it is convincing. "Why do we not see any Cubans on television," one young student asked, "when we know that they were in Shaba with the others? And we know it is true; my cousin saw them and wrote to me about it."[34] Is this guilty silence? Above all, it is dangerous, as we saw at the time of the first attack in Shaba when the traditional circuits were literally and deliberately poisoned, by foreign agents, mainly Belgian and American.[35] On the other hand, a kind of liberalism at the time of the second aggression brought sidewalk radio back to its proper proportions.

Slow Metamorphosis

When sidewalk radio starts, it does not stop; it is the source that is difficult to define. "In fact," Sassine writes, "it just comes to you, like that. You do not get news directly, as you do in the West, by the radio or the newspapers. There is first of all a kind of climate that is created. Now then, that is instinct. You yourself feel that there is something there. You hear a part of a sentence, not addressed to you, but you hear it anyway. Then it is completed for you somewhere else, later, by a cousin or friend who comes to see you or whom you meet. You spread it yourself instinctively, until someone else tells you: 'Yes, but what about this?' You stop because it is blocked. You try to transmit it again and you run into contradictions again. Then you stop for good and pass on the contradictions...."

Nevertheless, even if confirmed, the rumor is no longer completely the same at the end as when it started out, if it truly stops. Munsoko wa Bombe explains this slow metamorphosis well: "Urbanization has made the cities larger. A man living in Ndjili and who wants to tell his brother-in-law in Ngaliema (zones of Kinshasa) has to travel dozens of kilometers. He therefore entrusts his information to a friend going in that direction. With the aid of the traffic, the friend in question takes the bus and meets other people, picks up more information and rumors related to the first. He changes buses two or three times and each time, must wait a long time for the next. His information therefore undergoes additions and subtractions, certain elements are verified and confirmed, while others are distorted or disappear. Finally, it is a kind of synthesis that reaches the brother-in-law in Ngaliema. "That friend will therefore have done the same work as a journalist in possession of dispatches from several agencies concerning the same event, with the same risks and uncertainties but sometimes better sources, without mentioning the thousand possible exchanges between the "sand" and the "pavement," as they say in Luanda -- that is, between the villages and the muceques (low-income districts) and the administrative city (with the paved arteries).

Thus, initially transmitted almost under the cloak, the uncertain whispering is passed from mouth to mouth, chewed over, turned over every possible way, as chewing gum would be, until it takes on consistency and, depending on the place, circumstances and events, a little more salt or sugar! But always, as it is carried, it undergoes the test of truth, authentication, while picking up the collective imagination, gradually becoming a hard core, standing up to all contradictions or forcing the government to consider it. It will be different depending on whether it circulates among the Soussous of Guinea, who are fairly supportive of the regime, or among the Malinke, who are more critical. In most cases, there is interpersonal authentication, but it can, as in Kankan, take on the form of a palaver.

"...We have to admit," Williams Sassine colorfully admits, "that we, the Malinke, have business in our blood and we have the gift of the spoken word. Since we are small, we are taught to speak, to argue, to use the adversary's arguments and everything.... We like to comment on events. There are lots of families that have nothing to eat, but in the morning, they have to go out and get together, in order to have a palaver. We are born with that. When information arrives, we send it on, we discuss it, debate it, because we do not place too much trust in our African radio stations. Our only pleasure...is to wait for information, to unpack it, weigh it, 'retail' it to others, with our label. The littlest bit of information can be commented upon for hours, to such a point that sometimes, the authorities hear about it. That is why the conspiracies are discovered in Guinea! Before, in the villages, people scrutinized the information, received the false or bad news with humor, in order to destroy it. The good news -- those challenging the government -- were spread. But today, in the big cities, there are no more councils of elders to do that work. The news goes to Kankan because they trust our reliability and our power of analysis. As I told you, we have the gift of the spoken word. That is what is difficult to understand for a Westerner. With the Westernization of our societies, the African governments have taken to information in order to carve out roles as tutelary gods or new witch doctors, functions they devaluate because instead of sticking out their hands, our witch doctors pressed the skies until they gave rain...."

Waves

Does this mean that only political information is carried by Radio Kankan or sidewalk radio? No! During the colonial period, for example, in Conakry, rumors had it that on a given day and at a given hour, the Lebanese owner of a movie theater would be murdered by the husband of his mistress. Only he refused to believe it and he did indeed die in that way, precisely on the day given. The rumor had gone beyond the confines of the native compound to reach the Lebanese man's family in order to warn him because he was a good man and the Africans like him.[36] This is where one perceives the second dimension of the phenomenon, which is particularly noticeable among the Kabylia Berbers. First of all, the information is received and carried as such, dressed up but authenticated. Then it takes off, in the form of a counterrumor if it has turned out to be false or, if it seems to be true or likely, as a counterwave bearing the beliefs, knowledge, anguish and aspirations of those who received it and integrated it into their behavior and opinions. A single piece of information, equally true or given as such, the counterwaves will then express the different sensitivities of the ethnic groups or socioprofessional strata of the population, in terms of the underlying significance granted to them by individuals, of the risks or chances resulting therefrom to the harmony and security of the people, the clan, the family. These counterwaves may also take the form of a symbolic rumor, as in the case of the consultation of the fa in southern Togo, or become disproportionately inflated to the point of frightening the authorities in their marble palaces or forcing them to deliberate on the matter. It would even appear that in this case — the example of Kabylia is symptomatic in this respect — the veracity of lack of veracity of the information is not so important from the time it encounters the anguish or despair of part of the population.

At any rate, these counterwaves will always be perceived as a warning, a petition, a challenge. They will never truly defy the government, which will prefer to go back on a decision, defer the clarification of another or sometimes tell the truth, against its wishes. It was President Senghor who instructed his minister of finance and economy to explain in Ouolof, to the caliphs, the reasons for unpopular measures. It was Sekou Toure who tried to divert or retrieve these rumors through his local revolutionary governments. It was Algeria and Mauritania that made modifications and changed the schedule of their programs for the forced Arabization of the non-Arab classes of their countries. In the final analysis, it is a subtle form of dialog that is instituted and imposed, willingly or not. But always, at the conclusion of a silent struggle, a balance is created, at least for a time.

It could be this very complex interplay of true news and often emotional, sometimes irrational, counterwaves that troubles the Western — or Westernized -- observer, making him doubt the real value of the rumors he hears, so numerous are the circuits used by a type of information that is scarcely linear at the outset. This is especially true since some of the circuits are limited to a very precise ethnic or geographic framework and in addition, their nature may change depending on whether one is in the city or the bush, to such an extent that President Senghor states: "I do not feel that I am truly myself unless I am in a rural community, when I hear the people...." Another factor that may well lead the researcher astray is that the only news that passes through the entire national territory and crosses borders is that whose importance is great enough to prevent it from being blocked at any stage. Naturally, this news has a political, social and economic dimension. Its relationship to acts of government is obvious. The government is challenged with vigor and humor.

To stop at that is to fail to realize that parallel information concerns all aspects of the life of the individual and the society to which he belongs. It may be a rail accident that caused the death of dozens of persons: the fula-fula that turned over, decapitating part of the passengers because its driver was racing with an OCTZ [expansion unknown] bus; the drought that threatens manioc fields in Lower Zaire or the premature baby that did not survive because of an incubator breakdown. But it may also be the future return of Ben Yayia or the likely transfer of Tounsi from the Tunisian. Or yet, Temine, the symbol of North African soccer, who manages to capture the attention of the entire population and is worth 60 million, according to some, 500 million according to others. "Sports are important in our countries," Said Boudaoud says, "because they are part of our social life. The stadium is in the old social standards. It is a gathering place where information travels while the people attend an event and, to a certain extent, participate in it. It plays nearly the same role as the cafe. At the cafe, people play dominoes while drinking tea and exchanging information. It is therefore very important as the place where this takes place. The transfer of a player would be considered as information of enormous interest to a certain group of people. Naturally, it is not important enough to concern families, but among young people, it might be. Here also, information circulates. There is information that affects one category of people more than others and this would be true even of a ministerial shakeup. In all the villages, for example, the people decide that a given player should not have a certain position and say so. I do not know how much influence this has on club decisions, which are cardinal, or on those of the trainer, who is trained in the Western school -- for after all, soccer comes to us from elsewhere. But information -- al-akhbars -- has influence; that is certain. Quite often, we know things before the newspapers, at least in Algeria. And we believe in it because where there is smoke, there is fire. In Tizi-Ouzou, at any rate, we know before the newspapers who will play or not play and why. The problem is to know whether it is a leak or confinement of decisions by societies that structurally want to retain supervision and influence over everything concerning their existence."

Parallel Medium

What attitude should be taken toward such a phenomenon? Fight it? That would be futile. Despite all their efforts and speeches, the African leaders have not been able to silence the sidewalk radio or truly limit its audience, a veritable parallel medium that knows how to speak and stand up to them, if necessary, well-protected behind the uncertainty about the very origin of the source, even if it is known that such and such a minister talks too much or if a certain cousin is "in a good post."

Is it to be channeled? There have been experiments with varying degrees of success: the radio clubs in Niger, that have made it possible to reach peasants and especially the PRL [Local Revolutionary Authorities] in Guinea; village or district committees whose meetings are supposed to allow total freedom of language but which, scorned by the masses, tend to beat around the bush and feed on old wive's tales. An attempt is made to "break" a given rumor, deemed harmful to the regime, or to retrieve counterwaves in order to correct them at the people's assemblies. At these meetings, one Guinean deputy admits, the eternal malcontents that are not for progress, those reactionaries who oppose the evolution of the country and its development, are finally unmasked. Moreover, for Ibrahim Sangoure, "as soon as the rumor is false, the authorities immediately assume their responsibilities and take advantage of a general assembly or meeting to correct it. But sometimes, even without any intervention by authorities, it sometimes happens that the rumor dies by itself. Nevertheless, it is good that they set up a rampart. "And yet, despite a relentless chase, justified by some success, for the 'spreaders of false news,' Radio Kankan continues on its way, now relayed by the Peuhls, slower and more discreet. Although the information is now checked, it is undeniably still passed and seems to have forced the Guinean Government to free General Diane, who has indeed been seen in the streets of Conakry and who is once again playing an important role in the country's political life. That also has been learned.

More effective seem to be the educational radio or rural radio experiments, at least as they are conducted in Senegal and Tanzania. "People too frequently forget to say," President Senghor says, "that the ONCAD [National Office of Cooperation and Assistance for Development] scandals were first of all reported by the Office of General Inspector of the Office of President of the Republic. Now then, it was mainly because of the people's reactions, of that rural radio, that the supervisory organs were alerted." But it would appear that the best way to short-circuit sidewalk radio, to at least attenuate its harmful impact, would be to give more freedom to journalists who are better trained, more competent and therefore, more responsible. Furthermore, they must go to the people and not to their leaders or elite. And they must have the feeling of belonging to an autonomous profession with its laws and ethics rather than to a civil service that encompasses them, paralyzes them and finally, destroys their motivation.

Having said this much, even this type of revolution would be but a palliative measure. "It is time," according to one Zairian diplomat who is a well-known academician and close to the chief of state, "that we propose a new type of research into communication. Finally, it is urgent to be innovative and not to rely on Western-type classifications or themes. We must question the sacrosanct notions 'of imperialism of the international media' and 'information monopolized' by a party or government." In short, we must return to the sources of tradition, but also of current realities, without prejudice or preconceived notions. It is necessary to establish, based on a new, critical analysis, a new synthesis integrating the palaver and the microprocessor. In other words, one must finally (!) give consideration to the specificity of communication in the countries of Africa and the Third World, cease making universal notions an alibi that is too convenient and in the end, explosive.

Whatever the case, this phenomenon of sidewalk radio or Radio Kankan deserves more than a derisory label. On a continent still in search of itself and involved in nearly insoluble dramas, it is perhaps time to pay more heed to the people, if only to detect misunderstandings or anger, factors of disorder, factors of stagnation, even regression, as well, for having failed to bring these peoples into the drafting of plans that are too ambitious, more responsive to the interests of wealthy countries than to the aspirations of the working masses. It would be dangerous to prefer foreign experts or technocrats -- even native -- to them, or worse, the closed circle of the president's advisers. This is perhaps the key to the development which, 20 years after independence, has still not come. Silence sidewalk radio? "You could not think of it!" a young Haitian recently exclaimed, for "it is we who transmit life through that network!"[38]

FOOTNOTES

1. This version of Williams Sassine, reported in an interview with the author during one of his stays in Paris, is questioned right in Quinea, particularly in official circles, where "Cancans" is preferred. Moreover, it would appear that the expression "Radio Cancans," written with this spelling, is from President Senghor, who attached no pejorative meaning to it. Like his Guinean colleague, the former Senegalese chief of state has always attributed great importance to public rumors, as he told the author during a meeting granted him in his Parisian apartment in August 1980. Nevertheless, we have retained the spelling "Kankan" in order to make a greater distinction between these "rumors" from the CANARD ENCHAINE-type "French gossip" [cancans], and because this name symbolizes quite well the African-type treatment of information.

They gathered relatively representative samplings from the population over a given area (including foreigners), who palavered in complete freedom on official broadcasts and speeches, thereby making a pragmatic approach of the Kinshasa public possible, concerning not only their concerns, reactions and motivations, but also the evolution of the latter. The GEC were called at rather regular intervals, using panels that were substantially the same over the sessions, despite the extreme fluctuation in the population.

9. President Sekou Toure's version is slightly different. According to the Guinean chief of state during a no-holds-barred discussion with a delegation from the French-Guinean Friendship Society on 20 November 1980, the "guilty parties" were truly "revealed" during directly broadcast people's trials, immediately and "spontaneously" arrested by party-government militiamen, even when they were intimate friends of the president himself, who, he claims, ignored everything until the very end. Nevertheless, the "victims" of the purges never tried to protect themselves, so confident were they of their incognito...or impunity.

The height of this mind poisoning came with the announcement, by a small private transmitter belonging to a foreign company, of the taking of Kolwezi by rebel troops, called former Katangan gendarmes. This broadcast was picked up by a Customs radio where technical assistants were working and was therefore practically authenticated. The rumor seemed so credible that it asserted itself despite contradictions and the visit to Kolwezi of the AFP correspondent. The "corridor rumors" were emphatic on the subject. In order for this insistent rumor to die down, the incriminated French journalist had to agree to make his self-criticism before the television cameras. Since doubt persisted, President Mobutu had to go there himself, with the Zairian and international press, at the controls of his own C130.

36. According to Williams Sassine, who had the report from his mother.

37. This accident actually happened in 1977 in Kinshasa, not far from the Limete intersection and was the subject of several articles in the morning daily SALONGO. Such a "race to the death" frequently pits the drivers of buses and fula-fulas, trucks summarily fixed up as passenger transport vehicles, an arrangement launched over 30 years ago by a shrewd and unscrupulous Greek merchant who, when he retired, received a whole page of the SALONGO, so much did he profit from the transport difficulties in Kinshasa, a veritable mushroom capital, transforming the fruitful exploitation of the public into a popular institution. But the profitability of the system is essentially based on the frequency of the trips and the "flexibility" of the circuits, meaning that the drivers, in order to go faster, engage in frantic races, not hesitating to "burn" a few stops, if need be, and depositing their customers a few kilometers away from their destination. It should not be at all surprising, therefore, that these fula-fulas would be incorporated into the people's chronicles which, at the time of the rather frequent accidents, express the profound resentment of users.... The latter, based on fairly erroneous interpretations, may then be the sources of "rumors" in the traditional sense of the word.

    In 1977, on the Boulevard du 30 Juin in Kinshasa, a powerful Mercedes, driving along at 230 kilometers an hour at night, was being followed by motorcycle gendarmes trying to cite it for speeding. Coming out of a turn, the car exploded, literally pulverizing its six passengers, including the son of the chairman of the board of Air Zaire. All day long, on-lookers filed by, commenting on the event, which was taken up at length by the local press, which could not furnish an explanation. The identity of one of the victims obviously explained its reserve, because the chairman of the board was known to be close to the president. For a long time, there were rumors of an attack when mechanically speaking, the accident could be easily explained: an air-conditioned vehicle traveling with all its windows closed and hitting, one after the other, several trees along the roadway. But the tragically spectacular aspect of the accident and the notorious unpopularity of the chairmaw of the board of Air Zaire and the sons of bwanas -- dignitaries -- somewhat tight won out over any rational explanation, which is easily understood when one realizes that in Africa, a death is rarely considered to be "natural."

38. This study deliberately leaves out another form of sidewalk radio, the one linking immigrant students or workers in France or Belgium to their country. It is just as effective and stems from the same techniques, but the task is substantially different. It responds to a need to know as well as to a need to be reassured. In fact, Africans in Paris -- like those elsewhere, whether Brussels, London or Bordeaux -- have their own information system linking them to the continent, but protecting them from the environment into which they experience difficulty fitting and being accepted. Here again, it is a kind of parallel circuit reserved for Africans, but which sometimes transcends the Blacks -- including West Indians -- to include the Maghrebians. The "Bondy rumor," following the fascist, racist attacks on 80 Blacks and Arab victims in the spring of 1980, is symptomatic of this anguish felt by Africans who no longer have elders to consult and who have difficulty relating to the French, an anguish so strong that it may annihilate that power of analysis still so powerful on the continent, an anguish nourished by an increasing awareness of the uncertain and tragic future of Africa and of observations as severe as they are disillusioned. All doctrines are mixed up together: "You know, frankly speaking, things are a mess at home. I received a letter from my parents. People are no longer eating well, once a day at most and practically no meat: 50 to 60 francs a kilogram per kilogram and for our parents' wages, that is too much. Everything is too expensive and there is no medicine." Three years, such a confession would have remained within the closed circle of the Zairians. Today, there are no more borders: Zairians and Senegalese, Togolese and Congolese exchange their information, while the workers turn to the students to try to learn and understand. Positions are taken only later, but the questions continue.

MANO RIVER UNION PLANS, ACHIEVEMENTS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 5 Oct 81 pp 4, 6

[Text]

The greatest challenge to African nations today is unity. That unity is not a half-way house affair; it requires that nations surmerge their individual interests in the greater cause of continental unity. The sooner this goal is achieved, then Africa would embark on a more sustained course of socio-economic development.

"Only a united Africa can redeem its past glory and renew and reinforce its strength for the realization of its destiny. We are today the richest and yet the poorest of continents, but in unity our continent could smile in a new era of prosperity of power," the greatest late Pan-Africanist, President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, once remarked.

Nevertheless, a majority of independent African nations, although aware of the need for such a unity, have opted for a gradual approach in the form of regional and sub-regional unity, instead of a larger continental type. This idea was advanced during the incipiency of the OAU when the Monrovia group, during preparatory talks for the organization of the union, suggested that the path to acquiring a united Africa must be on a blow-by-blow basis.

This concept, in preference to the Cassablanca Group's, which lobbied for an automatic continental unity, is what has today been translated into regional and sub-regional cooperations among African states, including the Mano River Union (MRU) -- a healthy economic, cultural and trade cooperation -- between originally the Republics of Sierra Leone and Liberia which now embraces the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea, celebrates its eighth Anniversary tomorrow, Saturday October 3, 1981.

It was on October 3, 1973, the long-felt desire of the peoples of Liberia and Sierra Leone to establish closer link between their two countries became a reality when the Mano River Union Declaration was signed at Malema -- a border town between Liberia and Sierra Leone.

Since that occasion, the Mano River Union expanded, admitting the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea as its third member. On October 25, 1980, the three Heads of State. of Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea met in Konakry Dee in Sierra Leone, and signed Guinea's protocols; thus granting full and equal membership in the union to Guinea.

The expansion of the Union from two to three members represents one of the most significant developments in the area of inter-governmental cooperation in West Africa since October 1973. Guinea's accession to the MRU has also contributed to the viability of the Union by creating a wide range of opportunities. These include, among other things, the development of joint agricultural and industrial production, natural resources and trade.

SECRETARIAT

The Secretariat of the MRJ in Freetown, Sierra Leone, has been involved in several areas of development and economic integration in line with the aims and objectives of the union. These include trade, communication, Monrovia-Freetown highway project, the Basin Development project, agriculture, industrial development, and harmonization of tariffs and quality control, among others. Others are training institutions such as Forestry, Post and Telecommunications, customs, marine, curriculum planning, instructional materials production and book development project. The Union also has a scholarship and fellowship programme.

TRADE

As a Customs Union, trade plays a very important role in the Mano River Union. After various stages of development to bring into effect trade liberation, the MRU completed its first phase of the Customs Union on May 1, 1981, with the introduction of Intra-Union Trade.

Under this trade agreement, tariff barriers to trade between the member states have been eliminated and the joint market of Liberia and Sierra Leone have become available to producers and manufacturers in the two countries, providing them with a substantially large markets.

All manufactured goods and goods wholly produced in the member states can be traded from Sierra Leone to Liberia and from Liberia to Sierra Leone without any customs and import duties and equivalent charges been levied. In respect of the new member state, Guinea, the union has worked out the transitional arrangements to enable goods to enter Intra-union Trade in the joint market of the three member states.

Since the commencement of Intra-Union Trade on May 1, 1981, trade among the member states, which consisted principally of confectionery, has been valued at Le147, 929 with the relevant member states charging the appropriate non-discriminatory internal tax.

ROAD PROJECT

The Freetown/Monrovia Highway is one of the main projects of the MRU. The current cost of the project is estimated at US $97 million of which about US $40 million has been committed by the Federal Republic of Germany and the African Development Bank. The draft final report of the feasibility study on the project has been submitted by the consultants and has been reviewed by the MRU Ministerial Transport Commission. Once this report is updated, it will be submitted to donors and financing institutions. Arrangements are underway to ensure that the project commences not later than 1 July, 1983.

BASIN DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

The feasibility studies for the Mano River Basin Development project have been completed. These studies, funded by the EEC, where undertaken by the consulting firm SOFRELEC, based in Paris, France. The results have shown that the scheme is feasible for hydro-electricity and, possibly, subprojects such as forestry, fisheries, agriculture and tourism. The Secretariat will also undertake a regional study of the power requirements and power development programmes of the Member States, with the primary aim of determining and ensuring that they are complementary.

AGRICULTURE:

In the area of agriculture, the MRU is at present lying emphasis on adaptive research, and studies are being undertaken to increase the degree of self-sufficiency in animal protein in the member states. Improved fermentation methods and better storage facilities for croops are also being developed by the Member States.

The joint seminars in Produce Quality Improvement have been undertaken by the MRU in collaboration with the Sierra Leone Produce and Marketing Board and the Liberian Produce Marketing Corporation. The latest recommendations are for the establishment of a cooperative bank based on principles and, among other things, the eradication of minimization of cross infestation, contamination, and spoilage of produce within the warehouses of member states. The Fourth joint Seminar will be held in Conakry, Guinea, in 1982.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

An Industrial Development Unit. was established in the Secretariat in February, 1980, financed by the EEC. Foreign experts and local counterparts are engaged in evolving methods that would ultimately lead to harmonized industrialization. The Unit has so far analysed Foreign Trade Patterns, prepared a survey on Industry and Standardization and compiled a status report on Union Industries. This culminated in the formulation of structural data on the industry and industry-related projects.

FORESTRY INSTITUTE

The Union Forestry Training Institute is located in Bomi Hills, Liberia. It has a capacity for 100 students. This institute is geared towards providing a sound basis for the effective development and utilization of the forest resources of the Member States. It runs on two-phase training program;

(a) A Forest Rangers Training Program, and
(b) An In-service Forest Industrial Workers program

There is also a Forest Workers Training Programme which aims at improving the performance and efficiency of forest industrial workers through the development of their skills in the various operations connected with timber harvesting.

The workers receive training in various categories including:

- Mechanics
- Survey Assistance
- Saw Doctors
- Chain-Saw Mechanics and Operations

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

The Union Telecommunications and Postal Training Institute has evolved from an interim stage to a full-scale program. The institute consists of two separate Devisions: Telecommunications and Postal Affairs.

The long-range objectives of the telecommunications division are to provide for the improvement and expansion of telecommunications, broadcasting and industrial communications services of the member states through the development of a training center designed to meet their manpower needs. Its immediate objectives are to undertake studies, both quantitative and qualitative, of the manpower requirements and training program for junior and higher level technicians.

On the other hand, the Postal Division has as its aims and objectives the creation of an adequate staff, up to junior management level who would be able to improve the quality of Postal services of the member states as well as provide in-service vocational and related courses for junior and senior employees of sectorial agencies in member states.

The Institute, located in Freetown, is staffed by local and foreign instructors. Funding comes from the MRU and external donors. So far, external assistance has been given by the Netherlands' Government and the EEC.

MARINE TRAINING

The Union Marine Training Program is located in Marshall City, Liberia. It is scheduled to commence operation in the later part of this year. To achieve its objectives, the programme has been divided into three components, to be implemented in two phases. In Phase I, efforts will be concentrated on the one-year Ratings Training Program with 24 students for the Merchant Marine. These students will be trained to perform all deck duties, mechanical activities as well as catering services. The training of fisherman is also expected to be included in the program.

In Phase II, there will be a further expansion of the program to accommodate the training of junior officers for the Merchant Marine as well as for the Industrial Fisheries sector.

FUTURE

The Mano River Union, with its three member states, aims at broadening its commitment to the people it serves and at improving the quality of life through its socio-economic projects.

Emphasis is also being given to economic cooperation on a wider scale. At present, the MRU is cooperating very closely with ECOWAS, CEAO, WARDA and other inter-governmental agencies in West Africa. The MRU also has liaison with the Multinational Programming and Operational Center (MULPOC), an organ of the ECA (Economic Commission for Africa).

The Mano River Union can be seen, therefore, as a solid union with objectives comparable to other sub-regional organizations and a pivot behind the economic development and progress of its members. Given the laudable activities and achievements of the Mano River Union in less than a decade, there is no doubt that its model will go a long way to bring about the formulation of similar unions among member states of the OAU. As the Monrovia Group suggested, this is the real approach towards continental unity.

Congratulations!

PORTUGUESE MERCENARIES ALLEGEDLY FIGHTING ALONGSIDE S. AFRICANS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 9 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] A large number of Portuguese citizens recruited in Lisbon, among whom can be found former agents of the PIDE-DGS [former Portuguese secret police] and old commandos who defended colonialism and oppression, are participating in the aggression against the People's Republic of Angola on the side of the Pretoria racists, the newspaper DIARIO DE LISBOA stated in its Thursday edition.

According to the DIARIO DE LISBOA reporter, who interviewed a number of mercenaries now inactive, this is a network with international ramifications, which is aimed at destabilizing the former Portuguese colonies, and particularly the Republics of Angola and Mozambique.

Those interviewed added that they had left Portugal in recent years for South Africa via Madrid, Paris and Morocco. They also provided many details on their activities in Portugal and in the training camps in the Republic of South Africa.

According to this Portuguese newsman, the mercenaries' salaries vary between 700 and 3,000 dollars a month in accordance with the various specialties, some of those interviewed stated.

"The recruits first receive false passports prepared by lawyers in Lisbon and in the northern cities of Porto and Braga. They are then sent to training camps in La Coruna (Spain), Morocco or South Africa."

Moreover, the Spanish rightist organization "Forca Nova" also contributes to these operations, both in Madrid and in Vigo, Galacia and La Coruna, among other cities.

Training in South Africa, in which Swiss, French, Belgian and British mercenaries participate, lasts 3 months and includes marksmanship, a knowledge of explosives and special commando tactics. Subsequently, interviewees said, "they are integrated into joint patrols with South African soldiers."

COMPLAINT ABOUT OFFICIALS NOT GRANTING INFORMATION

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Oct 81 p 2

[Article by Varanda de Castro: "The Sources..."]

[Text] By decision of the editor-in-chief, the newsman was assigned the preparation of a "detailed report" on a determined sector of the capital, and, if possible, of the country that, as everyone knows, goes from Cabinda to Cunene. The report had to be ready within a week.

The newsman then prepared his work plan. He made up questionnaires, he consulted the telephone book and then dialed the number for the ministry in order to obtain information from "reliable sources."

"The comrade director is at a meeting. He will not be available for a while, but I shall give him the message as soon as he comes back," the secretary answered pleasantly, exhibiting a degree of competence rather uncommon in our country.

At her request, the newsman left his number. Things were apparently going well...

Some days later, the newsman called again. He had been expecting the call from the "comrade secretary," but nothing had happened. If he could not speak with the director himself, who might be busy, he would give the secretary the questionnaire with a half-dozen questions. She agreed.

The secretary, a person of her word--can the newsman indeed doubt she is?--gave the questionnaire to the director and a few days later, the latter received the newsman in his office.

"When would you like to prepare your report?" the director asked. "Today, even now," the newsman answered. "I am already a bit behind schedule."

"No, today I cannot. I don't know if you, comrade newsman, are aware of it, but we cannot grant any interviews without the knowledge of the comrade minister..."

"Have you not seen my questionnaire? There are only a half-dozen questions..."

"Be patient, please. Today it is impossible. The comrade minister is away. I must wait for him to come back. I don't want to have any problems..."

This is approximately how the dialogue went. The incident is real, it happened to an Angolan newsman. It happens every day to Angolan newsmen.

It is so commonplace that it does not need any comment, were it not for the time lost and the gasoline wasted in running back and forth to the ministry. What is even more serious, is the fact that the reportage could not be done and the reader could not be informed of what plans Ministry "X" or Ministry "Y" is formulating for the progress of this country or the improvement of the people's living conditions. Until when?...

STATE CARS MOST AFFECTED--Excessive speed, drunkenness, disregard for the most elementary rules of traffic and mishandling of cars--and especially of state vehicles--caused most of the accidents registered in the capital during the last 2 months. Most of the accidents that took palce in Luanda involved state vehicles. The total of accidents rose to 430, with 46 deaths and 244 wounded. However, there has been a considerable decrease in the number of accidents in recent days. This improvement is due to the intensified activity of the traffic police. It should also be noted that about 59 state vehicles were stolen in the last 2 months. [Excerpt] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Oct 81 p 2]

BRAZILIAN DELEGATION--A Brazilian delegation headed by Francisco de Lima e Silva, chief of the science and technology division of the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs has been in Luanda since Wednesday on a technical-scientific mission of nearly 6 days. Francisco de Lima stated that this first mission should not be seen only within the context of the North-South dialogue that must exist between developing countries, but is taking palce especially because the People's Republic of Angola is a sister country by reason of culture, geographical proximity and ethnic roots. He added that he hoped that this visit "would result in a rapprochement on a scientific, technical and cultural level." Other members of

NATION'S FOREIGN POLICY, DOMESTIC GOALS SET FORTH

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 469, 5 Sep 81 pp 1, 2

[Article by Christian Gilbert Bembert]

[Text] It will soon be 20 years since the Congolese affirmed the fundamental objectives of the policy they intended to pursue from then on: national independence and the formation of a society free of all forms of persecution and humiliation. Today nothing can deny our aspirations to independence and dignity. Of course our main orientations, our basic approach, have not always--far from it--been understood by everyone outside our borders, including our historical partners. Everyone knows what bad intentions were often attributed to our country. Our leaders have had to follow a policy based on good neighborliness in order to maintain the peaceful climate we needed.

Good neighborliness was one of the cornerstones of President Marien Ngouabi policy, who fought all his life to ensure peace on our borders, convinced as he was that it was impossible to tackle the work of national construction without peace on our borders. President Denis Sassou Nguesso has been following this same policy for a little over 2 and 1/2 years.

Everyone is familiar with the principles behind our policy of cooperation: the Congo is willing to cooperate with any country in the world wishing to cooperate with us on the basis of mutual respect, noninterference, equality and reciprocity of interests and benefits. We have proved our good faith, and we feel we have been understood by our partners.

Nevertheless we cannot claim that all is clear now and that our political position meets with the approval of the whole world.

It is therefore evident that the success of the goals set forth by the party and the government will depend to a large extent on the regional, and beyond that the world, situation. The Congo's internal stability is certainly not enough to reassure us. Although we have overcome internal contradictions, our country has no intention of underestimating the matter of the security of the Revolution. We have not forgotten that aggression directed against the Congo in the past, and attempts to overthrow its revolutionary regime, have often--almost always--come from abroad.

It is true that as regards our national defense policy, our country cannot be accused of expansionist or even subversive intrigue and maneuvers. Our neighbors know this, in all good faith, and foreign observers on our territory have proof of our sincerity.

A certain regional psychosis, born of belligerent statements made by imperialist international forces reminiscent of the past, and also born of certain situations inherited from our colonial history, has forced us to be always ready, not to attack anyone but to resist any aggression. The threat constituted for Africa by the racist regime of South Africa obliges us, whether we like it or not, to assess the question of our security pragmatically. It is in this context that we consider the victory of the left in the French presidential and parliamentary elections an event of historic significance. We have good reason to believe that the changes in France constitute a new factor in bilateral relations. It is hard to see how leftist France, which has always sustained the humble and defended the cause of the oppressed, and which is working today for the rehabilitation of human dignity, justice, and freedom, could fail to grasp the aspirations of the Congolese people to be in control of their own wealth and build a society freed from all forms of oppression. Our political and ideological convictions are different from those of rightist France. Nevertheless, nothing prevents us from cooperating on the basis of the principles of noninterference, mutual respect, and reciprocal benefits. Of course political and ideological similarities do not necessarily affect the foundations of our policy of cooperation. Nevertheless we firmly believe that a turning point has come in French-Congolese relations. The Socialist program and the statements made by François Mitterrand during the presidential election campaign justify this belief. We expect more than understanding from France: we expext true political and economic solidarity. Our relief is accompanied by a real feeling of hope.

Our foreign policy, in the context of relations with our neighbors on the one hand and with France on the other, is therefore imbued with our often-expressed wish to maintain and develop ties of friendship and cooperation in a climate of understanding and peace.

The facts which have contributed to an accentuation of our country's backwardness, and the way we are falling still further behind, are varied: repeated acts of aggression committed against our country in attempting to contain the revolutionary movement have forced us to pay more attention to our security and to the survival of the revolution; internal contradictions in the revolution have weakened its ranks and disillusioned the people, damping the people's spirit temporarily; internal political strife, internal warfare, have gained the upper hand over considerations of general interest. We must of course add to these factors the absence of a clear economic strategy, and also, unfortunately, a lack of conscientiousness, carelessness and wastefulness.

At the time when President Denis Sassou Nguesso took power in February 1979, the Congo was on the verge of bankruptcy; government employees had been waiting up to 2 months for their salaries. The 3rd special party congress, in the light of precise guidelines for an economic policy of which we can now see the outline, set forth five objectives:

a) Short term

1. Restore order in the government and democracy;
2. Restore national harmony;
3. Mend the country's finances;
4. Implement solutions likely to revive the state economic sector;

b) Medium term

5. Implement the 5-year plan of 1982-1986.

We know the balance sheet of the past 2 years. The first four goals have been reached essentially. This year the president of the Republic asked the Congolese to continue the effort begun in 1979.

Thus we find ourselves today preparing for the 1982-1986 5-year plan. We were all pleased to see the procedure followed to prepare this plan--a procedure which has nothing in common with the technocratic schemes usually followed in other parts of the world. On this occasion we have once again affirmed our firm attachment to the democracy of everyday life. This is one more proof, if one was needed, of the vitality of our institutions.

We should pay special attention to what is going to happen for the next 5 years. It is our future and that of future generations that are at stake. Our situation is a little like a game of cards in which we have been left with nothing but a joker, with which we shall try to recover our aces so as to cover our position and reinforce the strategy of our game. It is a situation inspiring both hope and anxiety.

The future plan belongs in the context of a central, dynamic, self-operating model. This is its purpose at least. This plan should begin to break with models from outside, and follow a policy conceived by the Congolese for the Congolese. The next plan should be able to set us on the path of self-sufficiency for food, and lay the foundations of true independence. At first sight we are faced with two choices: should we forge ahead rapidly or progress more gradually, with more moderation? But everything will really depend on the projects' contents and the way they are financed. What would be dangerous would be to race forward without seeing the nature of the projects, and, above all, losing sight of our fundamental goal: less dependence and greater autonomy. To lose sight of our fundamental goal is to run the risk of finding ourselves where we were in 1975-1978. We are still in time to avoid slipping into this error. This will be up to those in charge of making the decisions, the definitive choices. But certain precautions commend themselves to us already:

1. Among the possible steps we might take, there is one which must tend to increase (fairly drastically) our external debt. But debt is dependence, and the degree of indebtedness has repercussions on the degree of dependence.

2. Another possible step would be the exclusive use of internal resources, thanks to petroleum revenues in particular. But it is probable that most of our internal known or estimated resources would be absorbed in infrastucture projects whose profitability is not yet apparent at the present stage of our economy. Much insight and foresightedness will be needed here, undoubtedly. The moral is that we must find money elsewhere to sustain projects that are more profitable. But "elsewhere" means, a priori, resorting to an external debt.

It is not in our interest to aggravate the deficit of our balance of payments if we wish to set our course on the implementation of the economic options of the 3rd special congress.

The president of the Republic has already said that we cannot depend on petroleum revenues alone. So what is left? Wood is no longer what it used to be. Our agriculture remains to be developed. Our firms are in the process of being reorganized. There is still one solution, and that is my third observation.

3. If we opt for the first two hypotheses, we will run a great risk of slipping towards greater dependence, which would be accentuated in the case of a recession, which could come about in the last years of the 5-year plan. Because on the one hand, infrastructure projects are not necessarily profitable, and on the other, we would be incurring an external debt to finance supposedly profitable projects. This would be the logical outcome if the major part of the funds reserved for investment were to be spent on infrastructure projects.

There is one more chance to avoid imbalance. That chance lies in resorting to solutions which give us a double guarantee of not selling our independence, and setting our course towards a consolidation of that independence:

a)- Opt for more gradual development so as to avoid concentrating relatively unprofitable projects in a single strategic space;

b)- Stop the upward trend of the external debt by putting into practice, right now, a bolder savings policy directed at government salaried employees and the private sector. This savings policy must be accompanied by a policy of interest rates which can attract many citizens and also stimulate foreign investment.

c)- Decide on steps to encourage the development of small and medium-sized firms by giving them greater access to credit.

d)- Increase aid to agricultural cooperatives, in particular by facilitating access to small-scale equipment and by raising the prices of agricultural products, which should be brought to the level of world markets.

Agriculture is our health and our hope.

A people which imports its food is an easy prey. Food is now becoming a political weapon. To put one's fate, as regards food, in someone else's hands is to be exposed to the risk of starving at any moment. A hungry people cannot feel free. We understood that quickly when we set agriculture as the priority among our priorities. The reconquest of our territory must lead to a rehabilitation of working the land, by accentuating its worth, by creating structures that will ensure continuity, by improving rural districts, by perfecting agricultural techniques, by creating agricultural training centers, etc. The agricultural population is growing old, but young people's vocation for the land need only be revived, as was demonstrated during the chief of state's tour in the regions. By encouraging agriculture. We must prepare the next generation of farmers now, to guarantee this vital sector and the solidity of our independence.

e)- Readjust rising energy prices (water, electricity), especially for firms and services.

Once more, only an attitude of sacrifice and self-denial will enable us to attain the political goals we have set for ourselves. The part of the budget reserved for investment during the last 5 years is estimated at a total of 50 billion CFA francs. The experts predict a ten-fold increase for the next 5 years. But the 500 billion francs are on thin ice. Petroleum is capricious and destabilizing. It cannot be a guarantee for the future. Anything could happen anytime. Let us remember the past. We must therefore appeal to the patriotism and good sense of the Congolese for now. We must remain lucid at present. We must make our choices judiciously. Give priority to what is profitable. Not be excessively ambitious. Be moderate. Therefore, not incur an excessive foreign debt. Maintain our initiative so as to remain in control and make our own final decisions.

HEAD OF STATE RECEIVES CHAD JUSTICE MINISTER

AB211636 Brazzaville Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Yesterday afternoon, the head of state received in audience Delwa Kassire Koumakoye, the Chadian minister of justice and keeper of the seals. He is an emissary of the Chadian head of state, Goukouni Oueddei. After the audience, the Chadian statesman, who spoke to newsmen, revealed the purpose of his visit to the Congo.

[Begin recording] I have been sent by President Goukouni to his colleagues and brother, President Sassou Nguesso, within the framework of the fruitful cooperation between our two states and I held talks with him on the eventuality of sending the neutral forces to Chad.

[Question] What is the general situation in Chad presently and what is the position concerning the situation at the border with Sudan?

[Answer] We believe that the matter has been solved and that at the moment, there is no clash yet.

[Question] What about the issue of the refugees and the process of their repatriation?

[Answer] In fact, we believe we can solve this problem within the next few days.

[Question] Presently, there are clashes between the troops of the Foreign Minister [word indistinct] confirm our firm solidarity with [word indistinct] can you explain this contradiction?

[Answer] We believe this issue has been resolved. Already, the government has sent its forces to neutralize the adversaries. This issue has already been settled.

[Question] Sir, the Chadian diplomacy has been very active during these past few days, especially concerning the economic revival of the country. How do you see these steps?

[Answer] (?Even though our steps are criticized,) we believe that our appeals will be heard and that our friendly and brotherly countries will do everything to help us.

[Question] Mr Minister, general opinion is very pessimistic about the sending of the inter-African neutral forces to Chad. Does the Chadian Government believe in the sending of these troops?

[Answer] This is what we are getting worried about. It is the very purpose of our reviving the issue with the aim of finding the most appropriate solution to it, because as the days go by, things are changing.

[Question] You have thus certainly found satisfaction with Comrade Denis Sassou Nguesso?

[Answer] [Passage indistinct]

COT LEAVES BRAZZAVILLE--The last weekend was rich in events. We thus witnessed the new reorientation of the cooperation between France and the Congo. The sixth session of the French-Congolese Joint Commission, which took place in the Congolese capital and which ended yesterday, enabled both parties to rejoice over the successful development of their mutual cooperation and to agree to pursue it within the framework of the new objectives of Congo's 5-year development plan of 1982-86. The results of this French-Congolese meeting enabled France and the Congo to revive their relations in a spirit of friendship and confidence. In any case, French Cooperation Minister Jean-Pierre Cot, who left Brazzaville yesterday for Paris, expressed great satisfaction with the deep solidarity now uniting the French and the Congolese. [Begin recording] [Cot] [Passage indistinct] I think that the word solidarity is perhaps the one which best describes the relations between our two countries. There is solidarity in all fields. In the political field, I think that the new impetus given to democracy in France on 10 May largely corresponds with the situation in your country. There is also solidarity in economic and cultural development. I think this is the resurrection of our relations of cooperation. SLATE FOR LEADERSHIP OF MERGED PARTIES SUGGESTED

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 19 Sep 81 pp 5, 7

[Article by Moses Gyasi]

[Text]

WHEN the AFRC handed over power to a popularly elected civilian government about two years ago, a major uncompleted job of the Council was the consolidation of the various parties into two. The AFRC should have passed a decree immediately after the Presidential election to declare Ghana a two party state.

The political history of this country indicate that opinions have always been and will continue to be sharply divided on a pro-Nkrumah and pro-Busia lines. Any other division is artificial and is not bound to last for long. There could be a third party but it will continue to be no more than an ideal and pleasant idea with little or no political force.

It is therefore of great political significance that after two years of political disequilibrium, what the guns should have forced down our throat is being realised by consensus. It is a welcome decision and a source of goodwill for the country.

Right now all the minority parties, viz PFP, UNC, ACP, SDF and TFP have decided to bury their individual identities and form a single and new political party. The whole idea is that the present PNP administration has woefully failed to deliver the goods with the result that within the past two years we have been in a greater political wilderness never experienced before.

Mr J. H. Mensah, a frontline PFP politician stated categorically that although the PNP have the political power, the minority parties have the men to provide the necessary directives to salvage the image and the economy of this country.

There is no gainsaying the fact that most of the best brains in this country on either frontline members of the minority parties or sympathisers. If this country can pull together their resources, harness them and direct the resultant efforts to action. I believe that it will need only six months to show result.

Right now there is some form of polarisation in this country and the merger should take this into account in selecting its leadership. Only two criteria should be used — competence of the individual and the acceptability by the electorate.

Looking at the political map of the country, it can be stated without fear or favour that the Upper, Northern and Western Regions belong to the PNP while Brong Ahafo, Ashanti and Eastern Regions belong to the merger. Therefore any future political battle will be fought in the Central, Greater Accra and Volta Regions. This is very crucial.

In the Central Region, there are two political giants, these are the Vice President, Dr de Graft Johnson and Col Bernasko, leader of the ACP.

However, all things being equal, it is certain that Col Bernasko is likely to command more following in future elections than the Vice President.

The situations in Greater Accra and Volta Regions are more fluid. So far, there appears to be no political giants who can clearly sway the majority of the electorate. However, looking at the parliamentary performance, there is no doubt that Mr Odoi Sykes has made an impact and his immense popularity with the Bukom folks is a credit to him.

In the Volta Region we have a lot of big names who are only big by themselves but appear to have very little political support. What it means is that as at now, there is no clearly accepted political personality in the Volta Region who can be counted on to carry the votes either for the merger or the PNP. It means each individual giant must be assessed on his own merit.

It is my sincere wish that Mr Victor Owusu and Col Bernasko will step down and accept elderly statesmen positions of grand patrons in the merger for very good reason that Col Bernasko's popularity in the Central Region is unassailable. He is bound to carry with him the greater part of the region to any party he decides to throw his weightm But outside the region, he is an unknown quantity politically. Perhaps he commands some following in the Western Region. However taking him on his own, his chances of winning the Presidential race is minimal.

Mr Victor Owusu's greatest strength also lies in his greatest weakness. His forthrightness earns him enemies instead of winning friends. His political adroitness clashes with his political collegues. The plain truth is that whichever way you look at him, he is just like the proverbial albatross. To put him up as a presidential candidate and hope that Dr Limann's failure will sway people to vote for him will be taking a simplistic view of a complex problem. In the first place he will likely lose all the Volta Region votes.

Secondly, the PNP consists of the best political tacticians that this country has produced. They may quarrel among themselves but they definitely know which side of their bread is buttered. They can pull Dr Limann down and put up another person from the North. A presidential ticket should consist of two persons with similar political ideology. That is why the leader and the deputy should be chosen from the same political party. They must have wo.ked together for some time.

Right now the parties have accepted to sink their differences, forget about their present political camps and start afresh. Elections to political positions should be fought as if there is only one party Members must vote according to their conscience and every Tom Dick and Harry should be altered to contest for any post.

However cognisance must be taken of the present and future political map of the country. While Volta Region has no acclaimed political leader, the region can boast of a lot of competent ministerial and administrative personnel. Definite assurance should be given to the region of maximum utilization of the human resources if and when the merger comes to power.

The merger can carry the Greater Accra Region if an acceptable person is found and put up in high level in the political hierachy.

From the above analysis, I have no doubt that if the merger is to win the next election, then the political leadership should consist of the following:

- Grand Patrons or Fathers of the Party: Messrs Ofori-Atta, Victor Owusu, K..A. Gbedemahu Madjetey, Tolon Na and Dr Bilson.

Chairman — Dr Safo Adu, Gen. Secretary — Col Bernasko and National Treasurer — Dr Agama.

The National Organising Secretarier should comprise Kwaku Baah, Alhaji Ibrahim Mahama and Dr Obed Asamoah.

The Leader and Presidential Candidate should be J. H. Mensah and the Vice Presidential Candidate, Mr Odoi-Sykes.

It is the sincere wish of the writer that the merger should succeed for the good of this country or else we shall be in for one party dictatorship.

SPLINTER FROM MERGED PARTIES TO FORM NEW PARTY

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 23 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Breda Atta-Quayson]

[Text]

A NEW political party, a splinter group of the merged minority parties, is to be formed shortly.

The party will embrace people from the rank and file of the various political parties forming the merger.

Mr Martin Adane, Popular Front Party (PFP), Member of Parliament for Jaman who revealed this in Accra yesterday said members of the proposed party "are those who were neglected during negotiations for the merger."

The Member of Parliament was commenting on the recently announced withdrawal of the Action Congress Party (ACP) from the merger.

He said that membership of the new party would transcend "existing partisan interests" and would work towards bringing together "the youth and people with common ideas and political ideals."

Mr Adane stated that any serious politician would agree that the withdrawal of ACP would have serious repercussions on the merger.

He pointed out that the ACP's withdrawal had come as a result of "over ambition of some individuals, personality conflicts and dictatorial tendencies of some individuals or group of individuals" within the merger.

The MP feels that there must be an alternative government to the People's National Party (PNP) but regrets that this might not be possible because of the problems facing the merger.

He maintained that the various political parties went into the merger as separate entities and as such had group interests to pursue within the merger.

"Submerging the group and personal interests has become difficult and this makes the chances of success of the merger very slim indeed," Mr Adane remarked.

Meanwhile indications from political circles in the country reveal that some political giants within the PFP are solidly behind the formation of the new party.

As a result of this turn of events the country's political scene is likely to assume new dimensions.

PUBLIC FUNDS CUT-OFF TO MONEY-LOSING STATE ENTERPRISES

Announcement Made

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 16 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Nelson Duah]

[Text]

THE Limann Administration has abolished the granting of subventions to all state corporations for the payment of salaries and wages of their employees.

In addition, the Administration will not approve monies for any expenditure that has not been budgeted for.

These measures are aimed at reducing government expenditure and also eliminate deficit in the current budget.

Professor George Benneh, Minister of Finance and Economic Planning, said in Accra yesterday that the Administration had taken steps to ensure that state corporations work to pay their employees and also make profits.

The Minister revealed that as part of the measures to cut down expenditure, arrangements had been completed to issue identity cards to all government employees to eliminate "ghost" workers in the system.

Professor Benneh said government would enforce all recommendations contained in the Auditor-General's Report to the letter by punishing officers who misappropriate public funds.

The Minister said to cut down expenditure, the Public Works Department (PWD) will no longer be allowed to contract out the maintenance of government buildings to private contractors.

Maintenance of government buildings, according to Professor Benneh, will be undertaken by the Department itself to save money.

He largely blamed the country's present high rate of inflation on the high cost of food.

It is estimated that the cost of foodstuff accounted for about 60-70 per cent of the rate of inflation in the country. This has also contributed to the high cost of living.

Professor Benneh, therefore, called on all Ghanaians to work hard to fight inflation.

He noted that in order to fight inflation, there should be increased food production and an efficient marketing of foodstuffs to enable prices to go down.

To ensure the success of the government's agricultural programme, Professor Benneh said large sums of money had been voted for the agricultural sector and also to improve the country's feeder roads.

He said every effort was being made to bring in spare parts to rehabilitate broken down vehicles so as to facilitate the carting of foodstuffs from the farming villages to the buying centres.

The Minister further hinted that he had set up an inter-departmental committee under his chairmanship to see to the implementation of the budget proposals.

Asked about the implications of the amendment to the original budget proposals, the Minister said some of the amendments had had adverse effect on revenue expectations.

For instance, he said the cut in expenditure by Parliament was about ₵20 million.

Therefore, the loss in revenue as a result of the amendment of the original proposals was over ₵400 million which meant that there would be an increase in the original budget deficit.

He said government would intensify its efforts to collect tax and revenue and hinted that a field tax survey of self-employed persons has started in Accra and that very soon a "Pay Your Tax" campaign would be launched to educate the public on the need to pay taxes.

Measure Supported

[Editorial: "That is Right"]

[Text] THERE is no reason why state commercial and industrial outfits that have been fully and heavily capitalised out of public funds for several years now should still continue to rely on government subvention from year to year, even for the payment of salaries and other recurrent expenditure.

The ever increasing imbalance between government revenues and expenditure is largely contributed to by the simple fact that while government keeps pumping funds into state enterprises, it gets little or nothing in return for all that.

It has been our conviction that taxation of personal incomes and sales and purchase taxes have reached such high levels enough as to merit to be left alone and that government should seek avenues of making its capital investments yield direct incomes to boost revenue.

So, in our comment of March 11, 1981 on the parliamentary approval of increases in rates for water and electricity services we expressed concern over why state corporations cannot be made to borrow from the banks for their operations so that when they will have improved their services with borrowed funds, the consumer would also be prepared to pay extra for the improved service, so that the Corporations would, in turn, have enough resources to repay their loans.

Most state enterprises have been so pampered that they always expect 'cheap' resources before they promise improved services which, invariably, are never rendered. These resources have always either been provided by government directly or have been extracted out of the poor consumer by 'fraudulent' legislative measures.

So, like the typical Akan adage "Things that are acquired rather easily are dissipated equally easily" and this explains why most state corporations so whittle public funds without the slightest regard for caution. In this consideration, we can hardly exempt any single state corporation.

We think the time has come to instil a lot more financial discipline in all public boards, corporations and enterprises to make them economically viable and that is why we agree completely with the Minister of Finance's directive to abolish the granting of subventions to all state corporations for the payment of wages and salaries.

We would go further to recommend that even for capital expenditure, state enterprises should be made to resort to bank borrowing instead of relying on subventions, EXCEPT IN VERY RARE CASES. And even where government has to provide a guarantee cover for such loans, the guarantee should not be automatic and that state enterprises should have proved their financial credibility before any such guarantee is granted.

In short, we are trying to recommend that henceforth no state commercial or industrial outfit should be pampered anymore and they should be left alone to wander in the wilderness of industry and commerce just as the private sector is doing, because enough resources have been pumped into them that they should all, by now, be yielding dividends to government.
